"Among the noteworthy features of New York, in 1768, are its legal holidays . . . It is interesting to note that the custom-house and public offices are closed by direction of the British authorities on New Year's Day, the Queen's birthday, anniversary of King Charles' martyrdom, Shrove Tuesday, Ash Wednesday, Lady Day, Good Friday, Easter Monday and Tuesday, Ascension Day, St. George's Day, King Charles' Restoration, the King's birthday, Whitsund Monday and Tuesday, Prince of Wales' birthday, King George 1st and 2d landed in Great Britain, Coronation Day, All Saints, Gunpowder Plot, Christmas Day, and three Christmas holidays following. Added to these are the provincial days—General Fast, Thanksgiving, General Election, and Commencement of the College—twenty-seven holidays in one year!"—Ibid., XXIV: 26. After British rule ended there was an opportunity to begin all over again in holiday observance, and for some time the only ones celebrated were "New Year's," "St. George's Day," "Christmas, Independence Day," "Evacuation Day" (the British troops left New York Nov. 25, 1783, p. 7), and " Election Day." In this year, the Scotch Presbyterians replaced their wooden building (see 1756), on the south side of Cedar between Broadway and Greenwich. This edifice was 100 feet long and 55 ft. wide. During the Revolution it was occupied by Hessian troops, and these mercenaries greatly damaged the edifice. On Nov. 10, 1783, an appeal was made for funds with which to repair the broken down sanctuary. In answer to this appeal, L960.75 were subscribed, and the building was repaired. In 1794, the gallery was lighted; in 1801, six fire-buckets were provided; and in the same year it was agreed "that the church be whitewashed and well cleansed." It contained a pew for the governor, and a "gallery for persons of color." On Oct. 13, 1836, the building was sold for $90,510. The site is now occupied by the Equitable Life Assurance building.—Washington, Our Jubilee. The 19th Anniversary of the Scotch Presbyterian Church, New York 1756-1806, 14-45; Smith, N. Y. City in 1789, 153-54; Disoyway, Earliest Churches in N. Y., 164. The congregation moved from Cedar St. in 1836 (p. 7)."—The Scotch Presbyterians opine the Theatre Committee lately ejected Jan. on the Green (see Feb. 19 and 25, 1766). The Rev. Mr. Rogers conducted the worship and preached the sermon. There was a large audience; and, "by the Solemnity of the Occasion and the Address of the Preacher, the whole Assembly seemed to be impressed with a Mixture of Seriousness, Gratitude and Joy, more easily conceived than expressed, and from the success of the operation of a House to the Worship of Almighty God."—"N. Y. Post-Boy, Jan. 4, 1768; N. Y. Jour., Dec. 31, 1767. For its final demolition, see May 9, 1857. A successor celebration of the Brick Church was held Jan. 6 and 10, 1918. See 23d Ann. Rep., Am. Scenic & Hist. Prec. Soc. (1918), 575-606.
The poor of New York for manufactures is publishing a series of maps to promote frugality, industry, and employing our tradesmen and necessitous poor [see Dec. 14, 1767], will make their report on Monday evening next the 25th instant, at six o'clock, at Bolton and Sigel's. The inhabitants are requested to attend, in order to remove the confusion of the same. It is proposed to hold a full meeting, that the intentions of the town may be well known, on matters of such great importance to the community.”—N. Y. Jour., Jan. 21, 1768. On account of bad weather the meeting did not occur until Feb. 2 (q.v.).—Ibid., Jan. 28, 1768.

Ship bread bakers complain that the corn for making of ship bread, brought to this city for sale, is generally coarse and of a very bad quality, so that the bread baked therefrom, will not fetch near the same price at foreign markets, as the ship bread of the other colonies doth. They ask for the passage of a law to regulate the inspection of corn similar to that for inspecting floor.-Assem. Jour., (1767-7), 50. See Feb. 6.

Calden writes to the Earl of Shelburne: “I gave your Lordship an account of the extraordinary Proceedings of the Judges of the Supreme Court of Judicature in this Province, in a Pamphlet which was published in England last Spring, in my vindication, as to the Pennsylvania's Practice, and also the Ministry of Parliament, for their information; and to clear my character from the malicious aspersions, which I was informed had been industriously propagated there. This Pamphlet was reprinted in this Place [see 1767] without my privity, or of any of my friends, as I am now well assured. It is certain the Sentiments of disinterested people, have alread’ly greatly with regard to my conduct, since the publishing of the Pamphlet here. The notorious truth of the Facts is every Day mentioned by many People.”—N. Y. Col. Dec., VIII: 25-45. On April 25, he sent Hillsborough an account of this matter.—Ibid., VII: 60-65.

A concert is given at Bruns’s “Long Room” for the benefit of poor debtors in goal.—N. Y. Merc., Jan. 11, 1768. This was at the City Tavern, the present 115 Broadway.

A survey and report on a new road, later called Art St. (now Astor Place), leading from Bowery Lane through the hill toward Greenwich, was made by Thomas Johnson in 1761. The report goes into measures of the most sober and respectable inhabitants and the wholesome admonitions you have published [see Dec. 24, 1767]; what an enormous tax do we burthen ourselves with? it is computed at least £300 a week. . . . Some pretend that good moral instructions are to be learned at a play.—I wish they would give us a list of these plays, for our actors don’t seem to hit upon them. . . . Jan. 1 Shall conclude with summing up some of the evils that this nuisance is productive of amongst us.—Cash for a play ticket.—3d. Expenses in dressing,—3d. The modest ear is familiarized to obscene discourse.—4th. Promotes a taste for dissipation, or gadding, already too prevalent among the young folks.—5th. It is a rendezvous for many people to adjourn to the tavern.—6th. The prints, with all those printed and circulared expenses, is turned from honest table purposes.”—N. Y. Jour., Jan. 28, 1768. In spite of this opposition to theatrical performances, the American Company played in New York from Dec. 7, 1767 (q.v.) until June 2, 1768. They returned in 1769, being here from Jan. 16 to June 29.—Seillier, History of Am. Theater, I: 249-50. After June 29, 1769, the John Street Theatre was closed until April 12, 1773 (see April 12, 1773). A sale at public venue is announced to be held on this day at the Merchants Coffee House of the noted Tavern, bearing the signs of the Free-Mason’s Arrows, on the East Side of the Broadway, in the Great Square. The House has 12 Fire-places, two Dancing Rooms, and eight other good Rooms, with every Conveniency for the Reception of Company. It was formerly kept by Samuel Francis, and since by the Subscriber, and has rented for Eighty Pounds per annum, besides Taxes. Any Person inclining to purchase at private Sale, may, in the morning, inquire of John Jones.”—N. Y. Merc., Jan. 11, 1768. By March 21, 1768 (q.v.), Roger Morris had acquired the property.

An advertisement offers to let the “House wherein John Marshall now lives, opposite the late Mr. Benson’s Brew-House: It is well calculated for a Museum; or any similar Purposes.”—N. Y. Merc., Jan. 25, 1768. Benson's Brewery was on Pearl St. at Franklin St., and is of note, because here, in 1787, Gaine’s Plan, depicting the city in 1724–25 (Pl. 32–3, Vol. 1). This is probably the tavern of which Verdecia Elysworth was once proprietor (see June 6, 1765). John Bridgewater, whose claim to recognition was evidently based on the fact that he was “Lately married to the Widow Branson,” announced on June 6, 1768, that he had “removed from Cruger’s Wharf, to the House wherein John Marshall lately lived, almost opposite Mr. Benson’s Brewery, where he keeps a House of Entertainment.”—*N. A news report states that one John Clayton Morris, convicted last week of sheep stealing, “had the benefit of the clergy granted him; was burnt in the hand, and discharged.”—N. Y. Merc., Jan. 25, 1768.

The provincial council receives the king’s order in council dismissing the petition of the minister, etc., of the Presbyterian Church for a charter of incorporation.—Col. Cons. Min., 475.

A writer in the several Minns. at this time, says: “The public are perpetually clamouring, that we can’t justly expect to come into the Use of Cloths of our own Manufacture till they come to be cheaper than imported,” gives this account of a “Web of Homespun”: “Sometime ago I bought 30 lb Sheep’s Wool, and paid for it 1/6 per lb which amounted to £2 5 0 Two lb of Indigo to die it. £1 6 8 For dying and spinning 24. per lb £3 0 0 For Weaving, 4d. per Yard, 50 Yards Elliwde, £1 0 0 Clothier’s Bill for Fulling, Shearing and Pressing £1 0 0 Total £8 1 0 So that I have 20 Yards of Cloth, three-quarters wide, at 8s. 1d. per Yard. It is equal in Beauty to Broad-Cloth of 16s. twice as wide; and will wear, at least, twice as long.”—N. Y. Jour., Jan. 28, 1769.

Baron de Kalb arrives in New York. He had been depatured by the Duc de Choiseul, the French premier, to report on the condition of affairs in America, as well as in Holland and England. His observations were general rather than local, and are presented in a letter written from New York, on Feb. 24.—Vincenzo de Colleveille, Les Minns. Secrétaires du General-Major Baron de Kalb (Paris, 1885), 68–77. Subsequently, De Kalb joined Washington’s forces and was killed in the battle of Camden, in 1780.

"At a full Meeting of the Inhabitants of this City, the Report of the Committee appointed [see Jan. 21] to consider the means for encouraging our Manufactures and Trade, was delivered, approved of, and Directions given for carrying the same into execution."—N. Y. Jour., Feb. 4, 1768. There is preserved in the N. Y. Pub. Library a broadside, bearing no date, but undoubtedly the report of this committee. It was not of the encouragement of home manufactures, restriction of imports, and the diminish of expensive fabrics. The committee also thinks that "the Importation of Negro Slaves, hath on many Accounts been injurious; and in particular, that it has been a great Means of preventing the better Settlement and Improvement of the Country, and those improvements for the Future to be discouraged." A draft of a subscription-roll, containing the substance of the report, is submitted for the signatures of the inhabitants. Those who sign this "promise and engage with each other, That we will give all reasonable Encouragement to the Use and Consumption of the Linen manufactured in this City; That we will not after the First day of June next, buy any of the following Articles imported from Abroad; (to wit,) Boots and Shoes, Women and Children's Stays, Men's Gloves, dress'd Deer Skins in any Form, Iron Spades, Sifters, Shovels, Hoes, Axes, Malt Liquors, Cider, Cheese, Wheel-Carriages, Saddles, Bridles and Harnesses; Gold or Silver, Silk Velvets, Cordage, Deck Nails, Iron Pots, Glue, Starch, Muffins, Tippets, Beaver or Castor Hats, Chairs, Tables or any Kind of Cabinet-Ware, or Apparel ready made, nor any Broadcloth of above the Price of Twenty-five Shillings Currency per Yard."—And that we will lay an additional Custom or Duty of making Mourning and giving Scars and Gloves, (except to the Clergy,) and hot Wine, at the Funeral of Friends and Relations.

4 A contributor to the Journal writes: "As in these Times of general Difficulty and Distress, it is the Duty of each Individual to love his Country, to render to the Public Service and as the Way of a circulating Medium among us is a general Compost, and several Schemes have been proposed to remedy the Evil, and none that I know of yet fully concluded upon, I desire you will in your next Paper insert the following.

"Let the Corporation have £10000 Pounds in Notes of Hand, issued on the Credit of the Corporation from £l. to £10. and let the same out at Interest for 20 Years, at 5 per Cent. The Person who lends money to the Corporation is to have a Share by Proportion for the whole Time, when the Notes will be all sunk and the Interest in Specie will be £52500 0 0 . . . which will be a noble Fund to help out with the heavy Expenditure the Corporation is yearly obliged to stand under, and a Part of it may be used to encourage the People in manufacturing, etc."—N. Y. Jour., Feb. 4, 1768.

5 The legislature passes an act to provide for the payment of £1000 for the equestrian statue of George III, £500 for the statue of Pitt, and £100 for the piece of plate for Sargent (see June 30, 1766). The preamble states that Robert Charles, the agent of the province, had been directed to cause the statues and piece of plate to be made as soon as possible.—Col. Laws N. Y., IV: 1002-3.

6 The statutes passed an act to provide for the payment of £10000 for the equestrian statue of George III, £500 for the statue of Pitt, and £100 for the piece of plate for Sargent (see June 30, 1766). 7 Writing to Lord Barrington, English war secretary, Gov. Bernard of Massachusetts draws a comparison between his province and that of New York, as to difficulty of administration. He says that governors in both places are "liable to be harass'd by the spirit of Jealousy and Opposition to Government which prevails in both & has for some Time past been whetting itself upon each other. But there is this Material Difference between the two Prov: that Subject in both is Inhabitants and Ability, in Massachusetts it works only with Men of Middling or low Rank; in the Latter the Gov't has the generality of respectable Men on his Side; in the former they are more generally against Government. Without entering into more particulars, It appears to me that the Administration of N York is more difficult."—Charles writes to Governor: "Some James Russell, Correspondence, in Harvard Hist. Studies, XVII: 42.

11 A circular letter, written by Samuel Adams, is sent to the various colonies by the house of representatives. The members of the house have considered "the great difficulties that must accrue to themselves and their constituents, by the operation of the several acts of parliament imposing duties and taxes on the American colonies," and as they feel that "the representations of the several assemblies, upon this question, to associate with each other," they hope that the letter will be thought of "in no other light than as expressing a disposition freely to communicate their mind to a Sister Colony, upon a common concern." The letter states that the house has drawn up petitions to the king and his ministers setting forth their allegiance to Great Britain, but insisting "that it is an essential unalterable right in nature . . . that a man hath honestly acquired, is absolutely his own, which he may freely give, but cannot be taken from him without his Consent . . . That the acts . . . imposing duties on the people of this province, with the sole and express purpose of raising a Loan, are, in effect, a violation of the natural and constitutional rights; because, as they are not represented in the British parliament, his Majesty's commons in Britain, by those acts, grant their property without their consent." The agent of the colony has been instructed to lay before the ministry a number of other grievances of the Massachusetts people. The letter concludes with "a demand that the American subjects, will meet with their Royal and favorable acceptance."—Boston Gov., March 12, 1768. For the New York assembly's answer, see Dec. 31.

12 "If Marshalek one of the City's Surveyors, Returned a plan of two Roads, which he had made by order of a Committee of this board Leading from the Bowery Lane to the Hill or Saub Bank toward Owingsay" (Greenwich). The common council chooses "the wildest of the said two Roads," and orders that the clerk of this board "Give notice to those persons who have Lands Coniguous thereto, to Shew Cause on Monday next (if any they have) at the Common Council Chamber in the City Hall of this City, why the same should not be Recorded, and to Remain as a publick Road for ever."—M. C. C. (IV), VIII: 101. On this contrary having been shown, it was ordered "that the same be Accordingly Recorded a publick Road." The plan, filed with the report of the committee, shows that the road "Runs from the old House fronting the Bowery Lane, North Seventy three degrees & thirty minutes, west Six Chains and Eighty five Links, thence north Sixty four degrees and forty five minutes, west twenty two Chains and thirty Lines to the Brook Called by the Indian name, Minnetta Water."—Ibid. VII: 104-5. This was the Sand Hill Road (see Vol. II, p. 157, and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1001), the continuation of which was the "Road to the Obelisk."—See June 16, 1707. On "The Monument Plan" of 1766 (see under Feb. 8, 1766), this road appears as the "Road to the Obelisk." A later name was "The Monument Lane" (Pl. 41, Vol. I). See 1761. Cf. The Wolfe Monument at New York," in 19th Ann. Rep. Am. Scien. and Hist. Soc. (1913), 121-26, where the latter name (Monument Lane) is mentioned first, and the existence of a dedication of "The Montresor Plan" had been forgotten, apparently. For a topographical description of the Sand Hill section of the city, see June 1, 1691, and July 1, 1767. The present Astor Place, formerly known as Art Street (see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 925), was the eastern end of this old road, which was laid out in Dutch times, and led from Gov. Stuyvesant's Bowery to Sapokanican (afterwards called Greenwich Village). It was apparently some alteration in this line that was made at this time.—Man. Coun. Com. (1865), 636-50. See June 1, 1844. The road had been re-surveyed once before.—See June 16, 1767.

Philipse, Peter Jay, and Frederick van Cortlandt, who are proprietors, of all the houses to the eastward of the Exchange, as far as the Corporation Pier (see March 7, 1763), being desirous of improving the water lots fronting their houses, ask for grants of these lots on the same terms as those recently allowed to the proprietors of Hunter's Key.—From the original petition (MS.), in city clerk's record-room. See Jan. 29, 1767.

The common council authorize the payment to Thomas Schuyler, consor of the sum of £7,186 6d. "for the burial of 200 bodies" between Jan. 1, 1764, and Jan. 1, 1765.—M. C. C., VII: 103.

Fifteen acres of land in the township of Harlem, adjoining the East River, are offered for sale, also 8 acres of good wood land, "lying above the Blue-Bell, adjoining the King's road, and north river, and bounded on the south side by the farm of Adolphus Steurer, and on the north side by that of John Nagle."—N. Y. Merc., Feb. 15, 1768.

The following card appears: "Jack Bowling and Tom Hatchway send their Service (dam'd Compliments) to the Freeholders and Freemen of the City of New York, and beg they would in order to try how the Land lies, take an Observation, and they will find..."

1d. That the good people of this City are supported by Trade and the Merchants.

2d. That the Lawyers are supported by the People.

The decision here given will plainly point out the Course they must take in their pursuit of their Business.—From an original in the N. Y. Pub. Library. See Feb. 29.

The consistory of the Dutch Church resolves "that the roof of the Third Church should be laid with tile, as there is now a good opportunity to obtain them."—Eccles. Rec., VI: 411. See also Nov. 9, 1767.

The common council adopts a plan or survey by Francis Maseszchak, city surveyor, for a road to run "from the old House fronting the Bowery Lane, North Seventy degrees three minutes & thirty minutes, west Six Chains and Eighty five Links, thence north Sixty four degrees one minute and thirty eight seconds, west twenty two Chains and Thirty links to the Brook Called by the Indian name, Minnett Water."—M. C. C., VII: 104-5. This was the Sand Hill Road and existed for many years before this date, lying in about the same general direction, following an early Indian trail. The old house mentioned in the minutes as "Rebecca's House" was a tavern (see Landmark Ref. Key, III: 986); and from there (the present intersection of Astor Pl. and Fourth Ave.) this road ran to the Minetta Brook, the course of which is shown on Ratter's Map (Pl. 41, Vol. 1), being there called Bestaver's Rivulet, crossing the stream on a bridge. The road on the other side of the bridge is designated by Ratter as Monument Lane; it ran to the obelisk erected on the Delancey property to the memory of General Wolle and others, which stood near what is now the north-west corner of Eighth Ave. and West 14th St. (see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 964).

A public venue is advertised to take place on this day of the "New York County, from Feb. 26, 1768, to be held at the Broad Street and South Church Yard, opposite to St. Paul's Chapel."—N. Y. Merc., Feb. 1, 1768. Evidently no sale was made at this time, or if sold, Kerby still continued in occupation, for, on March 12, 1770, the house, still in his possession, was again advertised for sale. It was described as "very convenient for a Shop, or Tavern-keeper, and has been occupied as such many Years."—Ibid., March 12, 1770. This was presumably the old Dower tavern on the south-east corner of Spring Garden.—See Feb. 6, 1758.

In a letter to Gov. Moore, the Earl of Hillsborough says: "His Majesty trusted that the ill consequence flowing from a want of Respect, Submission, and Authority, in the Civil Magistrate, so evidently manifested during the late Disorders on account of the Stamp Act, would have induced all men of Rank & Consideration in the Colony to co-operate with you in every Measure that could possibly tend to secure the Peace, and promote the Happiness of the Colonists; but the weakness and impotence of the Government, strength and integrity of which alone it can be supported and therefore it was a great concern to His Majesty to find... that you had failed in your Expectation of Assistance in this great work from the better sort of People, and more so that their Backwardness should proceed from Considerations of Trade and Interest, rather than from any Enmity to you, which they hold in the Community, to make it's welfare & happiness the objects of their Care & Attention... His Majesty trusts that the flagitious & inflammatory Publications inserted in printed News-Papers, with the awed design to keep up those Animosity & Divisions between the Mother Country & it's Colonies, which have operated so prejudicially to both, will be treated, by all wise and sober People, with the contempt they deserve, which will contrive the most effectually to the Distinction of the Authors...."—N. Y. Col. Doc., VIII: 10-11.

At this time, a broadside, addressed "To the Freeholders and Freemen of the City and County of New York," and signed "Philanthropus," is published as a supplement to the Journal. The author urges that the election of lawyers to the assembly, as well as the sale of the State, but to divide the Gain of the industrious Merchant and Mechanick if possible among themselves; and to rise from the Ruin, and Distresses of the rest of the Community; by exerting from them... the Price of their Labour, Sweat and Toil." On the reverse appears an address "To the Freeholders and Freemen of the City of New York." This is dated "New Jersey, Feb. 19, 1768," and signed "William Johannes Voo Dore Manudus." Manudus tells the New Yorkers that he has heard "that a Drama-shop is opened in your City, and that the Freeholders and Freemen of New-York assemble there to sell their Votes for a Drama." He assails this practice and condemns the behavour of the lawgivers and their friends. He states the inhabitants not to be "cajoled out of your Senses by a seeming friendly Shake by the Hand, a courteously Bow, or a decoying Look," but to vote "like Men of Firmness and Honour."—From an original in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

A card, dated from "Tradesman's Hall," is issued, reading: "Mr. Axe and Mr. Hammer being solicited by a Number of their Brother Freeholders and Freemen of the City of New-York, to return their hearty Thanks to their good Friends, Mr. Hatchway and Mr. Bowline... and to send more than usual quantities of Leather-Arons (a very respectable Body) are clearly of their Opinion, That it's Trade, and not Law supports our Families... So that with many Thanks for your sensible good Care—we all say, as you say,—No Lawyer in the Assembly."—From an original in the N. Y. Pub. Library. See Jan. 14, 1769.

Wanted, by a Society of Gentlemen in the City of New-York from a to 500 Yards of American made Broad Cloth, of blue, grey, and brown Colours, with lining if possible, for the same. Any Person that will engage for the like Quantity, will meet with a Market for it, by applying to H. Gaines, if at a reasonable Price, and proper care will be given to it for the Manufacturer."—N. Y. Merc., Feb. 9, 1768.

The "King's stores" are referred to in an advertisement for the sale of a house and lots "opposite the King's stores, on the North River side, between Leary's street and Batteau-street."—N. Y. Merc., Feb. 26, 1768. Ground and buildings, not to be sold separately or as lease, are shown between Dey and Cortlandt Sts. Batteau St. was Dey St. (Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 992); and "Leary's-street" was probably Cortlandt St.

A broadside entitled "The Voter's New Catchem" is issued. Mar. It is directed against New York lawyers in general (see Feb. 15), and against the lawyer candidate for representative (Scot) in particular. The series of questions and answers aims to prove that the lawyers have always opposed the colonists' struggle against Great Britain, and that they have never been in sympathy with the measures taken against the Stamp Act and other oppressive laws. The broadside argues that a lawyer should not be elected as a representative, because "for the same Person to be both a Maker and Interpreter of the Law, gives him too much Influence. And because in framing the Laws he would be too apt to have an Eye to the Advantage of his own Practice."—From an original in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

The common council agrees to make extensive grants of the water lots at the prominent East River locality called Hunter's Key, between Wall St. and Old Slip (see May 22, 1761), and orders that the clerk prepare drafts to the several petitioners.—M. C. C., VII: 106. On Aug. 11, it is the council's approval that all grants under the seal of this Corporation and witnessed by the Mayor and Senior Alderman present in Common Council. The grant of a water lot to Jacob Salt, the draft of which had been submitted on June 28, was the first one made under this ordinance.—Ibid., VII: 116.

See also the MS. of the case in regard to the rights and title to Hunter’s Key, originally given by letters patent to George I, on March 25, in the fourth year of his reign; it shows the extent of the grant and history of the case and opinion in 1768.—Filed with N. Y. MSS., 1761-1800, in N. Y. Hist. Soc.

5 Gov. Moore writes to the Earl of Shelburne concerning a claim made by the commander-in-chief of the army to superiority over the governors in America on all occasions. He adds that the council has decided that for the civil power to be subordinate to the military would be contrary to the British constitution.

In justification of this decision, the governor says, "in many Instances the minds of the people here would be so much affected with a Claim of this kind as to make them lose all that respect now shew’d to His Majesty’s Civil Governor here." He then describes the ceremony that is customary on the king’s birthday [see, for example, June 4, 1759], and adds: "A ceremony of this kind ... would draw at the same time a very feeble strength from the Council’s support."

"-N. Y. Col. Doc., VIII: 20-21. On Aug. 10, Moore wrote again on this subject.—Ibid., VIII: 97-99. Hillsborough, on Oct. 12, answered: "the subject of the Disputes between yourself and General Gage, concerning Rank and Precedence is under Consideration, and I trust that such Orders will be given on that subject as may be equally satisfactory to both in the mean time I am commanded by His Majesty to desire you will continue to act with the same spirit of Prudence and Moderation by which your conduct upon this occasion appears to have been hitherto governed, & which His Majesty does very much approve."—Ibid., VIII: 191. No further record appears therefore, the presumption is that the claim of Gen. Gage was not sustained.

The Incorporation of Four Towns, as announced appears to have expressed the intention that a convenient dwelling-house should be erected for the residence of the rector. This "has not hitherto been done." With a desire to comply with the charter, and believing that such building would "greatly redound to the Credit and Honour of the said Corporation," the vestry orders "that the present Charity School House be altered and made into a neat and convenient Dwelling House, and set apart for the use of the Church and his Successors for ever, free from the payment of any rent for the same And that a New School House be erected on Some other part of the Lands belonging to this Corporation."—Trin. 28 In this and subsequent issues of the Post-Boy, articles appear concerning the Church of England in the colonies, which American, the English, and the British wanted to be set up. According to this destination, I am in principle opposed to titles, bishops, baronies, and a thousand other powers and peculiarities, occasioned by the liberality of popes and princes, and the superstition of the vulgar. With the bishops we shall naturally have the introduction or establishment of spiritual or ecclesiastical courts. The bishop’s right to open his court being ... secured by the common law, and that being universally acknowledged to be the law of the colonies, his lordship will find no difficulty, after his diocese is established, to exact a tribunal, for good reasons long disregustful to the people of England; and which Americans dread to almost the same degree of horror which the Pope’s laws have inspired and the inquisition it sets up."—N. Y. Post-Boy, March 28, April 4 et seq.

James Durand, "having from his infancy endeavoured to qualify himself in the art of historical painting, humbly hopes for that encouragement which the Majesty of this City and Province, that so elegant and entertaining an art has always obtained from people of the most improved minds and best taste and judgment, in all polite nations of every age. And tho' he is sensible that to excel, (in this branch of painting especially) requires a universal and accurate knowledge than he can pretend to, in geometry, geography, perspective, anatomy, expression of the passions, antient and modern history, &c. yet he hopes, from the good nature and indulgence of the gentleman and ladies who employ him, that his humble attempts, in which his best endeavors will, may contribute to the truth, and give satisfaction; and he proposes to work at as cheap rates as any person in America..." his office is "near the city-hall, broad-street."—N. 10. John Hancock's ship "Liberty" is seized at Boston by the customs officers and stationed "under the Guns" of the "Romney manned-war." This conduct angers the populace and, in the dispute which follows, the collector, the comptroller of the customs, and the collector's son are "roughly used, and pelting with Stones." Later, "a mix'd Multitude" broke some of the windows of the comptroller's house, attacked the inspector of exports and imports, and, burning "to ashes" a large pleasure-boat belonging to the collector.—N. In answer to Hillsborough's letter of April 21 (p. 5), Gov. Moore says: "The circular letter wrote by the Speaker of the Massachusetts's Assembly . . . did not arrive here before an end was put to the Act. See columns above. It is impossible for me to say at present what would have been the effect, if the letter had been received during the Session, but . . . I do not imagine this Province would have shew'd that forwardness which many others have done on this occasion.

"All those who have the Welfare of the Country at Heart, are desired seriously to consider the Importance of a Paper Manufactory to this Government, and how much Good they may do it, by preserving the Linen Rags, particularly the fine ones . . . by manufacturing of it here, Numbers of poor People are daily employd & the Money still remains in a circulating State." People who desire paper are to send their orders to John Van Oueneck, Rector of Trm. Church, July 14, 1768. In 1776, the proprietor of the Post-Boy complained of the stamp duty, saying that the "Philadelphians have greatly the advantage of us, they have paper-mills among them" (see N. Y. Post-Boy, Oct. 4, 1776).

The paper mill above established, if the first, must have supplied a real need in New-You of the time.

Abraham van Dyck advertises that a leopard and several other animals may be seen at his house "in the Broad Way," near St. Paul's Church.—N. Y. Merc., Aug. 1, 1768. This may have been Van Denberg's house, or one near it. On May 1 of this same year, Israel Waters advertised that he had taken over Van Denberg's stable.—Ibid., May 2, 1768. Garret van Denberg, probably a son of Adam van Denberg, was exhibiting, in the spring of 1769, at this house, "an Ox that cost £90 the Coldwater."—Ibid., March 5, 1769. Van Dyck continued to keep tavern, probably in the same place, as late as 1775, when the Military Club met here. See June 2, 1775. Cornelius, another member of the Van Den family, was at this time proprietor of the Bull's Head in the Ferry.

It is ordered by the common council "for the future that all Grants Issued by this board for Lands be under the seal of this Corporation, and witnessed by the Mayor and Senior Alderman present in Common Council." It is shown without name, as early as 1767, on the "Ratter Map" (Pl. 41, Vol. I), but finished only as far as the Murray farm. It was evidently continued, in 1768 (as the above cited entries would indicate), about as far south as the present 31st St. Payment was ordered by the common council, on Oct. 12. "For Carpenters work and plank found for the Bridge that Leads across Inlawbergh."—Ibid., VII: 129. This bridge is shown on A. Pl. 9-10, Vol. III, also on the "Map of the Common Lands," surveyed by Ludlam, to be found in Spelman and Brunn's maps (1881), 156. It spanned the western outlet of Sun Fish Pond near the present corner of Fourth Ave. and 31st St.—See Pl. 176, Vol. III, and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1005, under "Middle Road."

3. We further agree, not to import any kind of Merchandise from Holland, the streets very much crowded with these, nor by any other Way whatever, more than what we have already ordered (except Tiles and Bricks.)"

4. "We also promise to countermand all Orders given from Great-Britain, on or since the 16th Inst. by the first Conveyance, ordering those Goods not to be sent unless the forementioned Duties are taken off.

"V. "Reflecting on the salutary measures entered into by the merchants in Boston, and this city, to restrict the importation of goods from Great-Britain, until the acts of Parliament laying duties on paper, glass, &c. were repealed; and being animated with the spirit of liberty," agree to the following resolutions:

First, That we do not, ourselves, purchase . . . any goods . . . imported from Europe, by any merchant, directly or indirectly, contrary to the true intent and meaning of an agreement of the merchants of this city; on the 27th of August last [p. v.]

Secondly, That we will not . . . buy any kind of goods from any merchant, . . . who shall refuse to join with their brethren in signing the said agreement; but that we will use every lawful means in our power to prevent our acquaintance from dealing with them.

Thirdly, That if any merchant in or from Europe, should import any goods, in order to sell them in this province . . . that we ourselves, will by no means deal with such importers.

Fourthly, That we will endeavour to fall upon some Expendit to make known such Importers or Retailers as shall refuse to unite in maintaining and obtaining the liberties of their country.

Fifthly, That we his Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subects . . . being filled with love and gratitude to our present most gracious Sovereign, and the highest veneration for the British constitution; which we now unite to plead as our birth-right . . . give it as our opinion, and are determined to deem that person, who shall refuse to unite in the common cause, as acting the part of an enemy to the true interest of Great Britain and her colonies, and consequently not deserving the patronage of merchants, or mechancians.—N. A letter of this date from Philadelphia states that a few days earlier, Major Moncrieff arrived in New York with dispatches for Gen. Gage from the king. "Immediately on the receipt of them, orders were given to hire transports, as they said, to carry troops to St. Augustine." The merchants of New York, on being applied to, refused to supply any vessels, for they felt sure they would be sent against "their brethren at Boston to enslave them." Notices (see Sept. 28) were posted at the Coffee House and at the corners of every street to the effect that "if any man daring to hire them a vessel, destruction would ensue." As a result, the military authorities could get only one strange ship that lay in the New River.—Boston Chron., Nov. 14, 1768.

G. Taylor, of Sheffield, Eng., arrives in New York by "a single horse chair" (chaise) from New Haven, and stops at "the King's arms near the Oswego market." Of New York he writes, in part, that it "contains upwards of three thousand houses, and above eighteen thousand inhabitants.

"It is pretty well built, extending a mile in length, and about half that in breadth; and makes a beautiful prospect from the sea. The houses in general are built of brick, most of them in the Dutch method. The streets are very regular, but we call them pails." The Governor’s Palace in Fort George, City-Hall, Exchange, Sept. 1768. New Gaol, Hospital, Secretary’s Office, Barracks, Alms-House; besides five markets, viz. Comtis, Old Slip, Fly, Oswego, and New-Market. He describes a trip to Flushing, L.I., by going up East River and taking passage “in the Flushing stage-boat.” On East River, he says, “are beautiful plantations; and all along are the country-houses of the City Merchants. Tho’ the generality of the land be rocky, it has a fertile soil.

“The Dutch, who inhabit the greatest part of this shore, come to market some twenty, some thirty miles down this river in small boats to New-York. The wives generally row the boat, while the husbands sit in an idle posture smoking.”—A Voyage to No. Am. (Nottingham), 1717.

Sir William Johnson’s conference with the Indians at Fort Stanwix begins here, in a drawing of a boundary line between the English colonists and the Indians.—Winson, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., VI. Ch. 8. See map showing the line in ibid, VI: 689.

The following proclamation is published by order of Gov. Moore: “Whereas sundry Papers [see Sept. 16] have lately been published, and fixed up in divers Parts of this City, of a seditional Tendency, calculated to obstruct, oppose and impede His Majesty’s Service, and containing Menaces and Threats of inevitable Destruction to such Owners or Masters of Vessels, or other Persons as shall engage or charter any Vessels in the Service of His Majesty. In Order to impress the Author or Authors of such seditional Papers tocondign Punishment, I have thought fit, by the Advice of His Majesty’s Council to issue this Proclamation hereby, in His Majesty’s Name, offering a Reward of Fifty Pounds, to any Person or Persons who shall discover the Author or Authors of the seditional Papers so published as aforesaid.”—N. Y. Merc., Oct. 15, 1768, Car. 77.

A committee reports to the common council that it has caused “Van de Water” St. to be regulated and levelled.—M. C. C., VII: 124. A further regulation of “Van de Water” St. was ordered, Aug. 14, 1771.—Ibid., VII: 507-8. The street was laid out prior to 1768.—See Pl. 41, Vol. 1.

The consistory of the Dutch Church passes the following resolution: “Since the condition of the Third Church, now named the North [Church], demands particular care above what is common with the Elders, Deacons and Church Masters hitherto in use (in office), it is resolved that Two persons be chosen under the name of Church Masters, to alone shall have care over the revenues of the church. . . .” Jakobus Roosevelt, Jt. and John de Peyster are appointed the first trustees.—Eccles. Reg. VI: 4156. At this time it was believed the new church was “so far advanced in Building . . . that service might be therein performed on next Satur. day of the next Week.” The church stood “at some distance from the street.” Its length was sixty feet, its breadth forty-two, and the walls were built of stone, the face covered over with a blue plaster, exhibiting an appearance of durability, simplicity and plainness. . . The interior was equally plain, and remained many years in an unfinished state. There were at first no stairs or workroom to the galleries, and the hearth ascended by a ladder and listened to the preacher from the platform. For a long while, even the seats on the lower floor had no backs.”—Wakeley, op. cit., 6.

The Methodist Episcopal Church (spoken of more commonly as Wesley Chapel or “John Street Meeting”) on John St. is opened and dedicated by Philip Embury.—Wakeley, List Chap. recovered from Early Hist. of Am. Meth., 1891 Seaman, Annals of N. Y. Meth., 1766-1806, 41. There are two deeds of sale of the land on which the church was erected; one bears the date March 30, 1768, and the other Nov. 2, 1792. Both of these documents are now in the hands of the trustees of the Eighteenth Street Church.—Seaman, op. cit., 116-122; Wakeley, op. cit., 57-58. The church stood “some distance from the street.” Its length was sixty feet, its breadth forty-two, and the walls were built of stone, the face covered over with a blue plaster, exhibiting an appearance of durability, simplicity and plainness. . . The interior was equally plain, and remained many years in an unfinished state. There were at first no stairs or workroom to the galleries, and the hearth ascended by a ladder and listened to the preacher from the platform. For a long while, even the seats on the lower floor had no backs.”—Wakeley, op. cit., 108. “A house occupied as the parsonage stood partly below ground was a building in the antique taste of the Dutch; it also contained the methodist library, and was founded many years before the church. . . To screen the congregation from the passing multitudes in the street, a wooden partition or fence, having a gateway and a small door on one side was put up, and thus formed an area paved with brick, about 30 feet wide.”—A Short Hist. Account of the Early Soc. of Meth. in City of N. Y., (1824). 6. See also Laundmark Map Ref. Key, III: 310, and Vol. I, pp. 344-46. For a view of the church, see Pl. 25, Vol. I.

A second loan of £5,000 was granted by the Dutch Church to go on the building of the “North Church.”—Eccles. Reg., VI: 4156. The first was on March 15 (q.v.).

The Trinity vestry orders “that the Street Door leading into the Vestry Room of the New School House be taken away and a Window be placed in the Streed of it.”—Trin. Min. (MS.).

The setting as a common drawing of a dainty, delftful and loyal petition to his Majesty, a memorial to the lords and a remonstrance to the commoners of Great Britain; praying relief from the grievances his Majesty’s subjects within this colony labor under, from the acts of parliament passed in the sixth session of the late parliament, improving the condition of the people, and the cause of raising a revenue, and of the several other acts passed by that parliament relative to the colonies.”—Assemb. Jour. (1768-9), 16. See Dec. 12.

Gov. Moore sends the following message to the assembly: “To the representatives of the legislature, the 21st day of December, 1767 [q.v.], for furnishing his Majesty’s troops quartered in this Colony with necessaries, having been expended, as directed by the said act, I now recommend to the house of Assembly, to make a further provision for that service.”—Assemb. Jour. (1768-9), 18.

The following order for the effigies of Gov. Royall, Maj. Greenleaf of Boston are to be exhibited in New York, armed troops patrol the streets near the lower barracks in order “to intimidate the inhabitants.” However, the effigies “made their appearance in the streets, hanging on a gallows, between eight and nine o’clock, attended by a vast number of spectators who saluted them with loud huzzas, at the corner of a street they passed and after having been exposed some time at the Coffee house, they were publicly burnt amidst the acclamations of the populace.”—Boston Chron., Nov. 28, 1768; N. Y. Merc., Nov., 21, 1768; N. Y. Jour., Nov. 17, 1768. See Nov. 19.

Smith records in his diary: “I made a visit to S. H Moore upon the Subject of Holt’s Representation yesterday of the Riot of last Monday [see Nov. 14]—I told him that upon the Mayor’s Intimation of the Design last Friday Mr Watts & I met the Magistrates and remonstrated ag it as injurious to the Country & so ill Timed as to deserve the Cause the Rosters meant to promote—that it would induce the government to turn a Dead Ear to our Petitions and prevent our Friends from urging Relief upon the Inexpediency of the late Duty Act—I added that we advised the Magistrates to pard their Wards the next Day with two or three respectable Citizens and propagate there sentiments to render Riots unpopular by prefiguring the Voice of the discreet Inhabitants—That this was done with Success by the Magistrates for that at a Meeting with 80 Firemen and others on Saturday Evening the Mayor spoke to them and they in general promised to stand by him in preserving the Peace of the City. That this evening I was informed by Merchants the Mayor & Body to attend the Assembly & ask what was become of the Boston Letters whence I concluded that the Neglect of the late Riot imbued[ed] some designing Persons to awe the Assembly who in the Main have sentiments friendly to the Governor Government and the true Interest of the Province. That there was now a Necessity for summadvertising upon the late Riot and that Measures ought to be taken to prevent this Spirit from spreading.—The Govt heard me for half an Hour and said that the Mayor let him as he came into speak with me—that he had sent for him to request a Counter Represent[ed] in Gaine’s Paper to show that the Riot was promoted by a contemptible Few & ought not to be charged upon the City in General—I told him that as the three Branches were now all together more was necessary—An Order that the Magistrates make Enquiry for the Contrivers & Chief Promoters & that some of the Council be directed to assist them if necessary in their investigations. That a Premium should be issued a Reward for Discoveries & that a message should be sent to the assembly for a Provision of money to answer the Promises.”—Wm. Smith’s Diary (MS., IV).

Gov. Moore issues a proclamation offering a reward of £50 for the discovery of the person or persons who by inciting to or inciting to the Riot at the Northeastern End of Queen-Street, and eluding the Vigilance of the Magistrates then assembled in the Out-Skirts of the City, proceeded hastily, with great Noise and Turmoil, as far as the Merchant’s Coffee-House, and there burnt certain Figures or Effigies, in the Presence of a Rabble of Negroes and Children.”—N. Y. Merc., Nov. 28, 1768. There is a copy of that this payment, "which before had been refused," was finally ordered, but "they could not be prevailed on to pay for the burnt charter" (see Nov. 1, 1765).—Diasmall Papers, 602.

William Peartree Smith conveys to the city a square of land, measuring 24.8 ft. on each side, adjoining the garden of the poorhouse, "to the Northward of the Common field of this City near the fresh water, bounded on the west by the Broad way and on the east by north and South by land belonging to this Corporation," for which the city has agreed to pay £172,112.97.—M.C.
C., VII: 141-42.

The colonial treasurer is ordered to pay Elizabeth Vaughan £216,16, "for a Flag for Fort George," and Joseph Powell £81,17, "for making two book cases and a large Table for the use of the General Assembly."—Col. Laws N.Y., IV: 1047; Assay. Jour. (1768-9), 63.

The general assembly agrees to these resolutions: "As it is not only the common birthright of all his Majesty's subjects, but it is also essential to the preservation of the peace, strength and prosperity of the British empire; that an exact equality of constitutional rights, among all his Majesty's subjects in the several parts of the empire, be uniformly and invariably maintained and supported; and as it would be inconsistent with the constitutional rights of his Majesty's subjects in Great Britain, to tax them either in persons or estate, without the consent of their representatives in parliament assembled. It is therefore, "Resolved, Nominie Contradicente,"

That . . . as his most gracious Majesty is the common father of all his good subjects, dispersed throughout the various parts of this kingdom, and as the commons of Great Britain in parliament assembled, do enjoy a constitutional right of humbly petitioning his Majesty, as the common father of his people there, for constitutional benefits and the redress of grievances. The representatives of this colony, in general assembly convened, lawfully may, and ought to exercise the same constitutional right, when, and so often as to them shall seem meet."

Resolved,

That . . . this colony lawfully and constitutionally has and enjoys an internal legislature of its own, in which the crown and the people of this colony are constitutionally represented; and that the power and authority of the said legislature, cannot lawfully or constitutionally be suspended, abridged, abrogated or annulled by any power, authority or prerogative whatsoever, the prerogative of the crown ordinarily exercised for prerogatives and dissolutions only excepted."

Resolved, Nominie Contradicente,

That . . . this house has an undoubted right, to correspond and consult with any of the neighboring colonies, or with any of his Majesty's subjects out of this colony, or belonging to any part of his Majesty's realm or dominions, either individually or collectively on every matter, nullities and injuries, and grievances, whenever, whereby they shall conceive the rights, liberties, interests or privileges of this house, or of its constituents, are, or may be affected."—Assay. Jour. (1768-9), 70-71. These resolutions led Gov. Moore to dissolve the assembly (see Jan. 2, 1769).

Philip Livingston, speaker of the assembly, communicates to that body the circular letter (of Feb. 11) from the Massachusetts colony. An answer is immediately drawn up, which he is ordered to transmit to the Massachusetts house of representatives.—Assay. Jour. (1768-9), 72. In his reply, Livingston says: "By order of the General-Assembly of this Colony, I am to acknowledge the Receipt of your Letter of the 11th of February last [p.1]; and am directed to assure you that they are much obliged to your House of Representatives for freely communicating their Sentiments on a Subject so Interesting to all the Colonies; and are so far from considering it as a desire of dictating to the other Assemblies, that they highly esteem the Attention to American Liberty; and hope the Measures they have taken on this important Occasion, will fully convince them that the General-Assembly of the Colony of New-York harmonizes with those of the other Colonies in their Representations for Redress: They perfectly agree with your House in their opinion of the fatal Consequences which must inevitably attend the Operation of the several Acts of Parliament imposing Taxes and Duties in the American Colonies; and have therefore prepared Petitions to his Majesty and the Lord's Spiritual and Temporal and a Representation to the Commons of Great-Britain [see Dec. 1767 prayer and resolutions] upon the heavy labour under: They entertain with your House the Firment Confidence in his Majesty's known Clemency and tender regard Dec. for all his Subjects, and the Candour and Justice of the British 31 Parliament, and are not without Hopes that the united Supplications 32 of all the Colonies will prevail on our most Glorious Sovereign and the Parliament to grant effectual Redress, and put a stop for the future to Measures so directly repugnant to the true Interest of the Mother Country and the Colonies. . . . S. S. Robert Charles, Esq. Agent of this Colony at the Court of Great-Britain is intrusted to co-operate with the Agents of the other Colonies in their Applications for Redress."—Boston Gaz. Jan. 16, 1769.

The legislature passes a law to relieve the hardships caused by the fire prevention act effective Jan. 1, 1768 (see Dec. 23, 1765), which is now suspended until Jan. 1, 1772. The scarcity of fire-proof building materials is the main reason for making non-effectual the original statute requiring their use (see Dec. 31, 1761), and for granting exemption of penalties to offenders during the year that the law has been in operation.—Col. Laws N. Y., IV: 1046. See Oct. 14, 1773.

The legislature also passes "An Act further to encroach the Number of Firemen in the City of New York." It provides that the common council "elect nominate and appoint forty nine more able honest sober discreet Mem."—Ibid., VII: 1048-9. The enlarged list of firemen, totalising 119, appears in M. C. C. VII: 144-46.

During this year the Indiana Charity School at Lebanon, Connecticut, is removed to Hanover, New Hampshire, and becomes Dartmouth College.—Winsor, Narr. & Crit. Hist. of Am. IV: 322.

Probably in this year, John McComb, Sr., made drawings of the front and side elevations and a plan, of the North Dutch Church, the first of which drawings is reproduced in A. Pl. 11-a, Vol. III.

During the heated election campaign of this year, a broadsidé giving some "Reasons Against any of His Majesty's Council Voting, or using their Influence in the ensuing Election" appeared.

It seems to have been:

1. The members of the corresponding body of the British parliament, the peers, were not permitted to vote for candidates to the house of commons.

2. The council already had too much power. It was a legislative body, no appointments to civil and military offices could be made and no pardons granted without its consent, its members were both judges and jury in trials for felonies perpetrated on the high seas, and they were the ultimate judges of all cases under £100 which were brought before them.

3. It was proposed to check on these powers because the council was dependent solely on the crown.

4. If members of the council were allowed to vote, there would be no valid reason for excepting the governor, and his participation in the election would be "a dangerous Invasion upon the Rights of the People."—From a photostat in the N. Y. Pub. Library (Evans). The goal of the council was to remove power from the legislature, to strengthen the executive branch, and to create a non-partisan system of representation. A sugar-house is built by Henry Cuyler, Jr. (for his heir, Barnet Rynells Cuyler).—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 963. It stood on the corner of the present Rose and Duane Sts., a four-story building with cellar and loft. John Austin Stevens states from personal recollection that he saw the date 1769 high upon the brick wall in iron figures.—Progress of N. Y. in a Century (1876), 275. The Sun, May 27, 1893. Another authority, who had equal opportunity to observe, placed the date at 1765.—Smith, N. T. in 1788, 77. See May. It has been supposed (Wilson, Mem.Hist. of N. Y., III: 301) that the building was used as a prison during the Revolution, but this is denied by Stevens and others, who have presented testimony to disprove it.—The Sun, May 27, 1923. Mag. Am. Hist. (1886), V: 222-23; ibid. (1881), VI: 628; Thoro- bora, Reminiscences (1843), 166-78, 170. After the peace of 1783 (The Sun, op. cit.), it was known as the Rhinelander sugar-house, being owned by William Rhinelander, whose dwelling-house was next door, at 21 King George St. (as the upper end of William St. was then called), on the block above Franklin St.—Smith, op. cit., 37. The site is now (1912) marked by a tablet and harred window on the Rhinelander dwelling-house, the window having been taken from the sugar-house when it was demolished in 1892. Another window from the old sugar-house has been set up in Van Cortlandt Park, back of the mansion.—Kelley, Hist. Guide to N. Y. City (1913), 63, 185; Wilson, op. cit., III: 301. The name has been made by an honorable Member of our Assembly, for leave to bring in a bill to chase our Representatives for the future by ballot, it was carried in the affirmative by 18 Jan. to against 5. And as a law of that nature has been long desired by all the judicious friends to liberty in this City, they were induced to publish a number of bills to bring the inhabitants together, to obtain their sentiments on the best means to manifest their approbation of that salutary motion, and to make the Representatives of the city acquainted therewith, in order that they should concur in getting the vote passed into a law. In consequence thereof, a number assembled on Thursday the first of Liberty Pole; but they were not so considerable as might have been expected. Therefore . . . it was postponed until the next day. . . . They appointed a Gentleman to propose questions to the people, to know their approbation of the said vote, which was declared by a great majority. The Committee was then appointed to conciliate . . . their approbation to the City Members, which was done in writing last Saturday, and delivered to . . . Representatives in General Assembly for New York; wherein they mentioned the above request and appointment, and strongly solicit their utmost endeavors to get the aforesaid bill to pass this House."—Upcott Coll., in N. Y. Hist. Soc., III: 397.

Gov. Moore dissolves the assembly and, in an address of explanation, says: "The extraordinary nature of certain resolves lately entered on your journals [see Dec. 31, 1768]: some flatly repugnant to the laws of Great Britain, and others, with an apparent impropriety where giving offense where unnecessary . . . they put it out of my power to continue this assembly any longer. I observe by your journals that you have prepared representatives of the state of the colony, to be presented to his majesty; claims that respect the supremacy of Great Britain, are of so important and delicate a nature, that every motive of duty and interest, urge you, at this critical juncture, to avoid offence, and conciliate a favorable audience to your petitions . . . I have steadily aimed at, and shall continue my endeavors to promote the prosperity of the colony; and I cannot help lamenting, that you have suffered an intertemporal heat so far to prevail in your house, that my duty forbids me to countenance your present conduct; for after you had once resolved to lay your case before his majesty, it must evidently appear, that the measures you have since pursued, were not only unnecessary, but in the present exigency of affairs, dangerous to the colony. . . . I do now, in his majesty’s name, dissolve this assembly."—Assemb. Jour. (1768-9), 75-76.

At a meeting of the freemen and freeholders of the city, in order to consult on the propriety of re-electing the late Members for this City, for their spirited Conduct in asserting and supporting the Rights of their Constituents," John Cruger is nominated in the place of Philip Livingston, who has declined to serve again. The three other former members, De Lancey, Walton, and Jauncey, are also nominated. A motion "that Thanks should be returned the late Members for their spirited Conduct in the late Assembly" is seconded and the "public approbation of the late Members in their Huzza’s."—N. Y. Merc., Jan. 9, 1769. These four candidates were elected on Jan. 27, the voting having started on the 23rd (p.9).

Gov. Moore reports to the Earl of Hillsborough that the remakes of that licentious Rabble who during our late disorders called themselves the Sons of Liberty, had formed a design soon after the meeting of the Assembly to disturb the tranquility of the City by carrying the effigies of certain persons thro’ the Town in procession, and afterwards burning them publicly."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 143. See Nov. 14, 1768.

"..." and following note is issued in a broadside: "Whereas a great Handle is made against Messrs. De Lancey and Walton, for not agreeing to the Proposal made to them by sundry Persons, who sign Themselves a Committee of Non Episcopalian Denominations in this City.—Of their appointing two Members for the City and County of New-York; and of the Episcopalians appointing the other Two.

"It is necessary the Public should know, that previous to such Proposal, they found it to be the general Sense of their Constituents, that the Four late Members should be re-elected; and that therefore they have been highly improper and ungrateful in Them to consent to any other Ministry."—From the reprint in the N. Y. Pub. Library (Evans, 11176).

There are two political parties in the city, who violently oppose each other,—one consisting of the new members chosen into the last Assembly, and the other supposed to be favoured by the Govt.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 146.
Philip Livingston, in an address "To the Freeholders and Freemen Of the City and County of New-York," says that he intended to offer himself as a candidate for the Assembly, "if there was a Probability of a peaceable Election." Finding that "no Junction was likely to be formed by the two Parties, and apprehending great heats would arise," he has told the members of both parties that he would not be a candidate (see Jan. 3). He now gives an account of his conduct, "the Idea of any Inconsistency in my Conduct, that might in those heated Times, be insinuated to my Disadvantage."—From a photograph in the N. Y. Pub. Library (Evans, 11311).

As Philip Livingston has refused to be a candidate for the assembly (see Jan. 7), and John Gidding in his place (see Jan. 4), a broadside of this date, addressed "To the Freeholders and Freemen, of the City and County of New-York," publishes Cruger's acceptance of the nomination, and solicits the inhabitants' votes for him, and for James de Lancey, Jacob Walton, and James Jauncey, who have been nominated for De Lancey. Another broadside with the same date and same caption urges the election of these four.—From photographs in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

Johan Morin Scott issues a broadside printed in German and addressed to the High Germans of the city. Some one has accused him of calling the Germans "four brutes," and, while denying this accusation, he offers his opportunity to prove their votes for Philip Livingston, Peter van Bruhgh Livingston, Theodorus van Wyck, and himself, as representatives in the assembly. The broadside is grossly misspelled and ungrammatical.—From one of the Banker broadsides (lot 161), sold by Henkel, Phila., March 25, 1898. The undated broadside from the City, printed upon the broadside entitled "Nutzhche der Nachricht, in die samtliche Hoch- Teutsche in der Stadt New-York, von zwey Wohltumenden Lands Leute," was this an answer to Scott's address. It set forth, in German, that Scott and his party were hostile because they have called them firebrands, his party, in open assembly, had characterized the Germans as a stubborn, obstinate people. It urged the writers' countrymen to unite against Scott and his colleagues, and to vote, in the coming election, for De Lancey, Walton, Jauncey, and Cruger, because these candidates are men of character and honour. As a parting shot, the "Zwey Hoch Teutsche" suggested that, as there was no German nor sense in Scott's address, he must have purloined his laundress, who could neither read nor spell, to translate something from English into German.—From the photograph (without date) in the N. Y. Pub. Library (Evans, 11390).

"A Seasonable Advertisment to the Freeholders and Free- men of the City of New-York, and all the real Friends to Liberty, and Lovers of their Country" is issued as a broadside. It reads: "As Nothing can be more essential to the Safety of the Country than the conducting of Elections free from Corruption on the one Hand, or the instigation of Mr. Scott as a Numerous and resolute Freeholders and Freemen of easy Circumstances, who utterly abhor and detest such scandalous Practices, are creditly informed, that such Artifices are made use of, to destroy the Freedom of the ensuing election, they do hereby give Notice to all upon whom any Attempts of that Kind have been, or may be made, that as soon as the Election is over, they will devise a Mode, for laying the Proofs before the Publick, and bringing the Delinquents to due Punishment, for the double Purpose of exposing those atrocious Invaders of the Rights of the People, and to do Honour to those who shall nobly stand to their Integrity. And all Persons are particularly desired to take Notice, whether any, and who of his Majesty's Council of this Province, are concerned in influencing the ensuing Election."—From the reprint in the N. Y. Pub. Library (Evans, 11459).

"To the Freeholders and Freemen, of this City and County, From Messrs. Axe and Hammer [see Feb. 29, 1768], and a number of the respectable body of Leather Aprons, give their Compliments to their Old Friends who have not yet joined them; and beg they will take Notice of it in their favour, for the Benefit of this Commercial City. And beg likewise they would remember . . . That it is trade, and not Law, that supports our Families, as many a Man can testify . . ."—From an original in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

The Free Men are requested to meet at Burns' coffee-house. —N. Y. Merc., Jan. 16, 1769.

In answer to the "card" of Jan. 14 (p. v.), the following is published: "Jack Hatchway and Tom Bowling, return their Service to Messrs. Axe and Hammer, and the respectable body of Leather Aprons, acquitting them, that they keep a good lookout, and hope (with the assistance of their Old Friends, the Men of Straw) to run clear of the Sheals and Mudbanks . . . As also avoid the Keel of Combination, on which feeds a very furious animal, known among his Companions and Colleagues as a Watcher of those who watches over them; but being experienced Seamen, hope to divert him by throwing over a few empty Water-Casks, 'till they Weather every Difficulty, and get safe into Port." The "Card" emanates from the "Ship Liberty."—From an original broadside in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

The assembly elections "are now carrying on with great warmth."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 147.

In recommending Robert R. Livingston, who is one of the judges of the supreme court, to a place in the council, Gov. Moore states that he was on the death of Livingston's father "he must very shortly be the greatest Landholder, without exception, in this province," as he will soon inherit from his father "a very great landed Estate."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 148. He was the father of Robert R. Livingston, who became chancellor of New-York.—Ibid., VIII: 192 (footnote); Delafeld, Chancellor Robert R. Liv- 1769 ingston of N. Y. and his Family, 1526-1810.

The four men nominated for the assembly on Jan. 4 (p. v.) are elected. They are "attended from the City-Hall, by a vast Concours of People, with Music playing, and Colours displayed." They proceed "down the Broad-Way, and through the main Street, to the Coffy-house, thence to the Horse-Tavern, with loud Huzzas, and with every other Demonstration of Joy, that could be shewn upon this happy and interesting Occasion." The number of the principal inhabitants who are in the procession and the "Regularity and good Order" of the whole, make "one of the finest and most most agreeable scenes ever seen in this City."—N. Y. Merc., Jan. 30 and Feb. 6, 1769. See Dr. Grim's mention of the vote, filed with package (1779-1747) in box "New York, 1760-1766," at N. Y. Hist. Soc.; see also Aklenda.

A broadside headed "Liberty" contains the following sworn affidavit: "Andrew Marschalls declares, That on the Morning of this Instant, Isaac Sears, came to his Father's House, and in his Hearing told his Father, that if he voted against Mr. Scott, that the Board of Commerce would give him the Inspection of all the Flour they ship'd; and that if the ensuing Assembly did not appoint him sole Inspector, they the Board of Commerce would; but if he voted for Mr. Scott, they would not employ him at all, or Words to that Effect." The broadside continues: "From the Facts set forth in the above Affidavit, every impartial Man must be convinced of the scandalous Practices made Use of by the Merchants and Seamen, to prevent his being elected to the Freedom of Elections and tending to deceive the Electors to the most abject State of Slavery and Dependence. And such a Conduct in Capt. Sears is utterly inconsistent with his high Profession as a Friend to Liberty, and the constitutional Rights of his Countrymen, and must necessarily confirm our Suspicion, that his great Zeal in the present Election, is rather to be ascribed to his Party-spirit, than to a real Affectation to his Country."—From photograph (original in the Library Co. of Phila.) in the N. Y. Pub. Library (Evans, 1112). Sears answered on Jan. 24 (p. v.).

Isaac Sears issues an answer to Andrew Marschall's accusation (see Jan. 23). He denies having promised anything in the name of the board of commerce, and gives this explanation of his visit to Marschall's house: "I do confess, that I did go to the House of Mr. Marschall, as a Friend, by way of giving him a Caution, how he was voted at the ensuing Election, that most of the Members of the Number of Commerce, were in the opposite Interest to Mr. Scott, and therefore if he voted for him, I was afraid they would give their Business to some other Person . . . I do assure the Public, that my Inducement for waiting on Mr. Marschall, was not to influence his Vote in any unfair Manner, but to let him in some consistent with his own, and his Freedom of Character, but only to represent to him the Inconvenience which might possibly attend his voting against the mercantile Interest.—And from the many Acts of Friendship, I had constantly shewn to his Family, I imagined, I might take that Liberty with him, without giving him his high Office, as it seems it has done." Sears sees nothing in his conduct which is inconsistent with his "Profession, as a Friend to Liberty, and and the constitutional Rights of My Countrymen." He adds: "The Rejection of Mr. Scott in the present Competition, I conceive to be evidently expedient, on many weighty Considerations; and I believe in such a Case, no Man can reasonably hope for anything, for reminding my Friend, both his private Interest, and the public Good, led him to the same Choice. . . . Upon the whole, the Public are left to judge, whether the Party that condescended to tempt a Man to betray the Confidence of his Friend, and represent an innocent friendly Action, as a blamable one, is to be considered as most deserving of public Censure." Feb. Payment is made "for paving about the fort."—M. C. G., VII: 143. Further payments for paving here and elsewhere are made in the Bowling Green accounts 1771 and 1772.—Ibid., VII: 324, 1775. 2

For farther Particulars, apply to Anthony Rutgers.—N. Y. Merc., Feb. 2, 1769. This is agreed to.—Ibid., VII: 154-55. The street referred to is the former Bellow, now Madison, St.—See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 993, 1805.

15 A committee of the Chamber of Commerce having been appointed on Feb. 7 to apply to the common council for the use of the room over the exchange, which was considered "a decent, large and commodious room to meet in" (see original Minutes of the Chamber of Commerce), the common council leases the "Exchange House" to "Messrs Isaac Low, Thomas Wadlde, William Watlon, Isaac Roosevelt, and Lawrence Kortwright," for the Chamber of Commerce, for one year from May first, "on their putting the same in Good Repair and permitting this Corporation to make use of it as often as they shall Judge necessary."—M. C. G., VII: 149. After that, the Chamber is to pay $30 per annum.—Original Minutes. See Feb. 15, 1770.

James Tucker, M.D., who died this day, was "particularly fond of Natural History, in which he had made a very curious and valuable Collection," which he "directed to be deposited in the Library of King's College, as the Foundation of a Museum."—N. Y. Merc., Feb. 20, 1769. His will, dated Feb. 6, states: "I leave to King's College, of New York, all my Collection of Insects for every; accordingly to be delivered when the collection has disappeared.—Abstracts of Wills, VII: 236-37.

The common council orders the purchase of three bells, "the one for the New Gaol House, one other for the City Hall, and the other for the Exchange House."—M. C. G., VII: 150. They had each of them Labels pinned on their Breasts, and were surrounded with a Crowd of spectators; and it is hoped this Method of exposing such Criminals, will have a better Effect, than barely Whipping at the Post."—N. His successor was Gerard Bantcker, warrants for whose accounts for "necessary to the troops," repairing the barricasts, etc., were issued by the council from time to time.—Ibid., 479, et seq. Evert Bantcker became an associate with him in this work, in 1774, and they are then spoken of as "provincial barricast masters."—Ibid., 509, 835; Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 830.

On order of Feb. 24 from the provincial council, the barricaster, John de Peyster, Jr., makes an accounting.—Cal. Coun. Min., 479.

A meeting of the subscribers to the resolutions (see Aug. 27, 1768) respecting the non-importation of goods from abroad is held at the house of Bolton and Sigel and a committee is appointed to inquire into and inspect all European importations.—N. Y. Merc., Mar. 20, 1769. See June 19, 1769, and June 11, 1770.

"The Friends of Liberty and Trade, who are inclined to celebrate the Anniversary of the Repeal of the Stamp Act, on Saturday the 18th Inst. at the House of Edward Smith, In-keeper, in the Fields [later Hamden Hall]; are requested to give in their Names to Mr. Hugh Caine, or the said Smith, [by this Evening] in order that suitable Provision may be made for their Accommodation. N. B. Dinner to be served precisely at two O'Clock, and the Bill called at six."—N. Y. Jour., March 16, 1769. Commenting on this dinner in the next issue of the newspaper, the editor said that a "considerable number of the Genuine Sons of Liberty" met at Smith's, "where an elegant Entertainment was prepared for them; after the Company had dined, the remains of the Dinner, and a quantity of Strong Beer was sent to the New-Goal, and properly distributed among the Prisoners."—Ibid., March 23, 1769.

A similar meeting was held at Henry van de Water's son Nassau St., opposite the brick Presbyterian Church, and on March 1, 1770, almost a year later, a friend of Mr. McDougall for life discussed the two meetings, because reflections had been cast upon the "Old Sons of Liberty, for having deserted the Cause they were formerly engaged in," and he wished to "set the Saddle on the right Horse. When the party at Van de Water's (evidently patronised by M'Culloch and others) had a Committee appointed by their Committee to drink their healths, a debate arose as to what answer should be returned, and "Capt. S" (Sears?) and "Mr. J. L." (John Livingston?) opposed any reciprocal drinking of healths, declaring that "most of the Company at Van de Water's, had never once appeared in the Cause of Liberty, or amongst her Votaries," and mentioning "Mr. A. M.—McDougall, and others of the same Stamp, as some of those whom they thought unworthy of being reckoned in their Number." When, a few hours later, a single gentleman from Van de Water's had called to "pled them into a Meeting favourable to his Partisans," a debate arose at Smith's, as to whether he should not be "shewn the Way out of a Window." This schism between the two factions of the Sons of Liberty, both believing themselves to be the "genuine" brand, was reflected in the accounts of the meetings held on March 18, 1771 (p.c.). A plan of the floor of the pews, and also of the gallery seats in the North Church, is presented to the committee of the Dutch Church, "with an appraisement of the yearly rent."—Ecles. Rec., VII: 4179.

It is proposed that the "Arms" of John Harpender in the "Old Church" shall "be copied in an appropriate manner, and the copy hung in the North Church above the pulpit."—Ibid. Dr. Derwin states in a footnote that "This Coat-of-Arms continued to hang over the Pulpit, in this church, until its demolition in 1875, and is well remembered by the writer."—Ibid. The Rev. Thomas de Witt reproduced the "Arms" in his Discewrit (1847), p. 34.

The proprietor of the "Fowl's Hook Ferry" (see March 23

23, 1767) having been at an expense of over £200 in making a pier Mar. and ferry stairs and a new "Eli," and at an expense of £350 in providing boats, they have been at a loss of over £50 in one year. After ten months from May 1, 1769, after paying these incidental expenses, as well as rent to the city, and the wages and board of boatmen. They complain of the "extraordinary high rents," and petition the common council for relief.—From the original petition (MS.) in File No. 4, city clerk's record-room; M. C. C., VII: 155. On May 11, an abatement of £20 was ordered "in the Rest of the two last years."—M. C. C., VII: 165.

25 Jacob van Voorhis, George Stanton, and Peter Mesier, Jr., petition the common council for a water lot extending 200 feet into North River and from Deys Dock "notward to the corner of Bartley's and opposite to which there are in the original petition (MS.) in city clerk's record-room, endorsed "Read & filed the 23d of March, 1769." The corporation of Trinity Church having petitioned for the same lot, a hearing of both applicants is appointed for the next meeting of the board.—M. C. C., VII: 155. On Aug. 10, it was decided that a plan of the ground be exhibited and a committee of the board appointed to treat with the petitioners.—Ibid., VII: 175. The report of this committee, with terms, on Sept. 6, shows that the space in question consisted of "Sundry water Lots in the North River from Mr. Adams's Dock to the corner of Barclays Street," and included one lot of 200 feet extending from 1760.

24 Hillhouse writes to Gov. Moore: "It is unnecessary to inform you that the King saw with great concern, the violent and unwarrantable resolutions entered upon the Journal of the Assembly on the 24th December last [of 1769]. When I compare the sentiments of rupture and republicanism expressed in their address to you of the 24th of Nov. [1769], with the very contrary spirit of those Resolutions, I am at a loss to conjecture what could be the cause of so extraordinary an alteration in the course of six weeks, when no new event whatever had happened. I can hardly allow my mind to believe that there is wickedness enough on this side of the water to write over misrepresentations of the State of Government here, and arguments of artifice and false policy to excite and induce the Assembly of New York to a departure from that moderation which they had manifestly adopted; nor on the other hand, that there would be weakness enough on your side to allow them to give attention to any such.

"It is however worth the while to make enquiries, and to find out, if possible, whether any methods have been made use of and by whom from this side, to stir up such a spirit as shews itself in these Resolutions; otherwise I cannot but think that his Majesty's Servants may be upon their Guard with respect to Men of so mischievous and treacherous a disposition."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 155-56.

25 Samuel Francis leases that part of the "Church Farm" bounded by Greenwich Road, Chambers, Chapel, and Warren Sts.—Bagardus vi., 1769. Another grant, 1767, 15 acres, to the New Church in English, "I am absolutely determined to be liberated, and to be free from all service, expense and payments whatever; and there is no such thing as a district in this place of the water to write over misrepresentations of the State of Government here, and arguments of artifice and false policy to excite and induce the Assembly of New York to a departure from that moderation which they had manifestly adopted; nor on the other hand, that there would be weakness enough on your side to allow them to give attention to any such.

Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 155-56.

26 Abram Mortier, deputy paymaster of his Majesty's troops, leaves to wife Martha "the parcel of land situate in the Out Ward" on which he had erected the mansion later known as "Richmond Hill" (see May 1, July 1, 1769).—Abstracts of Bills, VIII: 281.

27 The constable of the Dutch Church resolves to send a call to Rev. John H. Livingston, now at Utrecht. This was drafted and approved the following day. It began: "The approaching completion of our Third Church called the North Church obliges the Consistory to look around for a suitable minister to perform service there, along with the one [Rev. Mr. Liidell] now established in the Second Church. The Minister in the New Church, in English," his salary is to be £500 a year.—Eccles. Rec., VII: 4145. His acceptance is dated Aug. 8; and the consistory, on Nov. 7, wrote him "to come over as early as possible in the ensuing Spring."—Ibid., VII: 4171. He was ordained by the synod of North Holland to the ministry for the city of New York on March 4, 1767, after passing these arrivals, Sept. 6, 1770, and was received by the consistory, of which the first English minister, Rev. Archibald Liidell, was then president.—Ibid., VI: 4191.

28 Col. Morris makes the following motion in the assembly: "As the preservation of religious liberty is essential to the growth and tranquility of this colony; and a taxation of protesters of all denominations indiscriminately, for the support of the ministers of any sect in particular, is most palpably partial and unjust; and great discontent has long been occasioned by the minister acts in the counties of Westchester, New-York, Queens and Richmond, in consequence whereof, the Episcopal ministers are maintained by taxes upon other persuasions; not even excepting their clergy: I therefore move for leave to bring in a bill, to exempt protesters of all denominations in the said counties, from the payment of any taxes raised for the support of ministers of a religious persuasion to which they do not belong." Such permission is granted.—Assemb. Jour. (1769), 6, p. 35. A similar bill, on Jan. 26, 1770, was ordered "postponed till next session."—Ibid. (1769-70), 100. No such law was enacted prior to the Revolution (see March 21, 1766).

A committee is appointed "to Regulate Roosevelt's street."—M. G. C., VII: 160-61; see also Nov. 9, 1764. Roosevelt St. was extended from Cherry St. to the East River in 1793 (Laws of New York, 1793, Chap. 49); and on March 18, 1793, was continued through the ground lately purchased of Daniel Latham.—M. G. C. (May 30).

On petition of Nicholas Bayard (see Dec. 10, 1767), his lease of the slaughter-house which he built on his own land in 1750-1 (M. G. C., V: 303, 323) is renewed for 18 years, to commence March 5, 1771 (ibid., VII: 161). At one time, complaint was made by 23 butchers, in a petition to the common council, that he had failed to comply with the requirements of his lease, by not supplying the tackle used in slaughtering cattle, or keeping the slaughter-house clean.—See the original, undated petition in city clerk's record-room.

"The council orders payment of £67 3s" for "fixing Irons in the Exchange & fly market, mending the drain and market in Montomerye ward ".—M. C. G., VII: 161.

Because some goods have been sent from London "without Orders, and repugnant to the Agreement entered into by the inhabitants of this city," a number of merchants meet and agree "that the Goods should be stored immediately, without opening any of the Packages."—N. T. Mere., May 1, 1769.

In some "notes and observations," Du Simister (see 1767) says: "The oldest date I have been able to discover mark'd by large Irons in the front of the houses in this City, is 1678 it is upon a house Standing on the East side of the broad way & betwixt Stone & marketfield Street, from that date one can almost find some of Every year to 1701 or 2 in Some part or other of the City, there is certainly Still remaining much older buildings than the above date, but without any & therefore not easily discover'd it seems the fashion dipt before the two or three first year[s] of this [eighteenth] century, especially one of a more modern Sugar house built upon Cowfoot Hill (Pearl Street) in any time in 1675 where the date is in the Same manner." Not without interest, also, is his description of the Kings Farm and the house of Thomas Coker, both of which are mentioned in the Dongan Charter of 1686 (see N. T. Mere., I: 305).—Du Simister Papers (M.S.) 99, 100. For the description of the Visscher series, referred to in Vol. I, p. 145, see 1631.

The custom-house is moved "from Wall-house, to the House at White-Hall, fronting the Great-Dock, lately occupied by Mr. Samuel Farmer."—N. T. Jour., May 4, 1769.

"The Duty on European Goods imported into this Province last Fall, we are told, amounted to some Hundreds Sterling, but we are credibly informed it does not exceed 40s. this Spring."—N. T. Mere., May 8, 1764.

Some "koulsters and merchants" of New York City inform the assembly "that the wheat brought to this market for sale, is generally mixed with a good deal of foul trash, which tends, in a great measure, to injure the reputation of the flour of this colony at the places it is usually exported to." They ask that provision be made "for the screening of all wheat brought to the city of New York for sale, until a penalty upon the measure."—Assemb. Jour. (1769), 52.

The common council orders payment to Henry Sickels of £5 2s 1d "toward repaying the Exchange."—M. C. G., VII: 162.

An act to confirm estates claimed by or under aliens, after having been amended by the council is passed by the assembly.—Assemb. Jour. (1769-70), 67; Jour. Leg. Coun., 1701. However, May there is no record of its approval by the governor. See Sept. 5, 1771.

The following is published by order of the committee of merchants: "Whereas in August last [see Aug. 27, 1768] an Agreement was made not to import any Goods from Great Britain . . . that should be shipped after the first of November, until an Act of Parliament laying Duties on Paper, Glass, &c . . . should be published. . . ." Some vessels have lately arrived and brought some small Parcels of Goods, most of which on Examination, appear to have been sent contrary to orders . . . it is now hoped that all Persons whatever, the Ladies in particular, whose Conduct may have great Influence, will rouse and show their public Spirit and Virtue, in maintaining the Agreement entered into for the public Good by having not any Consignado with any such selfish People; and that they will not buy from them, or any others who may purchase from him or them any Goods that they have now imported, or have on Hand, but deem them obnoxious and hold them in the Contempt they deserve, let their Station in Life be what it will."—N. T. Mere., May 25, 1769.

The treasury office "is removed from Smith-street, to Dock-street, in the house where Charles M[Ev]ers, Esq lately lived."—N. T. Mere., May 15, 1769.

The Virginia house of burgesses resolves that "humble, dutiful, and loyal Address" be presented to the king. The following address appears "in their Journal of the Day after:" "We your Majesty's most loyal, dutiful, and affectionate Subjects, the House of Burgesses of this your Majesty's antient Colony of Virginia, . . . beg Leave, in the humblest Manner, to assure you your Majesty that we have . . . far from countenancing Traitors, Treasons, or Mispriotions of Treason, are really at any Time to sacrifice our Lives and Fortunes in Defence of your Majesty's sacred Person and Government. "It is with the deepest Concern and most heartfelt Grief that your Majesty's dutiful Subjects of this Colony find that their Loyalty hath been treated with such and so many Insults from your Employees and Officers, that a(HWND to the British Constitution . . . made necessary Duties, have been misrepresented as rebellious Attacks upon your Majesty's Government."

"When we consider that by the established Laws and Constitution of this Colony the most ample Provision is made for apprehending and punishing all those who shall dare to engage in any reasonable Practices against your Majesty, or disturb the Tranquility of Government, we cannot without Horror think of the new, unusual, and permit us, with all Humility, to add unconstitutional and illegal Subduing of the See, or the destroying and carrying beyond sea the Inhabitants of America suspected of any Crime, and of trying such Persons in any other Manner than by the ancient and long established Course of Proceeding . . ."

"Truly alarmed at the fatal Tendency of these pernicious Conspiracies, and with the most serious Measures which a just regard for the British Constitution . . . necessary Duties, have been misrepresented as rebellious Attacks upon your Majesty's Government."—N. T. Mere., June 1, 1769. See also Writings of Jefferson, I: 3.

On this day, at the annual commencement of King's College, held in Trinity Church, the first medical degrees are bestowed on two candidates. Dr. Samuel Bard (see March 9, 1770), the professor of medicine, takes this opportunity to urge, "with great Pathos and Strength of Argument the Necessity of erecting a New Hospital in this City, for the Reception of the poor Sick."—N. T. Jour., May 25, 1769. This appeal meets with immediate response, Sir Henry Moore then and there heading a subscription-list for the proposed hospital.—See Pros. Sheldon's Address at the 150th Anniversary of the Soc. of the N. Y. Hospital, in Trinity Ch., Oct. 26, 1921.

Gov. Moore, in a message to the assembly, says: "A subscription having been very lately set on foot for building an hospital in this city, it has already been attended with so much success from the general approbation of so humane and benevolent a design [see May 16], as to afford the fairest prospect of carrying it into execution: As the contributions of individuals alone, will be inadequate to the plan proposed of rendering it beneficial to the whole province, I beg leave to recommend this useful undertaking to the consideration of the house of assembly, and hope that the advan

Merc., Oct. 1, 1770.

Moore writes to Hillborough that the Sons of Liberty have had "very great influence on the Elections of Members [of assembly] for this City."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII. 170.

There is a general review of the "Soldiery in Town." The men go through their exercises with a great Variety of Movements and Evolutions and in a manner which is a credit both to themselves and to their officers. Gen. Gage gives a dinner to the prominent citizens and, at night, entertains them with fireworks.—N. Y. Merc., June 12, 1769.

Bills for the city hall and the "New Gaol," ordered by the common council on Feb. 15 (p.v.), are paid for. The combined weight of the two bills was 514 lbs. A "Small old Bell" was accepted in partial payment, making the net cost to the city $297.—From original voucher in comptroller's office (box No. 1). See also M. C. G., VII. 172.

A committee is appointed to regulate Crown St. and to make a report thereupon as soon as possible.—M. C. G., VII. 165. The report was submitted on July 12 (p.v.).

The flat copper roof of the city hall is ordered to be "Solder'd." A bill for the work ($5056) was ordered paid on July 12.—M. C. G., VII. 169, 172.

The common council authorizes the payment of $182.6 to Moorhead Shrieve "for the Expenditure of his Burning Stephen Porter a pirate who hanged himself in Gaol."—M. C. G., VII. 169. The original voucher, preserved in the comptroller's office (box No. 1), says that the man "was hanged at the upper end of the Bowery Lane at the Cross Road," with a stake through his body and a sign thereon, agreeable to the judge's order.

The committee appointed (see March 13) to inspect and inquire into the importation of goods informs the public that Alexander Robertson has, contrary to the spirit of the agreement, "ordered sundry goods from Philadelphia and has attempted to introduce them into this City."—M. C. G., June 19, 1769. Robertson alleged, in vindication of his conduct, that "the Philadelphians had acceded to the said Agreement he thought himself at Liberty to purchase Goods from them." On realizing the displeasure of the public, he pretended to send the goods back, but the waggoner testiied to having taken back only empty casks, Robertson having emptied them and left the goods in the cellar of the ferry-house to be privately introduced into the city.—N. Y. Jour., June 22, 1769. He was later made to confess and apologize for his actions.—N. Y. Jour., June 20, 1769.

An advertisement reads: "The Stage Waggoa which last year run from Philadelphia & has attempted to introduce them into this City,"—N. Y. Jour., June 19, 1769. Among the passengers reported as sailing for London on the 23 "Duchess of Gordon" are "the Lady of his Excellency Sir Henry Moore," and "Master Billy Gage, Son of his Excellency the General."—N. Y. Jour., June 22, 1769. Lady Moore was accompanied by an adopted daughter, and was impelled to return to England because her son was living there, if we may credit the contents of 25 verses entitled "Catherine, and the Little Maiden, or the Sixth Chapter of the First Book of the Scribe." These verses appear in N. Y. Jour., Oct. 8, 1772, and were written by an anonymous fellow passenger on the "Duchess of Gordon," who, in a letter to Editor Holt (ibid., Sept. 10, 1772), signed himself "A. B." Verses descriptive of other passengers on the ship appeared in five earlier "Chapters" in previous issues of the Journal, and were subsequently republished in a small pamphlet (ibid., Dec. 10, 1772), no copy of Instructions against lawsuits are given to the governors in America, because "such practice doth tend to disengage those, who become adventurers therein from that spirit of industry and attention to their proper Callings and Occupations, on which the Publick Welfare so greatly depends." It is further stated that "this practice of authorizing Letters by Acts of Legislature hath been also extended to the enabling private persons to set up such Lotteries, by means whereof great frauds and abuses have been committed." The governors are not to permit lotteries without the approval of the lords of trade.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 174-75.

A broadside appears, emanating from the "United Sons of Liberty," and embodying a series of resolutions to which they propose "strictly to adhere." There is good reason to believe that this broadside was a constituent part of the constitution. Two copies are known one in the Library Co. of Phila.; the other in the author's collection, from which the reproduction on Pl. 39 was made. See Addison.

A Londoner writes to his friend in New York: "You will hear many parts and promises of a Fight taking place at a Session. But don't give too much Credit to Men, who would if they dare enslave both you and the People of England! ... I should tremble to hear that you entertain'd a most distant thought of relaxing in your Firmness and Economy in Consequence of any less being done, than a total Repeal of the Revenue Acts, an Extirpation of all the Revenue Officers; and in short, a Redress of every Grievance, and a Security against any future Invasion. May you not have the Liberty you ask, unless you seize this favourable Moment, and secure it. Your Conduct as yet has been noble and spirited: Depend upon it, you have thereby wrought out your own Salvation."—The Union of All America, which has at last taken Place, has extinguished every Spark of Hope which your Enemies had entertain'd, of reducing you to immediate Revenue Taxation. But unless you take prudent Measures, your Trade will in future be saddled most grievously.—N. Y. Merce, Aug. 7, 1769.

The committee appointed to look into the importations of goods into this city (see March 15) contrary to the agreement subscribed by the merchants, traders, and others, is "under the Necessity of advertising to the Public, that Thomas Charles Willett, Miller, in Wall Street," confesses to having brought goods from Philadelphia for sale in this city. He excuses "must be submitted to the impartial Public, and the patriotic Ladies of this city, who will undoubtedly treat him accordingly."—N. Y. Jour., July 13, 1769.

An address of commissioners begins in New York City to settle the boundary between New York and New Jersey. For an account of the proceedings, and a description of the line decided upon, see The Penn. Chronicle and Universal Advertiser, of Oct. 9-10, 1769, where it appears that the decree of the commissioners was pronounced. The Bristol Advertiser printed it in its diary: "In 1760, I divided the Line between the provinces of New York and New Jersey by astronomical observations, so long a bone of contention, and in Chancery so many years."—Montresor's Jour., July 119. See also Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 709; Penn. Chron., Dec. 1768, 1769; N. Y. Merce, July 119.

An inscription on a large map published by Wm. Faden, Charting Cross, Dec. 1, 1777, and contained in the Faden Atlas of North America, states that it was drawn from a survey of New Jersey made in 1769 by Lieut. Bernard Ratzer, of the 6th Regt., and from another large survey of the Northern Parts of Long Island by "the Earl of Dunmore by Gerard Barker."—See description of Pl. 41, I. 341. The boundary line was confirmed by a provincial act on Feb. 16, 1771.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 702. On Nov. 26, 1771, James Clinton and Anthony Dennis made releases on their survey of the line, Vld, 799. On Dec. 1, 1777, proclamation was made of the royal approval of the act for establishing the boundary or partition line between New York and "Nova Caesarea," or New Jersey, and for confirming titles and possession.—Ibid., 522.

The common council orders that "a Small Shed be Erected adjoining the poor House to be so Furnished as a Wash-House."—M. C. C., VII: 175. On September 29, payment of £40 was made toward this object.—Ibid., VII: 175. Subsequent payments (ibid., VII: 195, 196, 197, 198) brought the cost of the "Small Shed" to over £35.

An advertisement, "Of greater Importance to the Public, than any which has yet appeared on the like Occasions," states: "It was hoped that the odious Manner in which some late Violators of the Non-importation agreement had been held up to the Public; would have prevented all others from following such detestable Examples—but, it seems Advertisements alone will not do. . . . The Favour or Harmed of the Public begins to be a Matter of the most perfect Indifference. . . . A certain Simon Cooley, Haberdasher, Jeweller and Silversmith, a few Years since from London—and who in that short Space of Time has benefited so much by the Favour of his Customers, as to enable him to purchase and live in a House of his own in this City, hard by the Merchants Coffee-House; betrayed some Marks of Delicacy, and a Disposition to cooperate with his Fellow Citizens, in the Measures thought necessary to be pursued for the Recovery and Preservation of their common irreversible Rights and Liberties.—As the said Simon Cooley, having been found amongst the first who had imported Goods, contrary to the Agreement and Covenant, pretended they had been sent for and expected to have arrived here long before the Agreement took Place.—This, and his consenting with seeming Cheerfulness to put the Goods in Store, which was actually done, saved his Credit at that Time; and so unambitious were the Committee of the same Independency (Liberty) Society to the Agreement, appointed by them, to look over and set him every reasonable Indulgence; that, on his remonstrating to them, that his Goods would be entirely spoiled, unless they were opened and well cleaned; they readily consented to it, on his solemn Promise of returning them again after that was done, into the Store, there to lie as stipulated by the Agreement aforesaid.

The vile Ingrate however, took the Advantage of the Lenity and Credulity of the Committee, and availed himself, Judas like, as it has since appeared, of his fair Pretences in order to get Possession of his Goods, and to avoid the bad Consequences then apprehended, if taken out without Consent—but he has since plucked up fresh Courage, thrown off the Mask indicely, and now boldly bids them and all their Adherents Defiance—For—having lately imported other Goods in the Edward . . . he heisates not to declare, that he has not at any Time with-held his Orders for Goods, that he has already placed of them ready sold at Public sale, and that true but fraudulent obtained out of the Public Store, . . . that he will continue to sell the Remainder, together with those which arrived since, and all such as may arrive hereafter. . . . Shall then so contemptible a Reptile and Miscreant as the said Simon Cooley, be permitted to battle or defeat the united virtuous Efforts, in the Support of so righteous a Cause, not only this Church, but of the whole Continent!—God forbid!—Better that such all miserable depraved Wretches were crushed to Atoms, than the Safety of the most inconsiderable Town endanger'd.

And as the Behaviour of the said Simon Cooley has been in such the most insolent manner, and daring of any former Transgressors; the blackest of them having been brought to a Sense of his Crime, a public Confession of it, a fervent Supplication of Forgiveness, and a Promise never to be guilty of the like offense,—so it is highly necessary that the Punishment of the said Simeon Cooley should be equally exemplary; and that he be tried on all Occasions, and by all legal Means as an Enemy to his Country, a Pest to Society, and a vile Disturbance of the Peace, Police, and good Order of this City.—"N. Y. Jour., July 20, 1769. See July 27.

The Conduct of Simeon Cooley, as set forth in the Papers of last Week [see July 20], in contradistinction to the general Agreement for the Non-importation of British Goods, is contrary to the public Interest, and Defiance of the Subscribers, and supporters of the said Agreement, having drawn upon him the public Resentment, the Inhabitants of this City sensible of the exceeding great Importance of a strict adherence to the said Agreement, determined (at a general Meeting held last Friday [July 24] for that Purpose) to make Mr. Cooley sensible that the public Displeasure of his Countrymen, upon so interesting an Occasion, was not a Matter of so trifling a Nature as he seemed to imagine; and that he must not expect the People with whom he lived in Society, would permit him with Impunity, to transgress and violate the Rules and Agreement they had entered into for their Welfare and Security in their highest and most weighty Interests. Two Gentlemen were appointed to inform Mr. Cooley, of the Sentiments of the Inhabitants assembled, to require his immediate Attendance, and assure him that if such a Measure should be thought necessary, his Person should be secured with some Difficulty. He at first refused to attend, saying he did not think he could do it with Safety to his Person; but expressed his willingness to make the Concessions required, from his own parbor Window. Whether he was really influenced to this Answer by the high-pressure of strong-headed meddling Ad\visor, it is uncertain, but it was disagreeable to the People assembled, who immediately proceeded towards his House. He had before this, procured . . . a File of Soldiers to guard his House, who were drawn up and charged their Pieces before his Door; But this Sort of Behaviour was highly displeased by the superior Officers, the Soldiers were soon withdrawn away, and Cooley was of the People assembled, thought proper to decamp to the Fort, but soon consented to make the Concessions required of him, the next Day. Accordingly, on Saturday [July 22] at 4 o'Clock in the Afternoon, he attended in the Fields, where he publicly acknowledged his Crimes; implored the Pardon of his Fellow Citizens; engaged to store an Equivalent to the Goods he had sold, together with all those he had in Possession that were imported contrary to Agreement; and so to conduct for the future as not to render himself obnoxious to the Contempt and just Restitution of an important People. His Account of the affair, printed in Halsey's The Boston Port Bill (1904), 85-89.

Jonathan Hampton, "In Chapel-Street, New York," advertises "Windsor Chairs, made in the best and nearest Manner, & well finished, High back'd, fine, & costly Furniture," etc. He sells by wholesale or retail.—"N. Y. Jour.; July 27, 1769.

An advertisement reads: "Mr. Du Simititre [see 1767], Miniature, Painter, Intending shortly to leave this City, and it being uncertain whether he will return again, if any Gentlemen or Ladies should incline to employ him, he is to be found at his Lodgings, in the House of Mrs. Ferrara, in Maiden Lane."—N. During the session of the supreme court which ended on July 29, "John Hennessy, for Felony and Sacrilege, in stealing the Supreme Court of Judicature of St. Paul's in N.Y., Cooley's removed Sentence of Death, and is to be executed the 24 of August."—"N. The location of this tavern is not known. The "York Arms" was also one of the names by which the City Tavern at 115 Broadway was designated.

Jacobus Stuartenburgh is paid £6312 for Cleansing and keeping of the Fire Engines belonging to this Corporation."—M. C. C.; VII, 176.

John Cox, who has been confined for over nine years in the "Debtors Gaol" (which is part of the bridewell), having "taken all Methods in the Compass of his power, in order to bring his Creditors to a Composition" but without finding it possible "to obtain a discharge," and having contributed to the partial support of his wife and eight children by selling liquor in the gaol and by acting as a turnkey or under-keeper for several years, now petitions the common council for appointment as keeper of the bride\well, at the yearly salary allowed to the present keeper. He proceeds to "find the People confined therein Provisions at his . . . Own Expense, for the benefit of their Work."—From the original petition (M.S.), in city clerk's record-room. The petition is deferred for future consideration.—M. C. C., III: 176. Before his imprisonment, Cox had been a constable.—Ibid., VI: 147.

On Aug. 14, the present keeper of the bridewell, William Dobbs, replied to the foregoing in another petition. He referred to Cox's "patrician description of the distress of his Wife and Numerous family and the insufficiency of the privilege he enjoys to support them,—upon which he Solely grounds his Extraordinary request," and added: "Yet the said John Cox's tenderness is so wholly absorbed in his own family, that he has not the least consideration for the unhappy State Your Petitioner and his family would unavoidably be reduced to if deprived of the said Employment [Dobbs himself had been a debtor to the corporation.—M. C. C., VI: 79]."

He further stated that he feared to purchase some time ago of a valuable concern in this City, for which he paid £1000, and from which he receives the Yearly Rent of Eighty pounds. And has likewise Shipped a valuable Cargo of Wine and other Merchandise to Virginia . . . From these particulars, it fully appears that Mr. Cox in the account he has given hath attempted to impose upon your Worthy and Illustrious City, his claims to be dismissed.—From the original petition (M.S.), in file 4, city clerk's record-rooms; cf. Peterson & Edwards, N. Y. as an 18th Cent. Municipality, 505, and Appendix XXI (in which the entire petition of Dobbs is printed). The common council must have denied Cox's petition, for records show that Dobbs was not displaced by him (see Nov. 21, 1765).

The ship "Britannia" (see June 4, 1770) is launched from the ship-yards of Morses. Totten and Crossfield, in the presence of 5000 delighted spectators. Y. Merc., Aug. 21, 1769.

Pres. Cooper of King's College writes to John Singleton Copley: "I should be very glad if you could persuade yourself to exercise your Art for a few Months in this place [New York]. I am satisfied you would find an unlimited field for your Abilities. If you should shrink from the common Complaint of the Scarcity of Money. Any assistance that I could lend you, you might depend on receiving."—Letters & Papers of John Singleton Copley and Henry Pelham, 1709-1776, 75-76. On Sept. 24, Copley answered: "I am much obliged to you for this kindness you are so kind to offer me should I visit New-York. although I cannot at present make that excursion for the exercise of my pencil, I may in some future time."—Ibid., 76. For Copley's arrival in New York, see June 16, 1771.

Theophilus Hardenbrook and other house carpenters of New York petition the common council for relief against unfair competition, claiming "that a Considerable Number of Country Carpenters have for Some years past Come into this City in the Summer Season and followed their Trade and in the fall Returned again to their families without paying any Taxes or assessments, to which they are liable by the Improvement of their families." A committee was appointed to relieve them.—M. C. C., VII: 177. The situation appears to have been settled by private agreement, as the committee made no report of record. For an earlier account of similar circumstances, see April 2, 1757.

The custom of stretching chains across streets under certain conditions is revealed in a payment of this date "for fixing a Chain across the Bridge at the Fly market."—M. C. C., VII: 177. See also 1789.

A scale for weighing hay was erected some time before this in the "little street back of Mr George Burne's Stable." Robert Leake had his shop on the common council recently that it was removed "to a place beyond the Dock commonly called Deys Dock." Now a petition, reciting these facts and signed by 42 persons, asks the common council that it be kept where it is; this is endorsed "Read &Filed Sept. 7th, 1766, but no order made thereon."—From original petition (MS.) in city clerk's record-room.

His body was interred, on the evening of Sept. 12, in the chancel of Trinity Church, with full military honours and all the solemnity and respect due his "Peace & Station."—T. Y. Merc., Sept. 18, 1769. Similar accounts of the governor's death together with sketches of his life, may be found in the N. Y. Jour., Sept. 14, 1769, and the N. Y. Chron., Sept. 14, 1769. Philip Livingston, Jr., Moore's private secretary, sent the news of the governor's death to the Earl of Hillsborough immediately.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 187.

Jonathan Watts, writing to Gen. Monckton on the 12th, said that the cause of the governor's death was "a mortification of the bowels."—Aspinwall Papers, 618. See also Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV, in N. Y. Pub. Library. Lady Moore was not in New York, apparently, at the time of the governor's death, having sailed the day before her daughter for England on June 20 (q. v.).

Jonathan Watts informs Gen. Monckton by letter of Gov. Moore's death, and adds: "Today Mr. Colden is expected in town once more to take upon him the administration of the Government: He fairly lives himself into office, being they tell me as hearty as when he first went from this place. I never saw him since he left the city on Sir Harry's arrival, and retired to Long Island. A fine mess of portage is left behind for him by his predecessor who had not time to go through with the grand land matters that were upon the carpet. The old man seems to be the son of fortune in his advanced years."—Aspinwall Papers, 618-19.

Lieu.-Gov. Colden takes the usual oaths. A proclamation is issued by the council announcing the death of Gov. Moore (see Sept. 11), and continuing all public officers in their posts. Moore's general instructions are delivered to Colden.—Col. Coun. Min., Nov. 13, 1769, N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 188.

According to a news report, two thieves have been given "15 lashes each at the usual place of flagellation."—N. Y. Chron., Sept. 14, 1769.

Thomas Richardson, a violator of the non-importation agreement, is ordered to appear at a scaffold erected near the liberty pole, and to "satisfy the public relative to his past and future conduct." He had endangered the "Safety of America by exposing of his non-enumerated Goods &c. for sale, and that in the most daring and contumacious manner." He obeyed the demand of the inhabitants, after mourning the rostrum, declared that "he does not believe that the city council was extremely sorry for the Offender, nor had given the community, and asked Parleyon." In addition he promised to store his goods and not to "perpetuate the like atrocity in Future."—N. Y. Jour., Sept. 21, 1769.

Jour. (1769–70), 38. The act granting this money was signed by the lieutenant-governor on Jan. 5, 1790 (q.v.). The broadside of Dec. 16, 1769 (q.v.) was a direct result of this vote of the house.

A broadside addressed "To the Betrayed Inhabitants of the City and Colony of New-York" is issued by "A Son of Liberty." It reads: "In A Day when the Minions of Tyranny and Despotism in the Mother Country, and the Colonies, are indefatigable in laying every Snare that their malvolent [sic] and corrupt Hearts can suggest, to entangle a free People; when this unfortunate Country has been striving under many Disadvantages for three Years past, to preserve their Freedom . . . . when the Merchants of this City . . . have nobly and cheerfully sacrificed their private Interests to the public Good . . . . It might justly be expected, that in this Day of Constitutional Light, the Representatives of this Colony, would not be so hardy, nor be so lost to all Sense of Duty to their Constituents . . . as to betray the Trust committed to them. This they have done, in passing the Vote to give the Troops a Thousand Pounds, For a moment of any Minutes they may be in the Treasury, and another Thousand out of the Money that may be issued, to put out on Loan [see Dec. 15] . . . . Our granting Money to the Troops, is implicitly acknowledging the Authority that enacted the Revenue-Acts, and their being obligatory on us. To other Influence than the deserting the American Cause, can the Ministry attribute so pusillanimous a Conduct, as of this; the assembly; so repugnant and subservive of all the Means we have used, and Opposition that has been made . . . to the tyrannical Conduct of the British Parliament? To no other. Can there be a more ridiculous Garce to impose so heavy a Tax for the Assembly to vote their Thanks to be given to the Merchants, for entering into an Agreement not to import Goods from Britain, until the Revenue Acts should be repealed, while they at the same Time counteract it by counteracting British Acts, and complying with Ministerial Requisitions, incompatible with our Freedom?' . . . . And what makes the Assembly's granting this Money the more grievous, is, that it goes to the Support of Troops kept here, not to protect but to enslave us . . . . This Consideration alone ought to be sufficient to induce a free People, not to grant the Troops any Supply whatsoever if we had no Dispute with the Mother Country, but it is necessary now to insist on any thing which might destroy our Freedom, Reasons of Economy and good Policy suggest, that we ought not to grant the Troops Money . . . . Hence it follows, that the Assembly have not been attentive to the Liberties of the Continent, nor to the Property of the good People, in particular having for a while attributed this Sacrifice to the public Interest, to some corrupt Source . . . . Mr. Colden Knows, from the Nature of Things, that he cannot have the least Prospect to be in Administration again; and therefore, that he may make Hay while the Sun shines, and get a full Salary from the Assembly, flatters the ignorant Members of it, with the Consideration of the Success of a Bill, to emit a Paper Currency, when he and his artful Coadjudicators must know, that it is only a Snare to impose on the simple; for it will not obtain the Royal Assent [see Jan. 5, 1770]. . . .

"The Delancy Family knowing the Ascendency they have in the present House of Assembly, and how useful that Influence will be to their ambitious Designs, to manage a New Governor . . . like true Politicians, altho' they were in all Appearance, at mortal Odds with Mr. Colden . . . yet a Coalition is now formed, in order to secure to them the Sovereign Lordship of this Colony . . . The Assembly might . . . . when the Committee reported on Jan. 10, 1770, that the committee 'Do Cause two plans to be made . . . [one of the Ground opposite the Petitioners Lots]—that in the first of the above said plans, they proportion the Loss which each said Lot will Loose, in order that this Board may be the better Enabled to Judge where and in what manner the Broad Street may be further extended.'—M. G. C., VII: 2067. See May 1, 1771, and Dec. A. Pl. 5, Vol. III.
The assembly, I think, is now collecting Money for the support of the Troops, and that, I believe, is to be done with the greatest possible dispatch, not merely to prevent a further drain upon the public purse, but also to prevent the troops from being disbanded.

The Committee of Privy Council will be understood to have done all that was in their power to obtain the necessary funds, but they have not succeeded in obtaining the requisite sum. The committee is now considering the matter, and will report to the assembly shortly.

The Committee of Privy Council informs me that they have been able to collect only a small portion of the funds required, and that they are still far short of the amount needed. They have, however, made several efforts to raise the necessary funds, and have been successful in obtaining some additional contributions.

The assembly has voted to authorize the issuance of bonds for the remaining portion of the funds needed to support the troops. These bonds will be offered to the public at a rate of 500 for the discovery of the algebraic expression for the following.

The assembly also voted to authorize the issuance of loans for the remaining portion of the funds needed to support the troops. These loans will be offered to the public at a rate of 500 for the discovery of the algebraic expression for the following.

Gentlemen

Your very acceptable favour of the 28th March, signed by Mr. Copes, to our Committee came due to hand, and the subject of it would have been carried into execution, even after the departure of our sea ships; but not been alarmed with intelligence from England of more importance that calls for our utmost Attention and Vigilance. The Monday Captain Cooper arrived from London in 37 Days, and brought us the news that General Gage was appointed your Governor, and that he was to visit your Town in the Lady Neptune. The Day before he sailed, he was not certain of his visitation till the news arrived. By him we have received the shocking and distressing Act of Parliament, that took up your Town the first of June next, a copy of which was enclosed to your Secretary by the last Thursday Post, but as it may minister to want several other copies of it. We want language to express our horror of this additional Act of Tyranny to America, we certify we that he is to be arrested and reduced by force of arms to do it, or reducing you. This intelligence would have been immediately communicated to you by Captain Cooper, but we considered the King's orders on the subject had brought you the answers, but before it reached us. Therefore we judged it most safe to let the State of the inhabitants upon some means to extricate you out of your Dangers which should be communicated to you without loss of time.

In this year, there was published in London: A Brief State of the Commerce between the Colonies of New-York and New-Jersey, Respecting their Boundaries-Line, containing an engraved copy of a map made by Bernard Raxter for the commissioners, which shows the various changes in the boundary.

In this year, Hugh Gaine printed a pamphlet entitled Rules for the St. Andrew's Society, in New-York. The preface states that "the Natives of Scotland, and those descended of Scots Parentage, in the City of New-York, have agreed to form themselves into a Charitable Society; the principal Design of which is, to raise and keep a Sum of Money in Readiness for the above laudable Purpose; if the application of this Charity is confined, so is the Manner of conducting it; neither will it in the least prevent our acting up to the Principles of universal Charity on other Occasions." The rules, which were adopted on Nov. 30, 1794, provide for regular meetings, admission of new members, election of officers, payment of dues and fines, disbursement of benefits, keeping of accounts, and conferring of minutes, etc. Besides the rules, the pamphlet contains a list of the officers and the members of the society. Peter Middleton was president, William M'Adam vice-president, and John Ramsay secretary and treasurer. Many prominent New Yorkers were numbered among the resident and the honorary members. The N. Y. Hist. Soc.'s copy of this publication was reprinted in 1815.

On July 7, Dunmore's furniture having arrived, Coolen wrote that he was retiring to his house in the country, so "that the Govt. House might be fitted up for his reception." — Ibid., VIII: 217. This delay in his arrival raised a dispute between Coolen and Dunmore regarding the division of the salaries of office. — See Nov. 10.

A broadside, directed: "To the Freeholders, and Freeman, of the City and County of New-York," gives four reasons in favor of electing representatives by ballot (see Dec. 28, 1760):

1st. Such a Law, will in a great Measure, prevent Tumults, Riots and Disorders, and give them to every Person, a Right to consider; or no Trouble, than they arrive at in England, under the most careful and expensive Cultivation.

The balance (£82 and all that was saved in purchasing the above articles were to be "applied towards the purchasing of Mollouses and establishing a Spruce Brewery for the Soldiers."—Calden Pappert (1875), 204-6.

Calden sends Hilliborough a copy of the broadside of Dec. 16, 1769 (p. 5). He adds: "Tho' some of our Newspapers make the meetings of the sons of Liberty, as they call themselves, on this occasion to be numerous and of consequence, the party was really disappointed. The numbers who appeared were too small and insconsiderable to have any weight, or be of any service to their purpose. They have been further disappointed in three attempts since made. People in general, especially they of property, are now aware of the dangerous consequences of such riotous and mobish proceedings."—N. Y. Col. Dcts., VIII: 199.

Parliament passes an act to enable the governour, etc., of New York, to pass a broadside [act Dec 16, 1769]; we therefore... for the following Reasons, instruct and direct your Representatives to oppose, by all legal Means in your Power, the proposed Alteration.

Because we conceive it to be a dangerous Innovation directly contrary to the Laws and Customs of the Realm, and unknown in any Royal British Government on the Continent.

Because we apprehend it to be an implicit Surrender of one of the most invaluable Privileges which we enjoy as Englishmen, to wit, that of declaring our Sentiments openly on all Occasions... Because we conceive that the principal Argument used by the Abettors of the Mode of Ballottin in the broadside of 1769, is, that they assert that this Method will deliver the Poor from the Influence of the Rich, and enable them to vote free and unbiased; in answer to which, we insist, that neither Law nor Reason can suppose that an honest Man will sell his Birthright for a Mess of Pottage and sacrifice to a selfish and mercenary Consideration his Honour, his Judgment, and his Conscience...

Because we apprehend that the Mode of Ballottin, so far from preventing Frauds and Imposition, as is pretended by its Advocates, will rather open unto them a wider Door; for as many People here are, in a great measure, unacquainted with the English Language, and particularly with writing it, they will be necessarily exposed to the Villainous Arts of crafty Emissaries who, under a pretended shew of Friendship, offering their Assistance, will often cause them to deliver Suffrage directly contrary to their real Judgment...

Because it will be dangerous to the Rights and Liberties of the People to intrust in the Hands of a returning Officer, the sole Power of determining on a Scrutiny; which must of Necessity be the Case, if the Mode of Ballottin be adopted."—N. Y. Mecl., Jan. 9, 1770. These instructions were signed by 1,007 inhabitants. By Jan. 16, when they were presented to the representatives, the bill for election by ballot had been rejected by the house.—Ibid., Jan. 22, 1770.

Lieut.-Gov. Colden signs the bills passed by the assembly for granting £1,000 for supporting troops quartered in New York City, and for emitting £120,000 in bills of credit. The matter had been under consideration since the meeting of the assembly on Nov. 21, 1769. Colden was anxious to secure funds to support the troops; the assembly was very desirous of securing the power to emit bills of credit; so the two bills were passed. The action of the assembly was obnoxious to the people, and there was a popular protest, while the government in England afterwards rejected the measure for issuing bills of credit and censured Colden for having approved it.—N. Y. Col. Dcts., VIII: 189-99. See Jan. 9, April 10.

On Jan. 15, Colden and Gage drew up an agreement specifying that the £1,000 appropriated by the assembly for the troops should be spent in the following manner:

"For a Bed and a Blanket for each Birth amounting in the whole to the sum of............. £500.00
"For Firewood for 77 Rooms the sum of............. 100.00
"For Firewood for three Guard Rooms the sum of............. 80.00

"The Legislature passes two laws affecting the city of New York; one to establish the Rates to be taken for the accommodation of the Town, and the other to ascertain the size Casks in which white Bread shall be packed... and to regulate the Manner in which the same shall be sold."—Col. Lect. N. Y., 1: 80-83, 86.

The soldiers make an attempt to cut down the "Liberty Pole" on the common, but their endeavours are in vain; the "pole being so well secured with Iron." Incensed at the futility of their efforts and the taunts of a number of gentlemen standing near Mountague's house, they entered the house "with drawn swords and Bayonets, insulted the Company and beat the Waiter." Not yet satisfied, they "proceeded to destroy every thing thereon not conveniently come at. They broke eighty-four Pains of Glass, two Lamps and two Bowls; after which they quit the House with precipitation."—N. Y. Post-Boy, Feb. 5, 1770; Penn. Gaz., Feb. 15, 1770, and Boston Even. Post, Feb. 19, 1770.

"The soldiers, after the affair at New York, which soldiers for whom they were addressed, "To the Public," and signed "Brutus," protests against employing soldiers instead of inhabitants who want employment; and against taxes and duties for billeting money to support the soldiers, who are "not kept here to protect but to ensnare us." The writer says: "I hope my Fellow Citizens will take this Message into Consideration, and not countenance a Set of Men who are Enemies to Liberty, and at the Beck of Tyrants to ensnare... Experience has convinced us, that good Usage makes Soldiers Insolent and Ungrateful; all the Money that you have hitherto given them, has only taught them to despise and insult you. This is evident in a great Number of them, attempt-
The hostility between soldiers and citizens, which has been increasing steadily for several days (see Jan. 15 and Jan. 17), culminated in the "battle of Golden Hill." On this day a party of soldiers went about the city nailing up, in conspicuous places, a broadside published by them which attacked the Sons of Liberty and lauded the conduct of the soldiers. Isaac Sears and Walter Quackenbos attempted to prevent the posting of one of these papers at the old Faneuil Hall, declaring it as illegal against the inhabitants; one soldier drew his bayonet and Mr. Sears struck him with a "Rams Horn." Two soldiers were seized and taken to the mayor's house, where a number of citizens soon assembled. "Shortly after, about twenty Soldiers, with Curtain and Bayonets, from the Barracks, [at]—is lauded in harmony with a literal Compliance with the Mutiny Act, (otherwise called the Billeting Act) are desired to meet at Liberty-Pole, at Twelve o'Clock, on Wednesday next, which will be on the 17th Instant [9-9], where the whole Matter shall be communicated to them."—From a broadside to the N. Y. Pub. Libracy. For a retaliatory broadside, see Jan. 19.

The leases of two houses in Augustus St., opposite the east barrack gate in New York, are offered for sale by "Mr. Philip Embury, next door to the Methodist Preaching-House," or by Paul Heck, who lives in one of the houses.—N. Y. Merc., Jan. 15, 1770.

Robert Benson, secretary of the society for "promoting maritime knowledge, and for relief of distressed masters of ships, their widows, and orphan children," announces that a committee of the society will meet every Monday evening from 8 to 10 o'clock at the house of Thomas Doran, to receive donations and admit members.—N. Y. Merc., Jan. 16, 1770.

The county to dispense Township and ship captain (see Oct. 11, 1769), and for over a decade had been proprietor of a tavern on the "New Dock," near the Fly Market. His house continued to be a meeting-place of the Marine Society as late as 1776 (ibid., Jan. 8, 1776), and was the house at which, in December, 1779, a sale of imported goods was held under the direction of the committee of inspection.—N. Y. Jour., Dec. 23, 1774. By March 1, 1777, the tavern was in the hands of Loeley and Elms (N. Y. Merc., Mar. 3, 1777), who were paper manufacturers prior to the outbreak of the Revolution and who succeeded in evading military duty upon the plea that the paper they manufactured was of the utmost importance to the public and private business of the country.—Baysley, Old Taverns of N. Y., 283.

Looley and Elms proceeded at once to lay a foundation for loyalist patronage by renaming the house the "King's Head Tavern." They remained two years, being succeeded in May, 1779, by James Strachan. Loeley and Elms removed to the ferry-house at Brooklyn. Strachan, who called the house the "Queen's Head Tavern," removed on May 1, 1781 (q.v.), to the old Merchants Coffee House.

After their unsuccessful attempts of March 16, 1769, and Jan. 3, 1770, a second attempt of minor importance, the soldiers succeed to-day in their attack on the "Liberty Pole." They took shelter in a ruined building which stood nearly and "availed themselves of the dead Hour of Night; and at one o'Clock they cut down the Pole, saved it and split it in Pieces, and carried them to Mr. Montague's Door, where they threw them down."—N. Y. Post-Boy, Feb. 5, 1770.

In response to a handbill that had been sent through the city, about three thousand citizens assembled on the Commons to discuss the granting of money in compliance with the "Billeting Act." The "Liberty Pole," having been destroyed during the night, the people saw fit to declare that it was alarming that "notwithstanding the humane and benevolent Treatment, that the Troops quartered in this City, have received . . . (altho' we have great Ground to suspect they are not stationed here to protect us) that they should be so unjustly and insultingly to the citizens, as to . . . blow up and cut down the Liberty Pole." They therefore resolved not to employ any soldier on any terms, and that in the future any soldier "found to the night having Arms . . . or . . . such as are found even without Arms, and bear in an insulting Manner shall be treated as Enemies to the Peace and Inhabitants;" all the inhabitants then signed their "Abhorrence to a Compliance with the Mutiny or Billeting Act" by holding up their hands and by "loud Huzza."—N. Y. Post-Boy, Jan. 22, 1770. The statement in the 15th Ann. Rep. Am. Soc., and Hist. Proc. Soc. (1910), 412, that the citizens on this occasion ejected the soldiers was "evidently wrong;" the fifth pole was erected on Feb. 1 (q.v.).

The broadside appears bearing the superscription: "Signed by the 16th Regiment of Foot," and beginning with these lines of poetry, "God and a Soldier all Men don't adore, In Time of War, and not before.

When the War's over, and all Things righted, God is forgotten, and the Soldier slighted."

asserts that the regiment has "watched night and day," since its ar-ival, "for the safety and protection of the city and its inhabitants." "The days of the summer, in summer heat, and the severe colds of freezing snowy nights, in winter."—From an original preserved in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

"Whereas It hath been reported to this Board that one Certain William Lish of the said City Carpenter, did yesterday Endeavour to Excite and promote a Riot, to Demolish a Certain House in the Commons: Contiguous to the Work House, the property of this Corporation, and did at the same time treat the Mayor, in a very Insolent & Contemptuous manner, who was attending in the Execution of his Office, Contrary to the said William Lish hath taken to preserve the peace of this Town as a freeman thereof. It is therefore ordered by this Board, that upon Service of a Copy hereof on the said William Lish, be appear before this Board on Thursday next . . . to Shew Cause why he should not be disfranchised for his Conduct aforesaid."—M. C. C., VII. 20.

The mayor informs the common council that some of the inhabitants have requested him "to order the House belonging to this Corporation formerly in the possession of John Harris deceased, for the Commons to be pulled down as the same is now occupied by a Number of disorderly Soldiers." The board orders "that the said House be not pulled down as Requested, but that the same be Let to such Gentlemen, professors of Physick & Surgery as have the management & Care of the Hospital, as soon as they shall be ready to receive the Same, upon such Conditions and Terms, as shall hereafter be made by this Board, and such Sons who now occupy the same (Severally of which being dangerously ill) do Continue therein, no longer, until the said professors of Physick and Surgery shall be ready to receive and take possession of the same."—M. C. C., VII. 201-2.

The John Harris property became the site of the last liberty pole erected by the Sons of Liberty. —See Feb. 3.

Mayor Hicks issues the following proclamation "To the Inhabitants of this City:

"Whereas some unhappy Differences have lately happened between the Inhabitants and the Soldiers [see Jan. 19]; I am authorized to inform the Public, That to avoid the like for the future, Orders are issued to the General, That no Soldiers are to go out of their Barracks, or Duty, unless under the Command of a commissioned officer, who is to be answerable for the orderly Behaviour of the Soldiers, and take Care that they offer no Insult to the Inhabitants; and this Order will be strictly observed till the Amity and Friendship that should subsist among the King's Subjects, is restored; and in Case the Citizens abuse them, they are to endeavour to discover the Offenders, and report them to a Magistrate, that they may be proceeded against according to Law. If the Soldiers are not conducted in this manner, the Inhabitants are not to be alarmed, as it will be in Consequence of the above-mentioned Orders. This Precaution it is hoped, will prevent further Evils, restore Peace, and quiet the Minds of the People; and it is expected, that the Inhabitants, on their Farts, will promote every good Intention to preserve Peace and good Order."—From an original preserved in the N. Y. Hist. Soc., reproduced in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Quarterly Bulletin, Jan., 1820.

"The Town has been greatly disturbed for sometime past by the Gift of the Bletting Money or Necessaries for the Troops in Barracks & the Attack & Destruction of the Liberty Pole & sundry inflammatory Papers & a Compact not to employ Soldiers have been printed which occasioned Riots and yesterday a Council was called . . . . I advised a diligent Enquiry by the Magistrates or rather the issuing of a Commission of Oyer & Terminer if the Spirit of Rioting was quittable—If not that the General should be applied to for a Removal of the Regiment as the only Means to preserve Peace when the Ordinary Powers of the Law failed. The Paper of the Day agt the Troops was much censured. I joined in it—They talked of attacking the Printer—I advised that the Attorney General's Opinion be first taken and then that we should consider the Spirit of the Times & put the Question oubien as the Liberty of the Press might be conceived to be attacked —In the Result it was determined to do nothing at present the Mayor concerning that all the Tumult was subsiding & that it was not expedient to make Enquiries after the Rioters nor to issue a Commission of Oyer & Terminer— I found that the final were much agt any Inquiry or the Application to the General before the Mayor came in towards the Breaking up & yet proposed Nothing instead of their own Peace—Major Woodruff for letting the Peace care itself & the Sons of Liberty get a Dream to the Mayor upon an Alarm he would not turn out in Aid of the Magistrates—I told him every good Subject was obliged to assist in the Suppression of a Riot & hinted at his peculiar Obligations on the Score of his Office and Oath, but he said he would keep out of Harps's Way—"That if the People were mad enough to contend with the Soldiers he would not appear."—Whit. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

The assembly resolves "that the account of sundry officers of the 16th Regiment . . . for expenses incurred for private lodgings, be followed."—Assem. Jour. (1766-70), 100. William Brownjohn, a chemist, in a petition to the common council, states that he owns "two Lots of Land and Houses on Hunters Quay in this City the one at the Corner of Wall Street and the other adjoining to that;" that he joined with other owners of lots on Hunter's Key in a petition for a grant of water lots fronting their respective lots, and that grants have been made to the other owners to the extent of 1.75 feet into East River but not to him, owing, as he understands, "to a desire of the Corporation to make a Wet Dock there." He states that "it is impracticable to make a Wet Dock there, within the above Extent, owing to the Recess of the Water." He therefore asks a grant of the water lots fronting his lots—From the original petition, in metal file No. 6, city clerk's record-room. See M. C. C., VII: 201, 247. The petition was granted Dec. 17—ibid., VII: 515-522.

Because "the Bar Iron exposed to Sale in this Colony is of-times of a very bad Quality and not well manufactured, by means whereof the purchasers are deceived and the Exporters of the same suffer Great Losses and the Credit thereof is much lessened at foreign Markets," the legislature passes "An Act to prevent Frauds in Bar Iron exposed to Sale in this Colony."—Col. Laws N. Y., V: 65-66. For a similar reason, an act is passed, at the same time, "for the Inspection of Soak Leather in the City of New York."

—ibid., V: 71-73.

The assembly resolves to "make provision to the amount of two hundred pounds, for defraying the expense of erecting the statue of his majesty, and railing the same in, when it arrives here."—Assem. Jour. (1769-70), 105-4. See May 9. This money was paid Jan. 8, 1772 (q. s.). Cf. Nov. 32.

Shortly after this date, the day on which the assembly was prorogued, "G. B. (?) issued his address "To the Public." He began by saying: "Few are ignorant that the Assemblymen of this County, were unanimous about it, and determined that the County of New-York, West-Chester, Queens and Richmond, for the Support of the Clergy," (see Sept. 23, 1693). He then reviewed the proceedings in the assembly when attempts were made to pass bills to exempt Non-Episcopalians from contributing to this tax (see April 6 and Nov. 36, 1693), and attacked the members of that house for purposely delaying the progress of the bills. In conclusion, he published a copy of "An Act to exempt the Inhabitants of the Counties of West-Chester, New-York, Queen's and Richmond, from any Taxations for the Support of the Ministers of Churches to which they do not belong," in order that "the Counties concerned and the whole World may know the Scope of this Bill, and judge of the Conduct of both Houses."—From the broadside (without date) in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

Jacobs van Zandt, Isaac Sears, Joseph Bull, Joseph Drake, and Alexander McDougall. The Measures—Morris and the Directors are determined to erect another Liberty pole, as a Memorial of the Repeal of the Stamp Act. They consider no place so proper for it, as that on which the other pole stood, But if contrary to all Expectation the Corporation Should not be disposed to Give leave to have it Basis, the Directors Unanimously Conceive that they Cannot have any objection to its being fixed opposite Mr Van Den Berghs near S! Pauls Church, a Small distance from where the two Roads meet, which we have Reason to suppose will next to the other place be most acceptable.

"If the Board Should not think proper to Grant Liberty for its Erecting, on either of the above places, as in that Case, no monu-

6. They were rejected, and the location of each, is as follows:

1. The first liberty pole was erected May 20 or 21, 1766 (p. v.), in celebration of the repeal of the Stamp Act. It was a "mast erected on the Common," inscribed "to his Majesty, Mr. Pitt, & Liberty;" also referred to as a "pole post," by British soldiers on Aug. 16, 1766 (p. v.). (A fight ensued, resulting, on Aug. 11, 1766, p. v., in the first bloodshed of the Revolution; although the "Battle of Golden Hill," on Jan. 19, 1770, p. v.—over three years later—is usually referred to as the first.)

The precise location of the first pole, "on the Common," (as the record reads), has not been definitely ascertained; although it is clear from available evidence that "the Common" was the ground between the present Broadway and Park Row south of an east-and-west line about fifty feet above the north line of Murray Street, while "the Fields" were above this line. See Pl. 49, Vol. I, and Pl. 40, Vol. IV.

2. The second liberty pole, referred to as a "high post," "Mast or Flag Staff," was erected "in lieu of the other" on Aug. 12, 1766 (p. v.). It was cut down on Sept. 21, 1766 (p. v.).

3. The third liberty pole was erected on Sept. 24, 1766 (p. v.), on "the site of the one that was cut down yesterday." This one was cut down on March 19, 1767 (p. v.).

4. The fourth liberty pole was "immediately erected in its stead," that is, on March 19, 1767 (p. v.). It was "cased below with iron to prevent such another action." This pole withstood repeated attacks on it, until Jan. 17, 1770 (p. v.). Two days later, the hostility between the soldiers and citizens culminated in the so-called "Battle of Golden Hill."

From the context of the foregoing quoted phrases, which are derived from contemporary newspaper and other sources, it is readily seen that the first four poles were on one and the same site.

5. Our knowledge of the fifth and last liberty pole, its history, location, and description, is detailed and complete. The effort of the "Sons of Liberty" to erect this pole was commenced by a few of their leaders,—Van Zandt, Sears, Ball, Drake, and McDougall,—on May 20 or 21, 1766 (p. v.), asking the consent of the common council to erect a pole in one of two locations, either at the place "on which the other pole stood," or, if the corporation would not allow this, then "opposite" Van der Kemp's near St. Paul's Church a small distance from where the other pole stood. The "Liberty Boyl," as it is called, was erected on "the site of the board's opposite both of these locations, they would erect the pole "in the fields on private grounds." The vote of the common council, on Feb. 2 (p. v.), stood nine to five against granting permission to erect the pole on "either of the above places,"—that is, either of the two locations on city property. A letter in the N. Y. Journal of Feb. 8 (see Feb. 2) said that the petition was rejected, not because the board was out of sympathy with the project, but because "it was thought the former Allowance [permission] was sufficient; and . . . that the Corporation did not now give their consent—which, if they had done, might have been thought by some as making themselves Parties to the Act—yet . . . they would not have objected, or been displeased, if the Pole had been erected without any fresh Application to them.

Isaac Sears, in his individual capacity, bought by quickclaim deed, on Feb. 3, 1770 (p. v.), an undivided interest in a plot of ground for the pole "near where the other stood." An examination of records, undertaken by Comptroller William A. Fendergast, and Miss Jennie E. Macarthy, historical expert of the Title Guaranty and Trust Co., who examined it in 1915, revealed the fact that Sears' purchase was an interest in the large block of land which belonged to one John Harris at the time of his death in 1770. This was a plot 248 feet square, with a frontage on the east side of Broadway, the southernly being just north of Murray Street. As was said in the original letter cited, Suffolk County's surveyors, in 1839, as a result of the proposed erection of a new pole, were unwilling to fix it where the other stood. And yet to answer the End, it was necessary it should stand near the same place. The Business was therefore for a while at a standstill, till a Judy Expendit was adopted and erected on a small slip of land, 11 feet wide and 100 feet long, an undivided Right, near the Place where the former Pole stood, was found to be private Property, and immediately purchased for the Purpose.

Inasmuch as the fifth liberty pole was "near where the other stood," the earlier site was not so far south as the post-office, as heretofore generally believed, certainly not so far south as the bronze table erected in the corridor of this building, near its southern entrance, to mark its site.

The "Sons of Liberty" erected their fifth liberty pole, on Feb. 6, 1770 (see supra), on the site of the one erected until Oct. 28, 1766 (p. v.), when removed by the British after their capture of the city in September of that year. On the same spot where this pole stood, there was, erected, on "Flag Day," June 14, 1921, a new "Liberty Pole," with appropriate ceremonies, by the Sons of the Revolution and the N. Y. Hist. Society.—N. Y. Times, June 14, 1921.

On the testimony of one Cummins (see Jan. 8, 1771), James Parker, printer of the Post-Boy, and all his apprentices, are arrested and examined. Their confessions reveal that the broadside of Dec. 16, 1769 (p. v.), was printed in Parker's shop, and that Alexander McDougall was the author. The latter's arrest followed. From a letter of McDougall printed in N. Y. Jour., Feb. 15, 1770. See April 25. Colton wrote to Hillsborough, on Feb. 23, (p. v.), that "One Alexander McDougall is now in Jail."—N. Y. Col. Dict., VII, 269. See also Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV, in N. Y. Pub. Libr., under date of Feb. 7.

A true "Female Friend to American Liberty" presents Capt. McDougall with a fine saddle of tawny, "marked with the important No. 45, in Allusion to the 45th Page of the Votes and Proceedings of our House of Assembly, in which the paper that furnished the Occasion for that Gentleman's Commitment is printed at Length. . . . Most People are of Opinion that his Case is similar to that of Mr. Wilkes, in Instances more important than the No. 45, and even in this相似性, many think there is something providential. Capt. M. Dougall is so warmly espoused, that in the two first Days of his Confinement, he was visited as a true Son of Liberty, by upwards of two hundred of the Friends of American Liberty of all Ranks."—N. Y. Jour., Feb. 15, 1770. See Feb. 14.

This being the forty-fifth day of the year, "forty-five Gentlemen, real Enemies to internal Taxation, by, or in obedience to external Authority, and cordial Friends of Capt. McDougall [see Feb. 7], and the glorious Cause of American Liberty," dine with him on forty-five pounds of beef steaks, cut from a bulk of forty-five, with a view to the future, not only of the undiminished Loyalty, but of the warmest attachment to Liberty, its renowned Advocates in Great Britain and America, and the Freedom of the Press."—N. Y. Post-Boy, Feb. 19, 1770. For the significance of the number 45, see Feb. 16; also, Lamb, Hist. City of N. Y., I: 147; Cf. A. Pl. 49, and pp. 864-65, Vol. III. See also Addenda.

On behalf of the governors of King's College, James Duane and Thomas Jones petition the provincial legislature for leave to lease and demise that part of their land which fronts the North River, to the extent of 200 feet "from the same" for the term of 99 years.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 782.

An announcement in the Journal reads: "Whereas Mr. Abra- ham De La Montaigne was applied to for his House, that the Sons of Liberty in general, might there commemorate the Anniversary of the Revol of the Stamp Act, on the 9th day of March next. But it appearing that his House was engaged for a certain set of Gentlemen . . . . A Number of the Sons of Liberty in this City, were under the Necessity of purchasing a proper House for the Accommodation of all Lovers of freedom on that Day, and for the better and more effectually to Propagate the Common Cause. This is therefore to give Notice, that the House so purchased, is the Corner House in the Broad-Way, near Liberty-Pole, lately kept by Mr. Edward Smith." Montaigne must have let his house to the "friends to Liberty and Trade," for a notice of their meeting there, addressed to the Corporation, was printed in the paper. —N. Y. Jour., Feb. 15, 1770; N. Y. Merce, Feb. 19, 1770. Cf. Man. Com. Coun. (1894), 452. The house purchased by the "Sons of Liberty" was once forcibly occupied by Edward Smith, on the spot where the houses of Liberty now stand. Warren St.—Liber Mortgages, 1: 268, 317 (New York); Stone, Life of Wm. Johnson, II: 312.

The members of the Chamber of Commerce (see April 5, 1768) petition Lieut.-Gov. Colden for a charter.—Col. Recs. N. Y. Chamber of Commerce, 1768-1784, 75-77. For Colden's favourable answer, see 1769.

The Merchants of this City have received many Letters by the Packet, relative to publick Affairs, some affirming that all the Acts we complain of will be repealed soon after the Parliament meets; others asserting the Contrary; but it seems they all agree, the Duty on Tea will not be taken of on any Account.—N. Y. Merc., Feb. 19, 1770.

Colden writes to Hilliborough: "The Session of Assembly ended the 21st of January to general satisfaction, notwithstanding the assiduous endeavours of a party in opposition to Government to embarrass Affairs. A great number of Bills were passed at the Time, none of them of consequence. The American public are not aware of this, except... One entitled "An Act declaring certain persons therein mentioned incapable of being Members of the General Assembly of this Province" [see Jan. 27]... By this Act, the Judges of the Supreme Court, and some other officers of Government were incapable of being elected Members of Assembly. The Council amended the Bill by striking out all the other Officers of Government to which Amendment the Assembly agreed."

"The reasons given for this Bill are: 1st That none of the Judges in Great Britain or Ireland are allowed at the House of Commons.

2nd That in good policy, Legislation and the Execution of the Laws, ought not to be in the same Person.

3rd That in all Elections the Judges must have an improper influence on the Electors.

Lastly: It has been observed, that in former Assemblies where the Judges have had seats, they became attached to, or Leaders of Parties or Faction in the House, this gave a suspicion, that they were often byassed in their Judgement on the Bench, in favour of a party interest, all cause of jealousy of this kind ought to be avoided."—N. T. Col. Disc., VIII: 266-267. This act received the royal veto June 6 (p. 92). This "general satisfaction" with the actions of the late assembly is not shared by "A Freeholder of Liliput," who publishes three letters "to the Majority of the General Assembly of Liliput," denouncing much of their work. Letters "Number II," and "Number III," both without date, are also reprinted in N. Y. Pub. Library. "Number I" is known to exist. The extant letters take particular exception to the disabling act above mentioned, and to the rejection of the bill for electing by ballot (see Dec. 21, 1769). "Your absurdities may be excused," says the writer in letter "Number III," "by the ignorance of their authors, and your blunders pardoned for the mirth they occasion. But when your actions have a more serious tendency, when from ridiculous they become hurtful, they can then no longer be viewed with indifference, or mentioned with contempt. —When you impede the course of justice, when you imprison without proof of guilt, when you rob us of our most valuable rights, and can only found on our happy constitution, the most inconsiderate mechaico will express his displeasure, and the whole people of Liliput declare their indignation."

Colden writes to the Earl of Hilliborough: "In my letter of January I enclosed a printed copy of a libel [see Dec. 16, 1769] directed "To the Betrayed Inhabitants of the City and Colony of New York" with a proclamation I issued... offering a reward of £500 for the discovery of the author. One Alexander McDougall [see Dec. 13] is now in Jail; committed on the oath of the Printer to the House of Correction, as the author and publisher of that libel. He is a person of some fortune, and could easily have found the Bail required of him, but he choose [sic] to go to Jail, and I lyes there inmating M' Wilkes [see Feb. 10] in everything he can. When he comes to his Tryal it will appear what dependence we may have upon the place that places respectable persons in the place openly declare their opinion, that he highly deserves punishment."

"The 16th Regiment now here are ordered to be got ready to embark for Pensacola; and we are told they are to be replaced by the 14th Regiment now in Boston."—N. T. Merc., Feb. 26, 1770. The 16th embarked on March 25—Ibid., March 26, 1770. The transports sailed on March 27.—Ibid., April 1, 1770.

The common council authorizes the payment of £4,161 3s. 4d. for the building of "a Fire Engine House [see Sept. 27, 1769] for this Corporation."—M. C. C., VII: 228.

In a bill rendered to the common council by Hugh Gaine (bearing date of April 26, 1771), is an item of this date for "a plan of the City coloured," at 16 shillings. In a bill rendered by John Watson (bearing date of May 12, 1770), is an item for "a plan of 3d City framing" at five shillings. Another item in the latter bill is for "a large Mogholy Arm'd Chairs Car'd with Compass Backs, Calf skin Bott," at £8. From the original, in file No. 5, in city clerk's record-room.

And when we cannot render Mr. Colden's Administration odious, and breed Dissentions and Animoities amongst the People, and 'frighten the Assembly'... all our Hopes in a future Election will be blasted."—From an original, without date, in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

The "Boston Massacre" occurs.—Boston Gaz., March 12, 1770.

The news was first published in New York on March 19 (p. 50). Pres. John Cruger reports to the Chamber of Commerce that Colden, on receiving their petition (see Feb. 13), said: "I think it a good Institution, and will always be glad to promote the Commercial Interests of this City, and shall deem it a peculiar happiness that a Society so beneficial to the General good of the Province is incorporated during my administration."—Col. Recs. N. Y. Chamber of Commerce, 1768-1784, 78-79. The charter was granted on March 13 (p. 50).

Several members of the Marine Society (see Nov. 13, 1769) petition for a charter of incorporation.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 783.

This was granted on April 12 (p. 76): Charter of the Marine Society (1788), 3.

Fire starts in a large wooden building, the meeting-place of St. John's Lodge of Masons, in Scotch St. (a name sometimes applied to Ann St.—see June 29, 1772). The inhabitants, "with their usual Alertness on such Occasions, as well as many soldiers and sailors, tried to extinguish the flames, but found their efforts much baffled by the Narrowness of the Streets, a scarcity of Water, being far from any of the Rivers, and the great Difficulty of getting to the Fire." The flames soon extended across the street, and the fire "burnt with great Fury, carrying every Thing before it, being all Wooden Houses." Finally, after seventeen houses in the vicinity had been completely destroyed, the fire was "happily subdued."—N. Y. Merc., March 11, 1770; N. Y. Jour., March 15, 1770.

Dr. Peter Middleton, John Jones, and Samuel Bard, having petitioned for a charter of incorporation for the proposed hospital (see May 16, 1776), are permitted by the provincial council to submit a draft of it for the board's approval.—Gaz. Min. (MS.), 371 (Albany). See May 29, 1776.

A royal charter (see March 6) is granted to the Chamber of Commerce.—Col. Recs. N. Y. Chamber of Commerce, 1768-84, 89-97. This instrument is on record in the office of the secretary of state, Albany, as well as in the minutes of the Chamber. The original has been lost. On Nov. 28, 1784, the secretary of state, M'Pros, wrote to Hou. Charles King: "In my search for objects of interest connected with the past history of the Chamber my attention was naturally directed to the original charter of 1770, which I knew had been in existence some few years previously. Every effort in my power was made at the time, and has been continued since, but as yet without success, for the recovery of this interesting link in our historical chain.

"There is a bit of history, also, connected with this old charter. Some five-and-twenty years ago, Admiral Walton, of the British Navy, ascended by inheritance to the property of his family in this city; and on taking possession, among a vast accumulation of miscellaneous lumber, boxes, baskets, and chests, articles of domestic economy, dragon saddles and Hessian muskets, in the spacious attic of Walton House in Pearl street, was found the original charter of the Chamber of Commerce. It was very large, about three feet in width, with the massive waxen seal of the crown, six inches in diameter, attached, and the whole carefully ensnared in tin and enclosed in mahogany. The Admiral immediately made known the discovery to Mr. Fintard, who took possession of the document.

"Secretary Van Dam was known to have been an intimate friend, probably a relative, of the Walton family. William Walton had once been President of the Chamber. These facts may account for the situation in which the charter had been found, and we must therefore believe that it was deposited in the recesses of Walton House for the period of nearly half a century."

"On the night of the great fire, the mahogany case containing the charter, was seen in the room occupied by the Chamber at the Exchange. As everything portable was supposed to have been removed from the building before its destruction, some attempt was made to recover the old charter. In this, I regret to say, I have been disappointed. If it was saved from the fire, it has ever since been so carefully guarded that the most diligent research has not been successful in tracing its whereabouts. Like the old seal [see May 5, 1775], it may yet turn up in some unexpected manner, and then our memorials of an existence of four-score years will be complete."—Ibid., 326-27, 371. See April 2, 1771.

The anniversary of the repeal of the Stamp Act, falling on Sunday, is celebrated on Monday at the tavern of Abraham de la Montagne, Broadway, south of Warren St., at Samuel Waldron's at the L. I. ferry, and at Capt. Beckors, (where Mr. Jones and Smith formerly lived, within a few doors of Mr. Montaunay's), on Warren St. and Broadway. This latter tavern was now known as Hamden Hall. At Montagne's house, 210 "of the principal Inhabitants of the City, Friends to Liberty and Trade, dined on an elegant Entertainment which was prepared for them."—N. Y. Jour., March 22, 1770. Montagne's tavern was at the present 251-254 Broadway, formerly Bardin's "King's Arms Tavern," while Jones' and Smith's was Hamden Hall, on the corner of Warren and Broadway. A meeting at Hamden Hall is given in the issue of the Journal for March 29: "A Company of about 500 Gentlemen, Freeholders and Freemen of this City (real Friends to Liberty) met at the former, in order to celebrate that memorable Deliverance from the Chains which had been forged for the Americans, by a designing and despicable Ministry. A decent and plentiful Entertainment was provided. Before they sat down to Dinner, the Company nominated Ten of their Number to dine with Capt. McDougall, at his Chamber in the New-Go, where a suitable Dinner was also provided: After both Companies had dined, a Committee was appointed to send two Barrels of Beer and what was left of the Dinners, to the poor Prisoners, in the Gaol, which was received with great Thanks." Forty-five "loyal and patriotic Toasts were drank," forty-five being at this time a particularly popular number both in England and America among the devotees of liberty; it having been the number of Willoughby's Condensed paper (see Pl. 4, Vol. III). One of these toasts, probably with the company at Montagne's in mind, was "Unanimity among all the Sons of Liberty in America, and Perseverance in the glorious Cause." In the same issue of the Journal, an anonymous writer declares that one of the "dine at Hamden Hall" was regarded by most of the gentlemen composing the Chamber of Commerce as "insignificant, self-conceited," and "utterly incapable of writing the scandalous Paper laid to his Charge."—Henry Bicker, Landlord of Hamden Hall, replied with an affidavit that Mar. to the best of his knowledge 500 dined at his house on March 19.—N. Y. Jour., Apr. 5, 1770. The critic replied with a reiteration of his statement that there were only 126 at Hamden Hall, and that he had not only "counted noses," but had confirmed this number "by a secret conference with the cook."—Ibid., Apr. 2, 1770.

In the meantime, while this petty bickering was going on, the two parties of the "Sons of Liberty," soon to unite in one common cause, the tavern of Henry Bicker was attacked by British soldiers who had been attempting to cut down the "Liberty Pole."—See Mar. 24, 1770.

The news of the "Broadway massacre," which occurred on March 5, is published in New York.—The N. Y. Merc., March 19, 1770. A fuller account was printed, on March 26, in the supplement of Parker's N. Y. Post-Boy. See also Winsor, Nar. & Crit. Hist. of Am., VII, 49, 85.

Smith writes that, at a council meeting, "A Draft was now proposed for a Charter to the Seamen under the Name of the Marine Society & it was said to be in pursuance of a Petition preferred on the 7 Ins[4] [p. 4] & that they had Leave to offer a Draft . . . on reading it we committed it . . . I moved this to gain Time for thinking these Measures will be of public Utility but rather increase the Wantonness of the Populace."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV. See April 12.

"A number of soldiers went, in Indian fashion, with their tomahawks, and carry away the top-most and vane of the liberty pole, but are frustrated in their design by a few young men. When the citizens heard of this, 14 or 15 Persons came up to the Green, and going to the Pole, were there surrounded by about 40 or 50 Soldiers, with their Cutlasses drawn upon them, 4 or 5 of them resist to the thousand of Mr. Bicker (Hamden Hall), and were followed by part of the Soldiers, who immediately called out for the Soldiers from the Barracks; upon which they were joined by a very considerable Body that came over the Barrack Fence." While they were trying to force the doors and windows, some of the people who were in the house, got out by the back way and ran to alarm the citizens, "The Chapel Bell was immediately rung, upon the hearing of which, the Soldiers retreated precipitately." Thereafter the pole was "nightly guarded" by the inhabitants until the transports sailed, so that the soldiers "were disappointed in effecting their Designs against it, altho' they positively swore they would carry off Some Part of it with them."—N. Y. Post-Boy, April 2, 1770.

"Ordered that the Reverend Doctor Auchmuty together with Mr. David Clarkson, Mr. Marston, Mr. Desbornes and Mr. Kissam or any three or more of them be a Committee to apply for and take a Petition, to be presented to the Committee of Safety, and thereupon to be ad- latedy ordered to be granted to this Corporation by the Governor and Council [see Feb. 6, 1767], and to wait upon the Several Officers of Government through whose hands the said Petition must pass and agree and settle with them with respect to their respective Departments; that the best manner they can And do believe said Committee have full power to Transact and do every thing that they shall think expedient and necessary for the Setting and Improving the said Tract of Land in such manner and upon such Terms as they shall think best and most for, the Advantage of this Corporation."—Trin. Min. (MS.). Concerning the result of such extensive grants, see Feb. 6 and 36, 1767.

A proposal to insure individuals against losses by fire originates at a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce. It is said to be "the desire of a number of the Inhabitants of this City to have their Estates Insured," and it is proposed "that the Chamber take into consideration a plan that may serve to good a purpose."—Col. Recs. of N. Y. Chamber of Commerce, 82. At subsequent meetings, May 2 (p. 99) and June 25 (p. 101), 1770, consideration was postponed, and no such organization was perfected in the colonial period. The first fire insurance company was established June 15, 1772 (p. 96.)

The common council authorizes the payment of £5 "for divers Quantities of liquor Delivered out at the late fire to those who appeared to stand Greatly in need of the Same being very Cold and Wett &c."—M. C. C., VII: 211. This is the first record of expenditures for fire insurance, for such a plan McDougall Hall was requested to take off and appear subsequently. —Ibid., VII: 213, 260, 1048: VIII: 14, 15, 24, 1771.

Samuel Francis, at Vauxhall Gardens, advertises for sale a "Couple of grand looking glasses, two carved frontispieces for a fire place, and five very elegant geraniums."—N. Y. Merc., Apr. 9, 1770. Van shell Gardens were earlier known as the "Old Bowling Green." See March 29, 1778.

The king assents to the repeal of the Township Act, leaving a tax merely on tea.—Ann. Reg. (1770), 91; Stat. of N. Brit., VIII: 108-

"A charter is given to certain persons, constituting them a corporation under the title of "The Marine Society of the City of New-York, in the Province of New-York, in America." This society was formed (see Nov. 13, 1769) for the purposes of "improving maritime knowledge, and for relieving indigent and distressed (and particularly orphan children of deceased) masters of vessels."

A four-page broadside is issued, entitled "No 3. The Doughhut on Liberty. Humbly inscribed to the Grand Jury for the City and County of New-York." This commends McDougall's address of Dec. 16, 1766 (p.s.), and his later conduct. The writer claims that McDougall's refusal to give bail was "A weak Artifice, to acquire Popularity; exhibit himself as a Spectacle of Compassion; and countenance the Cry of Oppression." He contends that, since the members of the Old Police Assembly were chosen by the people, it is the duty of all good citizens to uphold the decisions of the house, and not to make it "the Subject of Sorn and Contempt." The broadside ends thus: "It must not be understood, that the conduct of the Assembly is admitted to have been in the least degree reprehensible; they did their duty, and consulted the State, and true Interest of the Colony. If any differed in Opinion, they were to blame themselves, that they did not, when the Requisition was under Debate, present their Instructions..." All I now aim at is to show, that even if they had erred, and the Assembly must not be just Exceptions; Mr. M'Dougall is not the less culpable; and that his Prosecution, is no Invasion of the Liberty of the Press; or of any Privilege of the People; on the contrary, the Honour, Interest, and Safety of the Community, call aloud for his Punishmet, if he is really the Publisher."—From phototext (from an original in the Library Co. of Philadelphia) in the N. Y. Pub. Library (Evans, 1865-8).

Yesterday the Packet arrived—a Council now met—The Kings Dissallowance of the Act to emit $120,000 passed on 5 Jan last [p. 46] was read & ordered to be published—I ask'd Colen's the Reason—he read the Secretary of State's Letter of the 17 Feb but would not put it on the Minutes—it was vastly seere & asserted the Act to be contrary to the Statute ag. Paper Money & the Kings Instructions and his Conduct very excezbable as a similar Bill was under the Royal Consideration—it reminded him of the Danger he exposed himself to from the Terms of the Statute—Indebtedness (as it was) was in Twenty years his Company could have been in the same state. My Voice at the Exence of his Instructions—testified that his Majesty was pleased in the Grant of Money to the Troops & intimated that a Motion would be made to give Us Leave to strike Money by Act of Parliament."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV, p. 30.

Abraham Montague opens a tavern at the present Nos. 253-254 Broadway, where Edward Bardin had kept the King's Arms.—N. Y. Jour., April 20, 1769; cf. Libr. Deeds, CCXV; 170. See also June 21, 1765; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 797-80.

The "Gentlemen of the English Nation, residing in this City, and those descended from English Families," give an entertainment to Gen. Gage and Lieut.-Gov. Colbin, "in Commemoration of St George, their tutelar Saint." The day is celebrated "in true Mirth and perfect Harmony, every Heart being delighted with the festive revival of a Custom much neglected in this City."—N. Y. Jour., May 30, 1770.

Bolton, who has been associated with Sigel for three years as a joint owner of the respectable Indian Bust of Broad and Pearl Streets (see Jan. 8, 1767), announces his removal to the New York Arms.—N. Y. Jour., April 19; N. Y. Merc., May 7, 1770. Under Bolton the Province Arms, or City Tavern, which stood at the present No. 115 Broadway, seems to have enjoyed its usual patronage. It was the meeting-place of a "newly benedicted Order of St. Patrick" on June 18, 1770 (ibid, June 11, 1770), and of St. George's Society in 1771 (ibid, Apr. 24, 1771); here various other entertainments of note were given during the short period of Bolton's occupancy. Nevertheless, Bolton appears to have been unsuccessful, and had given up the house before Nov. 11, 1771 (p.s.), when Robert Hull announced that he would "open" the tavern in Broadway "lastly kept by Richard Bolton." Hull maintained the house, which was almost always designated as Hull's Tavern, until 1778, when he left New York. Bolton, after notifying the public of his removal to the New York Arms on Broadway, offers the house he occupies for rent for two years from May 1. He states that "most of the Rooms are new painted, paper'd, & c.," and that the house "will be found well adapted for a Merchant."—N. Y. Jour., Apr. 19, 1770. This was the last New York House that had been removed to Philadelphia. No one seems to have occupied the house after Bolton's departure until Sept. 20 (p.s.), when Francis himself re-opened it, after having fitted up the tavern, as he announced, in the "most genteel and convenient Manner."—Ibid, Sept. 13, 1770.

The provincial council issues a warrant for payment to Michael Cummings a reward for discovering the publisher of the paper signed "Son of Liberty."—Col. Coun. Min., 481. See Feb. 7.

Anticipating the arrival of the statue of the king (see Feb. 6, 1771), the provincial authorities request the common council to permit the erection of the same in "some part of the Bowld Bowg Green, fronting the fort." Permission is given by unanimous vote.—M. C. Co., VII: 212-13. The statue arrived on June 4 (p.s.), and was set up on Aug. 16 (p.s.). An appropriation for its erection has been made on last Dec. (p.s.).

The common council authorizes the payment of £736 "for nine Speaking Trumpets, Sunday Lamp frames &c. made for the use of this Corporation," and the payment of £5191114 "for the loss of 58 palms delivered out at the late fire at Lambert Garrison's and for Brandy and Genesius delivered out at the fire in Scoth Street [see March 8] to Sundry people who appear'd to stand Greatly in need of it."—M. C. Co., VII: 213.

Archibald Kennedy presents a petition to the common council claiming that "he is entitled to a Certain Message and Lott of Ground in the City of New-York in the Street called the Square [Hanover Square—Pl. 49, Vol. I],... and also the Dock in the Rear thereof." As he is desirous of carrying out a dock from his present boundary into the East River, he requests a grant of the "Soil and water" from his ground into the river. His petition is granted, and the clerk is ordered to prepare a draft.—M. C. Co., VII: 214-15. The grant was sealed and signed on Sept. 14.—Ibid, VII: 219.

A news item in the Post-Boy reads: "It being publicly known here, that Nathaniel Rogers (one of the Boston Merchants who has all along refused to come into the Non-Importation Agreement) was in Town today suspected of being necessitous and short of money. Visitors, visiting this City, to use his Endeavours to prevail on the Merchants here, to break thro' and put an End to their Agreements; his Effigy was exhibited (last Thursday Evening) hanging on a Gallows, with Labels on the Back and Breast of it expressing his Crime. It was attended by some Thousand Spectators, who after parading through Part of the City went from the Coffee-House to his Lodgings, about 9 o'Clock, in order to pay their Respects to himself, in which they were disappointed, as he didn't out of Town and had not yet returned. They then proceeded through several of the principal Streets to the Common, where the Effigy and Gallows were committed to the Flames, amidst the joyful Acclamations of the People, who immediately after dispersed. ... About 12 o'Clock, a Number of Persons call'd at his Lodgings again... and left a Letter which was soon after forwarded to him; upon the Receipt of it... he immediately ordered a Servant, about 2 o'Clock in the Morning to bring out his Carriage and Baggage, and decamped for Boston." The following is a copy of the letter: "Whereas you have hitherto acted in opposition to your Fellow Merchants of the Town of Boston... and as you have by such, your infamous Conduct, rendered yourself an object to the Respectable Inhabitants of this City; a great Number of them called at your Lodgings this Evening to know the Reasons for Your Conduct in this Matter; and as they had not the Pleasure of seeing you, they take this opportunity to inform you, that it is their Pleasure you depart this City within Twenty-four Hours from this Time, or you may depend upon being visited in a more disagreeable Manner, by..."—The Sons of Liberty.—N. T. Post-Boy, May 14, 1770; N. Y. Merc., May 14, 1770.
THE Iconography of Manhattan Island

1770 also, N. Y. Col. Doc., VIII: 216. "The Dying Speech Of the May Effigy of a wretched Importer, which was exalted upon a Gibbet, and afterwards committed to the Flames, New York, May 10, 1770," is the curious caption of a broadside printed in the N. Y. Pub. Library. Another broadside, without date, from the pen of "Brutus" (see Jan. 18) "To the Free and Loyal Inhabitants of the City and Colony of New-York," is the purpose of the cooperation of merchants, mechanics, and "the virtuous ladies of other Ranks," in the maintenance of the "Non-Importation Agreement," concludes with "Of ye Betrayers of the glorious Cause, remember the Boston Importer, Rogers, I say, remember him and treat him as friendship from broadside in N. Y. Pub. Library.

15 "A Son of Liberty" issues a broadside headed "The Salvation of American Liberty. To the Public." He traces the political history of the colonies since the imposition of the stamp duties and shows the growth of the non-importation agreement. He argues that a strict adherence to this agreement is the only weapon the colonists have to force Parliament to repeal the tax on tea in addition to the duties on paper, glass, etc. (see April 14).—From a photostat (made from an original in the Library Company of Philadelphia) in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

Colden informs Hilliborough that "The Merchants in this Place and in Philadelphia have under consideration, whether to import goods from Great Britain or not," but he adds: "The party in opposition to the present administration join with the people of Boston in measures to prevent importation." After mentioning the attack on the Boston importer (see May 10), Colden continues: "I believe it is of no particular consequence what will be the future sign of the people in this province. (I otherwise I believe it would have been prevented)—The parties are much exasperated against each other, I hope the public peace will be preserved, and the issue will be favorable to the Government."—N. Y. Col. Doc., VIII: 214-15.

16 For a non-importation agreement are requested to meet at the Exchange, on May 18, "to consider of a Letter received from Philadelphia, relative to the Non-Importation Agreement and as it is a Matter of great Consequence, it is hoped that every Subscriber will punctually attend."—From a photostat (made from an original in the Library Company of Philadelphia) in the N. Y. Pub. Library (Evans, 1778).

17 The governors of King's College again petition the common council, as they did on Jan. 7, 1767 (M. C. G., VII: 51-52), for the water lots frontal their ground in the West Ward, free of any question. They state that the East is daily wasting away, and it is necessary to improve these water lots without delay. In case the board has reason to alter their former "indulgent Sentiments" in favor of this projected improvement, the petitioners ask for a grant of these water lots 200 feet in the river, "on such moderate Terms and quit Rents as may with Confidence be Expected by the proprietors." Sending a petition of a public nature to any body who have the power and means thus to Contribute to its promotion, without Charge or Expense to themselves." The petition is granted.—Ibid., VIII: 215-16. Drafts of these water lots were shown to the board by the city clerk on June 25, and approved (Ibid. VIII: 217-218). Sending of a petition to the governor on Aug. 16 (p.v.)—Ibid.: 226. On Dec. 5, a committee of the college governors formally thanked the common council.—Ibid., VIII: 248.

18 A petition from the grandchildren of Jacob Boden, one of the original grantees mentioned in the grant of Hunter's Key, states that "the said Jacob Boden, in his last Will and Testament, May devised unto Hendrickus Boden (the father of the said Petitioners) the House & Ground on Rotten Row situated at present between the houses of David Provost and Captain Kennedy. The petitioners, being brothers with the said Jacob Boden, request a grant of the water lot "adjoining their upland, on the same Conditions the other Water Lots there have been granted." The petition is granted.—M. C. G., VII: 217-18. The "Engrossed Grant" was signed by the mayor on March 1, 1771.—Ibid., VIII: 268.

19 A broadside is published in the city hall in response to an advertisement that was posted in public places and carried through the city. "The present alarming Crisis," reads the notice, "renders it necessary for the Inhabitants of this City and County to be convened, in order to deliberate on Measures to support the Liberties of the Country, which have been invaded by a tyrannical Ministry. This is therefore to give Notice to the Friends of Liberty of all Ranks, that a Meeting for the above salutary Purpose, is to be held this Evening, (being Wednesday) at 6 o'Clock, at the City Hall, where a Matter of the utmost Importance to the People of this colony is to be communicated, and deliberated upon. . . . Every Friend to his Country is requested to attend." At this meeting the merchants of Newport were accused of violating the "Non-Importation Agreement" and were declared enemies of the liberty of North America. It was resolved to have no trade with the merchants of Rhode Island until they take effect to abide by the above agreement and it was also resolved to try to influence the other colonies to abandon Rhode Island trade. "Such Rhode Island boats as are in port are desired to depart within twenty-four hours without unloading any of their cargo. Goods imported from Glasgow are to be exported to Great Britain." It was further resolved "That we will, to the utmost of our Power, by all legal Means, preserve the Non-Importation Agreement inviolate in the City and Colony, until the Act aforesaid is totally repealed; and that we will not buy any Goods, from any Person or Persons who shall transgress that salutary Agreement, and as such will use our utmost Influence to prevent others from purchasing Goods from them."

The committee of merchants resented the action taken at the above meeting, and published an advertisement to the effect that the meeting was called without the knowledge of the committee appointed to inquire into the importation of goods and that resolves were passed "on a Matter settled the Evening before to the entire Satisfaction of the Person chosen for that Purpose; by which irregular Proceeding, they considered themselves no longer a Committee." The inhabitants were requested to meet at the Coffee House next day to choose another committee. At a meeting that day they agreed that the committee and its fullers deliberation of the office, and they were given a vote of thanks for their "upright Conduct, in supporting the Non-Importation Agreement; which the Inhabitants of this Province are determined strictly to adhere to."—N. T. Jour., June 7, 1770. See June 11.

19 "Ordered . . . A Committee to Cause the Several Streets on the Church Lands to be regulated and paved . . ."—Trin. Min. (M.S.).

Simon Johnson informs the consistory of the Dutch Church that he has received from England "a Clock with all its appurtenances for the North Church." This he offers as a gift "to be hung in the tower thereof." He is thanked, and a committee is appointed to receive the gift.—Eccles. Rec., VI: 4185.

President Cooper of King's College having applied in London June to the lords of trade for the privileges of a university for the college, they answer, asking him to call a fuller consideration of the matter; when they shall have received data to be sent over by Dr. Cooper on his return to America.—N. Y. Col. Doc., VIII: 296-98. See, further, Aug. 4, 1774.

The "Britannia" has arrived with statues of George III and William Pitt (see June 4, a picture of a large handsome Bell with its appurtenances," a gift of Simon Johnson to the Reformed Protestant Dutch Church (see May 30).—N. Y. Post-Boy, June 4, 1770. See June 25 and Aug. 16.

An act declaring certain persons therein mentioned (capable of being members) to be a general assembly (see Jan. 27) receives the royal veto.—Col. Hist. N. Y., 1776, II: 786.

A broadside, entitled "The Speech of the Statue of the Right Hon. William Pitt, Earl of Chatham, To the Virtuous and Patriotick Citizens of New-York," is published. It reads: "After a tedious passage over the Atlantic, I am at last arrived in this Land..."
June 1770 of Liberty [see June 4]. My own merit out of the question, I imagine the respect you have for my mettle compassion, will induce me a welcome reception amongst you. Sons of Liberty, foes to every foreign Importer, disinterested Merchants, Guardians of the Liberties of America, I call, and am friendly voice—Listen attentively to the words that shall proceed from my marble mouth, and treasure them up in your unfeeling hearts—I have bellowed for you both in the lower and upper house of the British Senate until my guts are worn to filthoffings, and the extremities of my body, thro' the excruciating pain of the gout, are petrified to stone—Your views and mine have been always similar. The distress of my country was the occasion of my emerging from my original obscurity—had England never bled I had never been a Peer—had the Highland Thane never been a prime minister, I had never been a patriot.—Be advised by me to take care of your own interest, and be convinced from my experience, that the most successful fishing is carried on in troubled waters.—Let the mechanics cry punic faith, take no notice of them. Let the Plebeians murmur, and if the French and Indians are now too pacific to take off their scalps, you can stare them, which will answer the same end.—Be courageous my friends, Does not hemp grow in your country, and is not my statute for ever with you? I shall say more when properly fixed upon my pedestal” (see Sept. 7).—From a photostat in the N. Y. Pub. Library (E. R. S.).

The common council grants permission to the inhabitants of Montgomery Ward and of the Out Ward “to fall up the slip adjoining the Lott of Anthony Shackerly on one side and the Lott of Peter Earl on the other side, so far as to Range with Cherry Street to the Amherst Line, Vol. I., C. Pl. 2.

A number of merchants and mechanics call upon the committee appointed (see March 13, 1769) to inspect into the importation of goods. It is apparent that they are not in sympathy with the views of the citizens who met on May 30 (p. 204), because they request that the “sense of this city should be taken by subscription, whether we should by our non-importation agreement, in consequence of which a meeting was called the same evening— and persons appointed to go through the different wards, and to each Inhabitant propose the following questions. Do you approve of a general importation of goods from Great-Britain, except Tea and other articles which are or may be subject to a duty on importation? Or, Do you approve of our non-importation agreement continuing in the manner it now is? Subscriptions were taken accordingly, when a majority appeared for importation. This agreement shall not take place until we desire the Concurrence of Boston and Philadephia, and receive their Answer by return of Express, when this Agreement should be rejected by the other Colonies, the Sense of this Town will be again taken.”—N. Y. Merc., June 18, 1770. See July 5.

This notice is published in New York: “Whereas a Number of Persons in this City have immediately introduced Goods from Great-Britain, have entered into a Scheme, to frustrate the laudable Endeavours of those Patriotic Merchants, and Inhabitants of this City, who are determined to continue, and support the Non-Importation Agreement, if executed, will not only infamy upon this Colony, (for so base a Denunciation of the other Colonies, at this critical Juncture) but will undoubtedly be the Means of enslaving the whole Continent. It is therefore requested that every Friend to the Liberties of his Country, will not fail to meet in the Fields, at 12 o’clock this Day, in order to fall upon a proper Method to counteract such a Design. The Public are cautioned not to sign any Paper, ‘till a general Determination upon this Matter.”

An agreement regarding importation also bears this date. Whether it was drawn up by the meeting in the Fields, or by an opposing faction, does not appear. The subscribers to this paper promise to import, after Dec. 1, all the articles which are made free of duty by the Act of April 12 (e. n.), but not to import the tea until the tax shall be taken off. “If any Goods shall arrive contrary to this and our former Agreement, they shall be reshipped immediately. And any Persons, Masters of Vessel or others, that shall import, or receive a Consignment of any dutiable Goods shall be deemed Enemies to the Colonies, and treated accordingly.”

The concluding paragraph states: “But that this Agreement shall not take Place until we desire the Concurrence of Boston and Philadephia, and receive their Answer by return of Express, when if this Agreement should be rejected by the other Colonies, the Sense of this Town will be again taken.”

A venduere is advertised to be held on this day at the Merchants’ Coffee House, of “69 Years Lease of the Wind-mill in the Bowery-Lane, near this City, with five Lots of Ground, two Houses thereon, and a good Garden.”—N. Y. Merc., June 11, 1770.

In “Academy of the Liberal Arts,” under the tuition of William Adams, is advertised to open at Harlem on this date.—N. Y. Merc., June 11, 1770.

The 17th regiment of foot is reviewed by Gen. Gage, who is “much pleased with their Behaviour on the Occasion.”—N. Y. Merc., June 25, 1770.

Mayor Hicks communicates to the common council that the city members of the assembly and the governor’s council desire the statue of Pitt [see June 4] to be erected in Wall St., “opposite to the Houses of John Thurman and Evert Banker, nearly where the pump [see July 25, 1829] now stands.” The board gives permission for its location there.—M. C. C., VII. 320.

James Parker dies in Burlington, N. J., and is buried at Woodbridge, N. J.—N. Y. Jours., July 2, 1770. His birthplace was Woodbridge. For a sketch of his life and work, see footnote by O’Callahan in N. Y. Col. Docs., VII. 222. Besides his professional concerns, he was engaged in various public employments, including that of “Comptroller and Secretary of the General Post-Office for the Northern District of the British Colonies.”—Phil., citing Thomas, Hist. of Printing in Am. (1810), II: 121-22.

Virginia writes to a friend in New York: “I am sorry to find the noble Cause of America likely to be betrayed by its pretended Friends with you [see June 14]; can it be possible that Men who have sod’t so high as to attract the Admiration and Esteem of all the virtuous Part of Mankind should at once sink so low as to become the Contempt and Derision of every Indi-vidual!”—N. Y. Jours., July 7, 1770.

A news item in the Journal reads: “We hear that Answers to the Proposals [see June 4] from this City for altering the Non-Importation Agreement of Boston and Philadephia, and receiving their Answer by return of Express, have been received from Boston, Philadelphia, &c. And that they have unanimously and absolutely rejected the said Proposal, being resolutely determined firmly to adhere to the Non-Importation Agreement. The People of Connecticut and New-Jersey have determined to have no further dealings with this place, unless the said Agreement is strictly maintained. And as the Condition upon which the People here sign’d for the proposed Alteration, was that Boston and Philadephia approved and came into the Measure, their refusal puts an End to the Measure proposed, so that the Non-Importation Agreement remains in full force, and will doubtless continue so, till the End is obtain’d.”—N. Y. Jours., July 5, 1770. See July 10.

Lieut.-Gov. Colden, writing to the Earl of Hillsborough, says: “Soon after it was known that the Parliam had repealed the duties on Paper, Glass etc. [see April 18] the Merchants in this place sent to Philadelphia that they might unionly agree to a general importation of every thing except Tea [see June 11]. They at first received a favourable answer, and their agreement to the proposal was not doubted; but soon after a letter was received at Philadephia from a Gentleman that for the Objection of the Quakers in that place, repose the greatest confidence, advising them to persist in non-importation, till every internal Taxation was taken off, this changed the measures of Philadephia [see July 5]; but the principal Inhabitants of this place continue resolved to shew their good faith for the regard the Parliament has in removing the grievances they complained of. As their still remains a restless Faction, who from popular arguments, rumours and invectives, are endeavouring to excite riots and opposition among the lower class of people a number of Gentlemen went round the Town to take the sentiments of Individuals [see July 10]. I am told that

July 1186, among which are the principal Inhabitants, declared for importation, about 500 were neutral or unwilling to declare their agreement; a few of any distinction declared in opposition to it."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 217; broadside issued at New York, Dec. 20, 1775. Alexander Colburn, in a letter to Anthony Todd, secretary to the postmaster-general, on July 11, described the resulting occurrences in New York. "Gen. Gage orders Alexander Colburn to detain the packet for two or three days "in order to give time to the Merchants of the place to make out orders to their Correspondents at home for such British Merchandise as they shall severally want, being on the point of breaking the non-importation agreement."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 220-21. The packet sailed on July 11 (p. 16)."

This notice, "By Order of a Number of the Inhabitants," is issued: "Whereas a small Number of Persons met last Night in a private manner, at the House of Mr. Bolton, in order to nominate Persons to take the Sense of the Inhabitants,—Whether an Importation shall take Place, notwithstanding the Merchants and Inhabitants of Boston, Connecticut, Jersey, and Philadelphia, have, in the most solemn Manner, declared their firm Determination to abide by the Non-Importation Agreement, until the Act imposing a Duty on Tea, is repealed: And as this is a Matter of the utmost Importance to the Liberties of North-America, no private Set of Men have a right to determine on a Mode, by which the Citizens are to give their Voices, on a Question, pregnant with the most dangerous Consequences to the Freedom of Americans.—This is therefore to notify every Friend to this Country of all Ranks, to meet at 12 o'clock at the City Hall, on Monday the 12th Day, (being Saturday) in order to determine, whether the Sentiments of the People is to be taken, and in what Mode, on the above Subject.—In the mean Time, every Friend to the Cause of American Liberty, is cautioned against signing Papers that originated from an Inconsiderable Number of Persons, (made and posted in the Library Co. of Phila.) in the N. Y. Pub. Library (Evans, 1785).

A disturbance arises between the two factions of the Sons of Liberty. This affair was described by a "Citizen," who, from the character of his letter, must have had strong loyalist tendencies, and whose absolute fidelity may therefore be questioned. He says that when a number of gentlemen, appointed to ascertain the sentiments of the citizens respecting the importation of such goods as were subject to duty, went about the city, they were obstructed in their work and abused by citizens who feared the prevailing sentiment would be for importation, and who were averse to this. After insulting and abusing these gentlemen, this contingent met at the city hall and resolved to refuse to accept the opinion of the city. They assembled later at the tavern of Jasper Drake, where they erected a flag as a signal of rendezvous, and, "after carousing and drinking very plentifully, and heating themselves with liquor, to the greatest degree that they could, they sat down in the evening to put their project in execution, carrying with them musick, colours, and staffs, upon which were labels fixed with the inscription of Liberty, and Non-importation, headed by a number of that faction." Elias Desbrosses, a city magistrate, and others, attempted to disperse the mob, who used sticks, clubs, and stones; the magistrates, according to this writer, being unabated except for a few walking sticks.—N. T. Merce., July 25, 1770. Another meeting was held on July 25 (p. 29), at Hamden Hall to protest against the conduct of "those who have broke the Non-Importation Agreement." This protest was led "at the House of Mr. Jasper Drake," where signatures were desired.—Ibid., July 30, 1770.

The same issue of the Mercury contains a thrust at the conservatives in the form of an announcement from the inhabitants of the city of Philadelphia (see July 16). Jasper Drakelinger, noting the aggressive faction of the "Sons of Liberty," was, in 1774 (see Mar. 14), on the East River near Beekman Slip.

A New Yorker writes that a "great majority" of the people in the city have voted to resume importation from Great Britain except in regard to tea (see July 26). He adds: "It is expected they will give strict orders to their correspondents, masters of vessels, and others, not to ship or take on board any tea or other article whatsoever subject to duty for the purpose of raising a revenue in America."—Upcott Coll., in N. Y. Pub. Library.

Determined merchants in New York write to the committee of Philadelphia: "we are directed to acquaint you, that the Sense of our Inhabitants has been again taken (see June 11 and July 3) . . . and as there appeared a great Majority for import- ing every thing, except such Articles as are, or may hereafter be subject to Duty for the Purpose of raising a Revenue in America (see July 7), and, in consequence thereof, many Orders for Goods may be sent by the Packet to sail To-morrow or next Day; we are ordered to give you the most early Advice on any Side. If your Merchants should chuse to send any Orders, they may avail themselves of a Vessel, which, we hear, will be ready to sail from your Port for London, on Saturday next."—N. Y. Jour., July 19, 1770. For answers to this, see July 11.

"An unsuccessful effort is made by loyalists to break the non-importation agreement (after the Legislature of Great Britain had been graciously pleased to repeal the Act relative to laying duties on sundry articles, except that on Tea).—"number of Merchants met at a Tavern and then agreed at all events to send their orders by the Packet to send them goods as usual, except Tea. The Faction being informed of this Resolution published an inflammatory anonymous advertisement the next morning, desiring all the Inhabitants to meet that day at 12 o'clock at the City Hall, where the Faction & their Cabal (such as they were) met accordingly," among them being Isaac Sears and Capt. McDougall. They proposed an opposition to importation. Sears publicly declared that if any merchant, or number of merchants, "preumed to break through the non-importation agreement, they were determined to do the same, he would be his life," etc.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 218-20.

The merchants of Philadelphia write in answer to the letter from New York (see July 19): "We are sorry to find . . . that a Majority of your City have determined to break the Non-Importation Agreement; a Measure which we think will be prejudicial to your own, and the Liberties of all America. —Arguments are now vain—To Posterity, and to your Country, you must answer for the Step you have now taken. You have certainly weakened the Union of the Colonies, on which they so much depend, and will thereby strengthen the Hands of our Enemies, and encourage them to prosecute their Designs against our common Liberty. We cannot forbear telling you, that however you may colour your Proceedings, we think you have, in the Day of Trial, deserted the Cause of Liberty and your Country." A letter from Princetor, dated July 15, stated that when the students received news of the action of New York, they went "in Procession to a Place fronting the College, and burnt the Letter by the Hands of a Hangman, hired for the Purpose; with hearty Wishes, that the Names of all Promoters of such a daring Breach of Faith, may be blasted in the Pages of every Lover of Liberty, and the children of the next Generation will be taught to shake the hand of those who have been the first to sign the agreement and had been very sharp in their reproof of all delinquents, should now 'blush, turn back, and be the first and foremost to break the measure so interesting and important, and thereby enslave all America with themselves."—N. T. Jour., July 19, 1770.

The "Earl of Halifax," packet-boat, sails with the mail for Falmouth. "She carries Orders from the Merchants here for a general Importation of Goods, except the single Article Tea, (on which the Duty laid by the Parliament for raising a Revenue in America remains unpealing) and all other Goods on which a Duty for the like Purpose may be laid. These Orders are in consequence of a late Alteration in the Non-Importation Agreement, which, since that event, the merchants of Boston and Philadelphia have, refusing their consent to, has been made, upon the subscription [see July 7] of about 500 of the Inhabitants, who the Opposite Party, who were against the Alteration, say is but about a fourth Part of the People who had a Right to vote upon this Occasion; but who thinking the Proclamation of the inhabitants ill advised, refused to sign any blank. They intend to publish a protest [see July 25] with their Names subscribed, as also of the principals on the other Side."—N. Y. Merce., July 16, 1770.

Hillsborough, writing to the Earl of Dunmore, says: "As His Majesty's ship Tide, which is desired to carry your Lordship to New York is (I understand) now ready for the Sea, I enclose to Your Lordship His Majesty's Instructions for your guidance and direction in the administration of that Government, and I am to signify... that you should prepare to embark with as much dispatch as possible, to prevent any health and private ships from... I have the satisfaction to acquaint your Lordship that His Majesty hath been graciously pleased to direct that... a salary of £2,000 per annum should be paid to your Lordship from the date of your Commission, out of the Revenue arising in America by the duty upon Tea; and I am to signify... His Majesty's commands, that... the salary of Lord Washington, or any allowance whatsoever from the Assembly of New York... and it is His Majesty's pleasure that a majority of the petitioners... of the Governor of New York be accounted for and paid to your Lordship from the date of your Commission to the time of your arrival..."

A notice in the Post-Boy states that, as the letter from the committee of merchants in New York to those in Philadelphia (July 18) has asserted that the people here are in favour of importation goods, "the friends of the non-importation agreement, submit the following to the public as the most proper judges in a case which concerns American liberty in general... To enable the world to determine whether the resolution to import goods from Great Britain is founded on the opinion of a majority of the inhabitants of this city it will be proper to observe, that... the militia roll of this city, amounts, in the opinion of the friends of the resolution, it is therefore highly probable that at this day, could we be favoured with a [sic] militia act, the number of effectives would amount at least to 3,000. And yet the party will be surprised, when they are informed, that notwithstanding the greatest pains taken to induce numbers to prejudice so important a cause... not more than 794... have acceded to the resolution to import..."
The paper published the names of those for and of those against the agreement—N. Y. Post-Boy, July 23 and July 30, 1770.

In accordance with a printed advertisement for the purpose, a number of inhabitants met at Hanover Hall where a protest against the conduct of those who have broken the non-importation agreement (see July 11) is read, unanimously agreed to, and signed. "It is hoped that the Counties, will likewise Protest; as it will be the only Means to preserve the Reputation of the Colony which has been meannly prostituted to serve the vile Purposes of a Party..."

N. Y. Jour., July 26, 1770.

The following "Card" appears in the Mercury: "The Inhabitants of the City of Philadelphia, present their Compliments to the Inhabitants of New York, and beg they will send them their Old Liberty Pole, as they can imagine they can, by their late Conduct [see July 11] have no further Use for it..."—N. Y. Merc., July 30, 1770.

A committee appointed by the common council "to examine the State of the New Gai & Alms house" reports upon the need of certain alterations and repairs. Among those proposed is "That the west end of the new building is very convenient to erect Cells for the mad people instead of the Cuilpies [Corkers] taken out of the hot house" (see April 7, 1769).—From the original report in the metal file labelled "Filed Papers, 1700-1800," city clerk's record-room.

"Agreeable to a Report filed this day," the board appoints a committee to make the repairs.—M. C. G., VIII: 225.

Inhabitants of the city who live in and near "Hannover Square" state in a petition to the common council that they conceive "The Alley Leasings from Hannover Square to the Shot [see Ph. 42 and 64, Vol. II] as a very Great Nuisance... As the lives of many of the Inhabitants are often endangered in passing through the said alley... they was offering the Horton for rent, hoping of success with the tavern, as had Bardin before him. The latter, on June 13, 1771, opened a tavern at St. Eustatia in the West Indies, "commonly known by the name of Denison's tavern."—N. Y. Merc., July 8, 1771.

Edward Bardin, who "for several Years past kept Tavern in this City," notifies the public that he has "taken the large commodious House, known by the Name of the King's Arms Tavern, near White-Hall, long kept by Mr. Steel, which he will open again as a Tavern" on this date.—N. Y. Jour., Aug. 13, 1770. His stay was brief. Before Dec. 10, 1770, Bardin had left the house and the house was again advertised to be let or sold. It was described as "furnished with excellent fixtures, viz., to the Kitchen a large good copper boiler, well fixed; a new metal perpetual oven, with proper shelves, tables, stoves, &c., a good yard, pump and cistern; also a set of bells well hung; and if left to a tavern keeper, there stands a fine new barn, with a hundred sail-lights in it. For particulars, enquire of the printer, or of Mr. Carleton, in Broad street."—N. Y. Merc., Dec. 10, 1770. Burns succeeded Bardin, but, by May 13, 1771 (p. 4), he was considered "the best and best liked of the host of tavern keepers," having obtained success with the tavern, as had Bardin before him. The latter, on June 13, 1771, opened a tavern at St. Eustatia in the West Indies, "commonly known by the name of Denison's tavern."—N. Y. Merc., July 8, 1771.

The public vendue is advertised to take place on this day at Sept. the "Sign of the Fighting-Cocks, Whitehall."—N. Y. Merc., Sept. 3, 1770. Evidently this tavern sign was removed from the old house on Water St. to the new site some time after 1762. See May 24, 1776.

Dr. John H. Livingston, from the Academy of Utrecht, arrives in New York, and is received by the consistory of the Dutch Church, by whom he has been called to be minister, in the English
The statue of William Pitt, Esq; Earl of Chatham, was fixed on the Pedestal erected for it in Wall-Street, amongst the Accretions of a great number of subscribers. The Statue is of a fine white Marble, the Habit Roman, the right Hand holds a Scroll, partly open, wherein we read, ARTICULUM MAGNA CHARTA LIBERTATUM [the Latin here is open to criticism] the left Hand is Extended, the Figure being in the Attitude of one delivering an Oration. On the South Side of the Pedestal, the following Inscription is cut on a Table of white Marble.

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE

AS A PUBLIC TESTIMONY OF THE GRATEFUL SENSE THE COLONY OF NEW-YORK RETAINS OF THE MANY EMINENT SERVICES HE RENDERED AMERICA, PARTICULARLY IN PROMOTING THE REPEAL OF THE STAMP-ACT

The statue was mutilated by British soldiers on Nov. 9, 1777 (q. v.). After many removals from place to place (see March 7 and July 16, 1786; Aug. 3 and 12, 1811; 1841; 1843; April 26, 1847), the headless trunk was finally presented, on March 1, 1846 (q. v.), to the N. Y. Hist. Soc., where it is still preserved.

14 The committee appointed for building the Pedestal at Peck’s Slip (see June 28, 1768) is empowered "for the preservation of said pillar to build a Block of 20 by 30 feet to the said wharf, by way of a Bulk head, the widest part to front the River," provided the expense does not exceed $130.—M. C. C., 117, 28-29. See Dec. 5.

15 Samuel Francis announces his return to the Queen’s Head Tavern: "As the best Clubs, and the greatest Entertainments in this City, were at the above Taverns, in the Time of the Subscriber, he flatters himself the Public are so well satisfied of his Ability to serve them, as to render the swelling of an Advertisement useless . . ."—N. Y. Jour., Sept. 11; N. Y. Merc., Oct. 1, 1770. Francis first opened the Queen’s Head Tavern in 1767.

16 On Jan. 15, 1768 (q. v.), he had rented the house, first to John Jones (N. Y. Gaz., Nov. 14, 1765), and later to Bolton & Sigel; who had been proprietors since Jan. 12, 1767. After 1770, Francis continued keeping tavern at the Queen’s Head Tavern, till the outbreak of the Revolution. For a brief history of his tavern, see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 978.

Lient.-Gov. Colden writes to Hillsborough: "In my preceding letter [see July 7] I informed your Lordship of the steps that had been taken to dissolve the non-importation agreement in Great Britain, and of the opposition which had been made to it, by that party who have in every other instance endeavoured to embrace the measures of Govr. It gave me particular satisfaction to find this party entirely defeated last week, in a violent struggle to turn out of the Chair of the Bastard Dept. of the City, as he had disingenuously himselfs anyway in favour of Govr."

"I believe your Lordship will be pleased to know that the Members of His Maj’y’s Council, with a single exception, and the Representatives of this City in General Assembly have zealously exerted themselves for a dissolution of the nonimportation agreement in New York . . . Mr Ludlow, whom I appointed one of the Puison Judges of the Supreme Court, in the room of Mr Smith deceased, was very useful. He has many Friends among the Merchants, and they were the foremost in declaring for importation. He has at all times been more a Friend of the People, than a politician, and in my opinion, has been more distinguished on this occasion, than Mr Banyar Deputy Secretary of this Province. He took great pains to excite and preserve a proper spirit in others. He has likewise been very useful to me in every part of my Administration.

He has faithfully discharged every confidence placed in him by Government, and has so well established the opinion of his Integrity and honour for upwards of twenty years past, that every Govr in that time has placed a particular confidence in his advice, Sir Henry Moore only excepted. Perhaps My Lord, you may expect that I mention the persons who have opposed the salutary measures of Government. Though every Man conversant in public affairs, be well assured in his own mind, who are the Leaders and Conductors of the opposition to Govr, yet as they do not appear publicly, but work by their tools of inferior Rank, no legal evidence I can produce against them, I therefore beg to be excused from naming any person."—N. T. Col. Docs., VIII: 248-49.

The common council authorizes the payment of £717/6 for 200 loads of paving Stone furnished for the use of the yard belonging to the New-Goav."—M. C. C., 223.

At some time prior to this date, John Simmons had opened a tavern on Wall St, where he had hung out the "Sign of Sir Peter Warren," the old name of Brock’s Tavern, which stood on the opposite side of the street.—N. Y. Merc., Oct. 8, 1770. Simmons’s tavern, which stood on the north-west corner of Wall and Nassau St., was destroyed for building the City Hall and Church. It is shown on Pls. 105 and 111, Vol. III. The house was frequently used for committee meetings of the common council, of the vestry of Trinity Church, and of independent societies. On Feb. 7, 1784 (q. v.), James Duane was installed mayor of the city at a special meeting held here. The house seems to have acquired the patronage given in former years to Brock’s tavern, which, until 1773 stood on the opposite side of the street (see May 29, 1788). Meetings were still being held at "Simmons Tavern" in 1794 (see March 8). The innkeeper was so partly a man that at his funeral, it is said, the doorway had to be enlarged to admit the passage of his coffin (Smith, N. Y. City in 1789, 120-121; Bayles, Old Taverns of N. Y., 341). After his death his widow continued to keep the house.—Bibl. 341. Later, David King, a well-known tavern-keeper, was for many years proprietor of this little tavern.—Bibl. 455. In 1811, the house was known as "Randolph tavern (King’s No. 9)" in the Columbia, Oct. 31, 1811.

The sundry branches of the city revenue for the past year were: ferry rent £60; dock rent £800; rent of water lots £4,949; land rent £1,741; rent of market stalls £250; licenses £1,051; house rent £80; fines 1115; total £6,591.6. —Jour. of City Chambers, IV: 45.

The Ratter Map" (see 1786) is for the first time advertised, in the Mercury of this date, the insertion reading: "To be sold by the Printer hereof.

"A Plan of the City of New-York, and its Environs, surveyed and laid down in the Year 1766, and with a South Prospect of the same, taken from the Governor's Island. In this Plan is laid in Poole's Hook, Re-Hook, the Long Island Shore, and the Islands in our Bay &c."—N. Y. Merc., Oct. 15, 1770.
The Earl of Dunmore, the new governor, who had been appointed on Jan. 1 (p. v.), arrives in New York.—N. Y. Col. Doc., VIII: 249; N. Y. Jour., Oct. 15, 1770; Assembly Jour. (1770), 1. Smith describes his arrival thus: "The Wednesday following the new Governor John Earl of Dunmore one of the 16 Peers of Scotland. Colden and several of the Council met him just after his landing near the Whiteshill Slip about 4 P M—We shook hands in the Street & accompanied him to the Fort; where we were reintroduced & then went with him to Diner at Bolton."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

Dunmore's commission as governor is published with the usual ceremonies.—N. Y. Col. Doc., VIII: 249; Col. Coun., Min., 483. Describing the occasion, Smith writes: "He took the oaths first—then we—There was a great crowd attending—Without we accompanied him to the Town Hall—The populace shouting all the Way—His Commission was read from the Balcony, where he showed himself to the People—This Day we dined again at Bolton to the Lieut Govr Esqpcence."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

A fortnightly dancing assembly is held at Bolton's assembly-room.—N. Y. Merc., Oct. 22, 1770.

The constitution of the Dutch Church presents an address of welcome to the new governor, the Earl of Dunmore.—Eccles. Rec., VII: 4193.

Advising Gov. Dunmore, prepared by Recorder Jones, is approved by the common council and ordered to be engrossed. It is voted also to grant him "the freedom of this Corporation."—M. C. C., VII: 259-41. The presentation was made on the 29th; the governor replied as follows:

"Governor,"

"I am infinitely obliged to you for this kind Address. I hope to confirm in you the good opinion you Conceive of me, by making the franchises and Immunities of this Corporation the Objects of my particular Care and Attention. With your assistance I am not under the Least doubt of seeing the most perfect opera of Tranquility Reign throughout this City."—Ibid., VII: 245. On Jan. 2, 1771, the common council authorized the payment of £287 for the gold box in which the governor's "freedom" was enclosed; also the payment of £257 7s. 6d. for "an Entertainment... provided by order of this Board, for his Excellency Governor Dunmore."—Ibid., VII: 257.

On Tuesday next, according to Act of Assembly, begins one of the Fairs, to be held in this City, on the first Tuesdays in April and November, yearly, and continuing till the End of the Friday following, being in all 4 Days each, inclusively; when all Persons are authorized to buy and sell all Sorts of Manufactures, Goods, Cloths, Grains, Victuals, Provisions, and other Necessaries, together with all Sorts of Merchandize, &c."—N. Y. Jour., Nov. 1, 1770.

In an address to the new governor, the officers of the Marine Society acknowledge their indebtedness to "the Patronage of our worthy and infernal Soveraign... for his consent and express satisfaction that they "can securely rely on your Lordship's Countenance and Protection."—N. Y. Merc., Nov. 5, 1770.

Colden writes to Hillsborough regarding his unenlightenedness when Dunmore demands of him "a moiety of the perquisites and Emoluments of the Government of New York... from the date of his Commission [Jan. 2] to the time of his arrival" (see July 16). Colden reviews the precedents to show that "Every oldest Counsellor or Lient Govr has received and retained the whole profits of Govern's, from the death of one Govr to the arrival of another," and points out to Hillsborough the bad effect which such demand will have on the minds of the people.—N. Y. Col. Doc., VIII: 250-52; 257-58. Regarding Colden's claim to "the whole profits of Government from the Death of one Governor until the arrival of another," see the voluminous papers in the case among Colden Papers, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1877), X: 253-379. On Jan. 15, 1771 (p. 24), Dunmore refused to accept compensation from the assembly "after the rate of £2000 per annum" beginning with the date of his arrival, Oct. 18, 1770 (p. 25). In the middle of March, 1771, he submitted his case to the judges of the supreme court, and about a month later they decided against him.—Colden Papers, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1877), X: 253-379. Notwithstanding this opinion, Dunmore thought he had a clear case. He finally determined to send the papers to the ministry.—Ibid., 325. No decision appears of record. In this case William Smith (Jr), was counsel for Dunmore, and, among the Smith MSS. in the N. Y. Pub. Library, are the following documents relating to the case:

The governors of the college give an entertainment in honour of Gov. Dunmore.—N. Y. Merc., Nov. 26, 1770.

The common council orders that "a Temporary fence be forthwith made Round the Bowling Green of post and Rails, not to exceed five Rails high."—M. C. C., VII: 244-45. A payment of £13 to Henry Fielding "for sundry posts & Rails" for this fence was ordered on Jan. 2, 1771 (ibid., VII: 255). Manifestly this temporary wooden fence was to protect the king's statue recently placed on the Green (see Aug. 16), and to prevent the littering up of this space.—See May 3, 1771. Ultimately the expense for permanently "railing in" the king's statue was met by the assembly (see Jan. 27, 1770, and May 8, 1771). For the contract to erect the iron fence, which still stands, see May 1, 1770.

The corporation decides that "the Common Council do for the future meet on the first Wednesday in every Month to Issue Warrants, for discharging such debts as shall be due from this Corporation."—M. C. C., VII: 245.

The common council orders that "the Committee of the Bridewell and Alms house, provide three iron Stoves, two for the use of the Bridewell and one for the use of the Alms house."—M. C. C., VII: 245. See June 6, 1771.

The principal lawyers of the city organize "The Moot," a club for discussing legal questions. William Livingston is elected the first president, and William Smith vice president. The Moot continued in existence until January, 1775. During that time it "materially influenced the judgment of the Supreme Court."—Sedgwick, Life of William Livingston (1813), 151. In the discussions, which were conducted with great regularity and order, Peter Van Schaack, Horse, Min., Bolton, Colden, Gov., etc., was intrusted the keeping of their records. Some of these are still preserved and are matters of curious reference for a modern lawyer.—Van Schaack, Life of Peter Van Schaack (1842), 13. The "Social Club" was in existence at about the same time. It met on Saturday evenings at Dunmore's, and "as our Club House" (see Feb. 5, 1774a).—Wm. Smith, Mem. Hist. of N. Y., IV: 233.

Smith receives a visit from Col. Bradstreet, who describes the feast of the Sons of St. Andrew. Smith says: "Bradstreet explained horribly ag' my Lord Dunmore who took the Chair—He swears that he is a damned Fool—Says he is a silly extravagant But it & that he has done for him forever. He grounds all upon his being noisy and clamorous in giving the Toasts to Watts at the lower End of the Table—That he suck himself by the vieat... Healths—That his Friend Col's Reid was struck into silent Astonishment, and the Company ashamed of him—Is sure that he will be laughed at and despised." Smith adds: "Henceforth I shall be more shy for Fear of involving my own with a Character that will be disagreeable among all Sorts of People, & perhaps expose what I give him in Confidence."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), III.

The common council authorizes the payment of £591 14s 4d.
THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

1770 "for materials found & work done to the Coffy House Bridge, fly Dec. Market & Jerry Stairs," and the payment of $27 for "the Costs 5 Charges & expenses of additional work done at peeks Slip for the erection of the further Sum of $55 in full of all Demands against this Corporation for building & finishing the Wharf of peeks Slip" (see Sept. 14).—M.C.C., VII: 247.

6 Colden, in a letter to Hillsborough, states that commerce between Britain and the colonies has been revived, largely through the influence of New York merchants who had his personal encouragement.—N.Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 257.

7 "Dunmore writes to Hillsborough of the defenseless condition of the city."—N.Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 259.

10 Alexander, lieutenant-governour of this city, is appointed Secretary and Comptroller, of the General Post Office for the Northern District of North-America, in the Room of James Parker, Esq; Printer, deceased.—N.Y. Merc., Dec. 10, 1770. Alexander, who was the eldest son of Lieut.-Gov. Cadwallader Colden, continued to be post master of the New York District until his death in 1776. He had served as deputy post master as early as July 30, 1755 (p. 6).

11 A newspaper advertisement reads: "To be sold at public vendue, at the Merchant's Coffee-House, on Monday the 31st day of December last, the lease of a certain lot, piece and parcel of ground upon which the Theatre or play house now stands, together with the buildings thereto now erected, containing in length on both sides, ninety two feet, and in breadth in front and rear forty eight feet, all English measure."—N.Y. Merc., Dec. 10, 1770. The dimensions given above tally so closely with those of the Chapel St. Theatre (see Ap. 4, 1764), as to lead to the belief that this advertisement refers to the same theatre. Some portions of the building apparently escaped demolition, on May 5, 1776 (p. 56).

12 In his first address to the assembly, Gov. Dunmore says: "I esteem myself peculiarly fortunate in having been appointed to the command of this province, whose example has been the happy means of renewing that mutual intercourse between the mother country and her colonies [see July 11], which is so much the interest of both to preserve uninterupted; this salutary reconciliation effected by the people of this province, cannot fail of endearing them, in a particular manner, to our most gracious Sovereign."—Assemb. Jour. (1770-1), 7-8. On Dec. 18, the assembly answered: "The representatives of the people regard with the highest satisfaction this peculiar mark of his Majesty's paternal attention to the welfare and happiness of this faithful colony, in the appointment of a nobleman of your lordship's distinguished rank to preside over us, while your lordship's amiable character affords the most pleasing prospect of a happy administration."

14 Hillsborough informs Dunmore of the latter's appointment by his majesty, king of Great Britain in the place of Lord Btotteur, deceased.—N.Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 280.

15 Alexander McDonnell (see Feb. 21) is ordered to appear before the general assembly to answer a charge that he was the author of the broadside of Dec. 16, 1769 (p. 5). He contends that he can not reply to the question, "whether or not he was the author or publisher of the same," since "the grand jury and house of Assembly had declared the paper to be a libel. ... Secondly, that as he was under prosecution in the supreme court, he conceived it would be an infraction of the laws of Justice, to punish a British subject twice for one offence." These words are deemed "a contempt of the authority of this house," and McDonnell is therefore ordered to be taken into custody.—Assemb. Jour. (1770-1), 7-8. On Dec. 14, the sergeant at arms reported that he had "conveyed Alexander M'Donnell, to the common gaol of the city."—Ibid.

16 The public is informed that "John Anthony Beau, Engraver and Copper-Graver, in the City of New York, has stopped his press in order to learn, the Art of Drawing, in all its Branches. He engraves and does all Sorts of Clisted Work, at the most reasonable Rates. Whoever will favor him with their Commissions, are desired to apply to Mr. Lewis Futter, Gold and Silver Smith, opposite to the Coffee-House."—N.Y. Jour., Dec. 13, 1770. "He was evidently an engraver upon paper; these plates, of many others of his trade, he may have engraved upon copper."—Stauffer, Am. Engravers on Copper and Steel, I: 19.

17 A motion is made that the board "either call off the Common Council Chamber or shut the Doors, during the sitting of the Common Council, as formerly." By a vote of 8 to 3, the council decides that the doors "for the future be Shut during their Sitting."—Dec. —M.C.C., VII: 252.

18 The assembly resolves that "Edmund Burke, Esq. of London, be and hereby is appointed agent for this colony at the court of Great Britain, in the room of Robert Charles, Esq. deceased, and that for his services, there be allowed to him . . . five hundred pounds annum."—Assemb. Jour. (1770-1), 48.

19 Price, in his Memoir of the Life and Character of the Rt. Hon. Edmund Burke, 124, erroneously announces that Edmund Burke's appointment was made in November 1771. Sparks says that the correspondence of Burke with the assembly of New York during his agency is not known to exist in the United States, except one letter on the Quebec bill in the archives of the N. Y. Hist. Society, and that such correspondence has been "studiously excluded from all the publications of his writings in England."—Sparks, Gouverneur Morris, I: 21 (note).

20 Smith writes: "from all my Experience hitherto, the Govt is a very weak Man in Matters of Business."—Wm. Smith's Diary (M.S.), IV. On Jan. 16, 1771, he added: "This poor Creature exposes himself daily—How can the Dignity of Government be maintained by so helpless a Mortal, utterly ignorant of the Nature of Business of all Kinds."—Ibid.

21 Capt. McDougall issues a statement to the public in which he retires the facts of his case. In doing this, he mentions the publication of the broadside (see Dec. 16, 1769), the libelous letter (see Dec. 19, 1769), the examination of Parker and his apprentices (see Feb. 7), his own refusal to give bail, and consequent imprisonment (see Dec. 21), and his experiences before the general assembly (see Dec. 14).—N.Y. Jour., Jan. 24 and 31, 1771.

22 "The Long Room in the Exchange" is designated as the place for the annual meeting, on Jan. 14, of the "Marine Society of the City of New-York."—N.Y. Jour., Jan. 3, 1771.

23 The population of the city and county of New York is 21,856, of whom 18,776 are whites. The population of the province is 168,071, of whom 148,124 are whites. Gov. Tryon gives authority to the census by his signature.—N.Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 457: Doc. Hist. N. Y. (420 ed.), I: 474. This was the last census of the city and county of New York before the Revolution.

24 The item from the British Admiralty Records cited in the description of Pl. 50, I: 364, as of this date, has been entered in the Chronology under its exact date, April 17, 1776 (p. 9).

25 Warrants are ordered to be issued for the payment of £432:14:10 to John Watts "for Lodging four Indian Chiefs from the 11th of September last to the 24th of October following," and for the payment of £1215:10:0 to John McComb "for paving at the End of the Coffy house Bridge & for paving Stone & Sand found."—M.C.C., VII: 254.

26 Several letters of "Common Land at Inclinhark" (see July 8, 1765) file a petition with the common council, for a dedication in rent. They complain they have been "much deceived" as to the "Quality" of their lands and "their Capacity for receiving Nature and Cultivation." Furthermore, "with the Rain and Springs about the Land, the Cellars are filled with Water, and the Land rendered almost unfit for profitable Use, for about Six or seven Months in the Year." They ask the board to "mitigate" half their rent from the time of their taking their leases, and to extend their term.—From original petition in metal file No. 6, city clerk's record-room, endorsed "Read & filed March the 1st, 1771."—M.C.C., VII: 267. For the action of the board, see March 12.

27 "To every admirer of Real Curiosities, The noted William Partridge begs leave to acquaint the ladies, gentlemen, etc. that he has taken a large and commodious room at Mr. McDougall's at the Sign of Lord John Locke in the Common Council-House, and is disposed to receive gentlemen in a genteel manner, where he proposes to divert the Company every Monday—Wednesday and Friday, by exhibiting his Art of Dexterity of Hand after a new Method different from other Performers. Likewise he will make it his chief Study to divert the Company by introducing Mr. Punch and his merry family, with new Alterations every Evening. Like the Italian Shade, so much admired in Europe. He has taken proper Care to have the Room well aired and all Accommodations for the Reception of those who chuse to favour him with their Company."

28. N.B. Gentlemen and ladies that chuse to have a private Performance, by giving timely Notice will be waited on."—N.Y. Jour.

Merc., Supplement, Jan. 7, 1771. Duncan McDougal had a tavern.
Jan.
with the sign of Lord John Murray on "Fair or Nassau-Straat, near the Moravian Meeting," in 1769, when the house and two lots were offered for sale.—Ibid., May 15, 1769. The site of this tavern is fixed still more clearly by an advertisement of Isaac Gardner's, in 1771, of the sale of a house and lot on Golden Hill, and in Nassau St., opposite the sign of Lord John Murray, and the house where the tavern was located, "in the large flat Subject," which has long been kept as their lodge."—Ibid., Jan. 14, 1771.

An advertisement reads: "To the Public. Likenesses Painted for a reasonable Price, by A. Delany, jun. who has been Taught by the celebrated Mr. Benjamin West, in London. N. B. Is to be spoken with opposite Mr. Dick Schuyler's, at his Fathers."—N. Y. Merc., Jan.

Pursuant to a resolution of the assembly, Jan. 27, 1770 (q. v.), the sum of £200 is paid towards the expense of erecting and railing in his Majesty's statue (see Nov. 22, 1770).—Assem., Jour. (1771), 77.

Michael Cummings (see Feb. 7, 1770) is paid £100, the reward offered on Dec. 19, 1769 (q. v.), for discovering the author (McDougall) of a "certain seditious libel."—Assem., Jour. (1770)–1, 24.
See also Cal. Coun. Min., 438. The libel referred to was a broad-side which appeared on Dec. 16, 1769 (q.v.).

After the motion of Daniel Patrick for the grant of two water lots "fronting his Houses & Ground on Hunters Key" (see Pt. 42, Vol. I), and a petition of Cornelius Wynkoop for the same lots, the common council decides "that granting the prayer of either of said Petitioners will be very injurious to the publick, without a proper consideration of the only publick advantage of Coming to the market in that part of this City." The board therefore rejects the petitions and resolves that the two water lots be leted
"for the use of the publick, & appropriated to no other use or purpose whatsoever."—M. C., VII: 235.

The assembly resolves "that there be allowed unto his Excelency the Right Honorable John, Earl of Dunmore, for his administering the government of this colony" from Oct. 18, 1770 to Sept. 1, 1771, "after the rate of £2500 per annum."—Assem., Jour.
(1770)–1, 35. For Dunmore's action in regard to this, see Jan. 18.

Gov. Dunmore sends this message to the assembly: "Seeing, by the proceedings of your house yesterday [p. 73], that a sum was voted for my salary as Governor of this province, I must acquaint you, that his Majesty has appointed me a salary out of his treasury [see July 16, 1770], in consequence of which, I am not at liberty to receive it from the Assembly; therefore, I desire, that the article which relates to it, in your resoloves, may be omitted."—Assem., Jour. (1770)–1, 41.

The board having agreed to leave without public bidding the Nassau Ferry for three years, Samuel Waldron, the present lessee (see Nov. 17, 1770), appears before the common council in favor of it.
He is informed that he may have the lease at the rate of £550 per annum, and asks leave to consider the offer.—M. C., (see

Gov. Dunmore, in a message to the assembly, writes: "I have ordered an estimate to be laid before you of the expense that will attend some alterations, which I cannot dispense with being made, for the accommodation of my family, within and about the Fort; and I am induced to hope you will take this matter into your consideration, as I think they are only such that you will easily perceive to be requisite."—Assem., Jour. (1770)–1, 47. For the further action of the assembly, see Feb. 16.

The mayor produces before the common council an indictment found by the last supreme court "against the Oswego Market as a Nuisance." The indictment recites that this market-house, 150 feet long and 20 feet 3½ inches broad, stands "in the middle of Broadway, whereby this thoroughfare is greatly obstructed, Narrowed Strained & spoiled," so that the king's subjects cannot "go return pass rile & labour with their horses Coaches, Carts & Carriages as they ought & were wont to do, without great Danger of their lives To the great Damage & Common Nuisance, & to the endanger the lives in the largeSubjectS, said Lord the King...
" The attorney-general having moved for a writ to the sheriff
"to prostrate without Delay the Oswego Market, as a Nuisance," and the mayor having sought time to consider whether the city would defend the indictment, it was ordered by the supreme court, on motion of the attorney-general, "that unless the said Indictment is traversed within twenty Days, that a Writ to abate the Same Nusance do issue to the Sheriff of the City & County of New York." On motion of the mayor, the common council agrees to "try the two actions of the indictment, and appoints a commi-mittee to "Employ Mr Dunwo as Council in Defence."—M. C., VII: 259–60. See, further, Jan. 29. See also "Oswego Market

(first site)," in Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 999; De Voe, Market

On April 17, 1771 (q.v.), by the common council to the inhabitants of the West Ward to build a public market-house "in Some Convenient Place in Thurmans Slip," a petition is presented to the board by Peter Meier, John Thurman, Jun., and others, stating that they are ready to carry the grant into execution, asking the council to "direct the work," pointed to "direct the Same." From original petition, endorsed "Read & filed Jan. 24th 1771 & deferred for further consideration, and filed to metal file No. 6, city clerk's record-room. Accompanying this is a copy, attested Jan. 4, 1771, of the Minutes of April 4, 1773, showing the earlier action. This action of the common council is recorded in M. C., VII: 261. On Sept. 12, the petition was denied.—Ibid., VII: 312.

Samuel Waldron, the lessee of the Nassau Ferry (see March 18, 1766), accepts the common council's offer of the ferry for an additional three years at the annual rent of £370 (see Jan. 18).
—M. C., VII: 260–61. Waldron died before the first year of his lease had elapsed, and Nicholas Bogert succeeded him as lessee (see April 10, 1772).

Samuel Francis offers for sale his house called Vauhall, with the gardens and stables, the property consisting of 56 lots of land, and an agreed lease on lease from Trinity Church, of which 61 years still remain. Francis describes the house as containing "4 good rooms on a floor, with a large entrance and other conveniences, an excellent cellar, a very good Kitchen, and a large room 26 by 56 feet adjoining the house, with an arched ceiling, a convenient music gallery, two fire places and two entrances..." He is unable, he says, to attend both his houses "in the manner he could wish," which is his reason for offering the house for sale.—N. Y. Jour., Jan. 24, 1771. Francis was proprietor, also, of the Queen's Head Tavern, on Bread and Pearl St. He did not succeed in disposing of Vauhalls Gardens until Nov., 1777, when he removed his collection of wax works to the Queen's Head Tavern.—N. Y. Merc., Nov., 1772. Erasmus Williams succeeded him, and renamed the resort Mount Pleasant. See June 6, 1774.

Mr. Duane having informed the mayor by letter that he "is declined being Concerned for this Corporation in defence of this Indictment lately found by the Supreme Court against the Oswego Market as a Nuisance" (see Jan. 24), Samuel Jones is offered the office of counsel and accepts.—M. C., VII: 262. See July 29.

A storm does great damage to some of the wharves of the city.
Feb. 20, 1771, the Whitehall Ferry Stairs is almost carried away, and the Wharf from thence to the first Corner Eastward, is entirely destroyed, as also part of Contees's Dock and Cruger's Wharf.— N. Y. Merc., Feb. 11, 1771.

Trinity vestry appoints a Committee to make a final Settlement of the agreement entered into between a former Committee of this Board and the Lutheran Congregation relative to a piece of Ground adjoining the Parsonage House and the Lutheran Church and that the Seal of this Corporation be affixed to any Deed or Instrument that may be necessary for that purpose. It is further ordered that "Alderman [Esai Debrunser also a member of the church] have power to employ Mr Hampton to repair the damage that was done to the Roof of St Paul's Church by the falling of the covering from the Tower and also to new Cover the same."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

A city ordinance is passed forbidding butchers, bakers, and retailers from occupying the tables and benches in the Fluy Market intended for the use of the country people.—M. C., VII:
264–5.

A payment of £521:6s1 is authorized by the common council for "an addition to the Albay Pier" (see Aug. 15, 1767).—M. C., VII: 261. For a discussion of it appear in 1772, see A. P. 4th

North River Pier, see Oct. 7.

Andrew Maerschelke presents a bill to the common council for £1:16, for surveying "the Breadth of the Road at several places in the Black Horse Lane" (see Dec. 15, 1771).—M. C., VII:
p. 976 and upwards: "the Road on Sand Hill" [see June 1,
Although unrecorded in the Minutes, inhabitants of the city present a petition to the common council that, in the event of the Oswego Market being removed, they may be given leave to erect a new market on the Fields at their own expense. They also prefer to the North River as more convenient for them and others, "by being more in the Center of the City, the City's Tenants residing at and about Inclam Barrack." From the original MS., in box No. 6, in city clerk's record-room. See also De Voe, Market Book, p. 275.

Likewise, a large number of carmen and other inhabitants, in a petition to the common council, dated "1774," state that they are informed the Oswego Market is to be removed, and that a petition has been presented "praying Liberty to erect a Market at Your Lordship's River," that they "daily receive money from Country People for Cartage of their Produce to the said Market," and that "a Market being fixed at the North River will entirely deprive them of that Benefit." They claim that a market at the North River will be a detriment "to far the greatest part of the City," and ask that the common council will be pleased to grant Liberty to Erect a publick Market at a proper place in the Fields pursuant to the prayer of a former Petition." —From original petition in metal file No. 6, city clerk's record-room.

Another petition, in five parts (undated), is circulated and signed by hundreds of the inhabitants of the city, asking "that if the Oswego Market be removed, they be allowed to make a Market in the Fields instead Thereof." —From the original papers (MS.), in file No. 4, city clerk's record-room. For the result of these petitions, see Aug. 19.

In a letter to Hilliborough, Gov. Dunmore says: "I transmit to your Lordship the proposal of a number of German People settled in this Province, for the forming themselves into a company, to serve in conjunction with the Militia of the Colony, in case of an emergency; I presume Your lordship will think it right to give encouragement to their zeal and spirit; the emulation, which is observed to actuate all bodies of men, serving with others, never fails to produce good effects, & there cannot be the same objection made to them, which is common to Auxiliaries, these being established to the Country and their interest concerned in its safety." —N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII. 265-66. In May 4, Hilliborough replied to this: "The spirited proposal of the Body of German Protestants in the City of New York . . . could not fail of being pleasing to the King, and although there is not now any occasion for their service in the Military Line, you will signify to them His Majesty's approbation of the zeal, and the satisfaction it gave His Majesty to receive from so respectable a Body such declaration of sincere affection to his Royal Person and Government, and to assist in the defence of his Majesty's possessions." —Ibid., VIII. 269.

Several lessees of certain Common Lands of this Corporation in Inclawenbergh (see Jan. 6) are allowed a deduction of one-half the rent "from its value of the respective portions of land, and any deduction, furthermore, is to continue "until the Expiration of their said Leases, provided they pay into the hands of the Chamberlain the Balance of such Arrears immediately, & discharge for the future all such Taxes & impositions, as the said Premises shall from time to time be chargeable with." —M. C. G., VII. 276.

The anniversary of the repeal of the Stamp Act is celebrated "at the House of Mr. De La Montagnie," where a "great Number of the principal Inhabitants of this City, Friends to Liberty and Trade, dined on an elegant Entertainment which was there prepared." Thirty roasts were drank: —N. Y. Merc., March 25, 1771. This tavern was at the present 255-54 Broadway.

On March 25, poor debtors in prison thanked the "friendly brothers of St. Patrick" for their contribution sent to Mr. Coxon this day "to be laid out on necessaries for their relief." They also thanked the "Sons of Liberty," who, "sent Angus's for provisions and a "barrel of strong beer," and the "Sons of Liberty" who met at Hshelford Hall and sent provisions.—Ibid., March 25, 1771.

The committee appointed to investigate the encroachments made upon corporation lands by some of the inhabitants of Harlem make their report. They had sent letters to the offenders arranging for a conference, at which most of them had no claim to the lands but offered to lease them. One man had declared "that he was willing to agree with the Corporation as soon as the Line should be agreed upon & run between the Townships of Harlem & the Corporation." (For an earlier discussion of this subject, see July 12, 1750). As a result of this, the committee had written a letter to the "Trustees and Freeholders of the Town of Harlem relating to the Settlements of the Board of the Corporation of this City," and in answer the town of Harlem had made certain proposals which, in the opinion of the committee, ought to be adopted. The board thereupon orders "that the Committee Carry into Execution the several Matters by them recommended . . . as soon as possible, & Report to the Board what they shall make therein, with all Convenient Speed."—M. C. C., VII: 272-75. For the next report, see Jan. 9, 1772.

The lieutenant-governor had secured the charter for the institution (see April 5, 1768).—Col. Recs. N. Y. Chamber of Commerce, 126. Payment for the picture was made on Nov. 3, 1772 (q.v.).

The provincial council is noted that additional quarters for the troops are needed. —Col. Coun. Min., 485. See Feb. 16 and 25.

17 The council appoints Montague inspector of potash, although John Abel has been strongly recommended by the governor for the position. Smith writes of this: "How weak the Govt?"—This C. had done. House formerly of the Horse and Trotter Fields where the De Lancey Party meet—a Low Fellow, ignorant and a Fool. Barsens was the House where all the Riotous Liberty Boys met in 1765 & 66. —There they celebrated the Repeal of the Stamp Act last March, Oliver De Lancey & Apthorp pres.—Ali-cok is to be Montague's Assistant in the writing Party. The Man was one of the Kings of the Mob in 1765 & 66. —Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

21 Captain Stephen Kemble, of the British army, sends from New York to John Singleton Copley, in Boston, a list of those in this city who have subscribed to have their portraits painted by that artist. Mallet, Mrs. [Roger?] Morris, Captain and Mrs. [John] Montresor, Mr. Barrow, Mr. [Miles] Sherbrooke, Mrs. [James?] McEvoy, Mrs. [Abram?] Mortier, Mr. Hust and Lady, Mr. [John Talbot] Kemp."—From "Letters and Papers of John Singleton Copley and Henry Pelham 1759-1776," in Mass. Y. Merc., April 22, 1771.

24 The "Anniversary of St. George" is celebrated at Bolton's tavern by 120 prominent residents of the city, including Gov. Duane and Gen. Gage.—N. Y. Merc., April 29, 1771.

25 Jonathan Lawrence and others, owners of estates near the Oswego Market, in a petition to the common council, refer to "the late Indictment of the Grand Jury" (see Jan. 24) against this market; and, believing that the market is to be removed, they offer to contribute £250 toward purchasing "One third of Conors Lott," and conveying the whole of the ground to the corporation, "with covenants that it shall for ever remain a place for a public-market," provided the corporation will contribute the balance of £250 on the purchase price. —From original petition in metal file No. 6, city clerk's record-room. The petition is enclosed "Read & filed April 25th 1771 and Referred for further Consideration." It is recorded in M. C. C., VII: 278. See also De Voc, Market Book, 275.

29 The consistory of the Dutch Church appoints a committee "who shall, among other Things, be done upon the Account to other parts of the Old Church. They are to take with them a couple of carpenters, and to bring in a plan of the Tower, and an exact estimate of the cost, as also of the other repairs."—Eccl. Rec., VI: 4200. This subject was considered in 1766, but apparently no work was done at that time. The committee reported on May 6 (q.v.).

A motion is made "that as applications have been made to May this Corporation for the Grants of Water Lots fronting the Great Dock, this Board will previous thereto fix the Course of the Streng to be Extended from the Exchange into the East River upon a Straight line." After a debate on the question, the motion is carried.—M. C. C., VII: 280.

In order that the Bowling Green, on which the King's statue has been erected (see Aug. 1777), may not become "a Receptacle of all the filth from the Neighbourhood," the common council contracts with Richard Sharpe, Peter T. Curteius, Gilbert Forbes and Andrew Lyall "to fence in the same with Iron Rails & a stowe founda . . . for the consideration of £100."—M. C. C., VII: 281. Payments for the same, totalling £543, were ordered on June 20, 1771, and Jan. 11, 1772 (ibid.: VII: 293-94), the final part payment on the latter date being "for making an Iron Fence [since] Round the Bowling [Green], Sunday Lamps [from & fixing them &c]. A temporary wooden fence had been erected earlier (see Nov. 22, 1770). Among N. Y. Min. (1764-1802) in N. Y. Hist. Soc. is a "Plan of the Ground as laid out to be raised round the King's Statue. Scale 30 feet one Inch." It is endorsed "King's Statue." See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 658. For further improvements in the neighbourhood, see Aug. 22.

A committee is appointed "for preparing the draft of a plan for digging out the water Lots between Committees Key [Flie Market Slip] & Bedkman Slip."—M. C. C., VII: 280.

Francis Maerchelch and Henry Bogart, inspectors of fount, notify farmers and millers that, as there are frequent complaints of New York flour "being of a dark and brown colour, occasionally chiefly of the wheat not being well cleaned," hereafter all flour not made of "good clean wheat, and properly ground" will be condemned.—N. Y. Merc., May 6, 1771.

The committee of the consistory of the Dutch Church appointed April 29 (p. 23) to purchase a "plan of a New Tower" and of repairs for the "Old Church" (on Garden St.) These will cost at least £500; but there is "no money in the Treasury," and the committee is not in a position to borrow any. It is therefore resolved "That if the congregation will supply sufficient funds," the committee is "to dispose of the execution of the plans." Durec Ritema is requested to draw up the heading of a subscription paper. This was prepared and approved on May 19.—Eccl. Rec., VII: 4200-1. Regarding the sum subscribed, see June 9.

Corneus Vandebergh notifies the public that he "continues keeping a publick house, for the entertainment of all gentleman travellers," at the "sign of the Bull's Head, in the Bowry Lane." He also offers pasture for horses, "at 1. per night."—N. Y. Merc., May 6, 1771. For a history of the Bull's Head Tavern, see Dec. 15, 1755.

"Resolved and Ordered that for the future all the Water Lots behind Trinity Church be leased for Thirty three years at the rest of three pounds $5 Lot $5 Annum for the first Twenty one years four pounds for the next Twenty one years and five pounds for the last Twenty one years with the usual Covenants."—Trin. Min. (MS.)

"The House formerly kept by Mr. Bardin, but now occupied by Mr. George Burns, near the Fort," is advertised to be let. "This very convenient for a Tavern."—N. Y. Merc., May 13, 1771. Burns was evidently here by June 24, after which his advertisement disappears from the paper. He had kept taverns in New York for over twenty years, but from this time on his name does not appear. His premises for the "King's Arms" sign, which he carried from tavern to tavern, indicates loyalist tendencies, which may account for his unpopularity at this time.

A plan or "draft" of Turtle Bay (on the East River shore—see Pl. 50, Vol. 1), and of the neighbouring roads and landmarks, bearing this date, is made by Francis Maerchelch. It has the following inscription: "At the request of the Recorder Thomas Jones Esq. Chairman, & the other Gentlemen of the Committee, I have Surveyed the Farm commonly called Turtle Bay, granted by William Keist [Kieft] 23th of April 1646 unto George Holmes & Thomas Hall, and find the same to be agreeable to the above plan, and have thereon labelled "Filed Papers, 1700—1800," city clerk's record-room. The map is reproduced in facsimile in Man. Comm. (1860), opp. p. 570. A letter from Oxford says: "I must not forget to tell you, that the Colony of New-York is in great Extrem in English, at least with all wise and good Men, for her prudent and loyal Conduct."—N. Y. Merc., May 26, 1771.

1774 Trinity vestry appoints a committee "to regulate the Street
May and secure the Bank before Samuel Francis's House [Vauxhall]

27 see Jan. 24 in such manner as They shall think proper."—Trin.
Min. (MS.). For the petition of Francis, see April 16, 1772.

29 Trinity Church is granted to the Society for the Hospital in the City of New York (see March 9, 1776)—Col. Coun. Min., 1754; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 954. For the king's approval see June 13.

June A fire breaks out in the house of Mrs. Wright, "the ingenious Artist in Wax-Work, and Proprietor of the Figures so newly resembling the Life, which have for some Time past been exhibited in this City to general Satisfaction." With the help of the neighbour's and the fire-engines, the flames are extinguished, "with little damage to the House; but tho' most of the Wax-Work was destroyed . . . yet she was so fortunate as to save the curious Pieces of the Reverend Mr. Whitefield, the Pennsylvania Farmer, and some others which she still continues to exhibit."—N. Y. Merc., June 10, 1771. See Aug. 5.

The common council authorizes the payment of £222:120 to "Messrs Sharpe Curteiss & Company [see Aug. 23, 1767] . . .
in full of their acct for two large Stoves & bars for the Bridewell & one other for the Corporations house [the Hospital] that formerly belonged to John Harris."—M. C. C., VII: 282. See Nov. 22, 1770.

The committee appointed to regulate the streets in Montgomery Ward reports that Queen Street has been regulated.—M. C. C., VII: 283. For earlier regulations of this street and other streets in the same ward, see July 9, 1755. At the same meeting the committee appointed to regulate the streets in the West Ward (see ibid., VII: 281) makes a report on the regulation of Warren St.
 Ibid., VII: 183.

The clerk produces "a Bond from this Corporation under their seal to the Marine Society of the City of New York . . . in the penalty of £500, with Condition to pay on the 7th of May next the Sum of £500 with Interest at 5 per Cent from the 7th of May last.
The mayor is ordered to sign it. This bond discharges "a Bond from the Corporation to William Peartree Smith." Six other bonds for varying amounts are ordered signed at the same time.—
M. C. C., VIII: 284-85.

Domin De Ronde and Mr. Stockhol report to the consistory of the Dutch Church "concerning their going around with a subscription list for the Tower and repairs of the Old Church" (see May 6). The result does not exceed £500. "The Consistory was, therefore, compelled to suspend the work for this year, doing only what was indispensable."—Eccles. Rec., VII: 420.

The House commonly called and known by the Name of The Mansion House, is, with certain alterations, advertised for private sale. It is described as "Situated at the lower End of Wall-street, and now occupied by Mrs. Mary Ferrara, Widow."—N. Y. Merc., June 10, 1771. For a history of this tavern, see June 14, 1728. See also description of Pl. 69, I: 435.

This report occurs which is the occurrence of the visitation of the British soldiery and the spirit of the times. It is reported in the press by the two of the principal participants as follows:

"On Tuesday the 11th Instant, we the Subscribers, Jacob Mills and Jeremiah Mullord, of Brooklyn, on Long-Island, having taken Lodgings at the House of Mr. William Milner near the Exchange, in New-York, about 9 o'clock in the Evening we went from his Door into the Piazzas of the Exchange, where three Soldiers who entered immediately after us, and the Centry who stood there before, without the least Provocation on our Part, furiousously attacked us with drawn Bayonets, both by thrusting and striking, whereby we were both wounded in many Places and one of us dangerously in the Head, Face, Hands and Body, and then forcibly carried us away to the Guard House, and there confined us . . .
They accused us of throwing Stones at the Centry in the Exchange.
. . . We declared and offer'd to prove our Innocency of the Charge . . . The Centry, in vain, we asked him all at once, to deliver the Money, which when they had received they suffer'd us to depart,

"Next Day, being advised, that the shortest Means of Redress, would probably be by Trial before a Court Martial, we applied accordingly to Advice, and on Thursday the 13th a Court Martial being called, the 4 Soldiers were brought before them for Trial, We had several Witnesses to prove that we were not the Persons who broke open the Centry at the Place, that we had but just left the House of Mr. Milner, and had not meddled or concerned ourselves with them at the Time they attack'd us. On the other Hand, 3 or 4 Soldiers, in Behalf of the Prisoners, appeared as Witnesses, who declared that we had thrown Stones at the Centry, and that the Martial we paid for our Release was not extorted from us, but voluntarily offer'd and press'd upon the Soldiers in Order to induce them to release us, that the Affair might drop without further Inquiry . . . "Upon the whole, we could obtain no Manner of Redress, and have since understood that the Soldiers were cleared. We have also been advised, that having first chosen this Kind of Trial, we can now obtain no Satisfaction in any other Court, either for the Loss of Money, or Injury to our Persons." The 45 shillings were later returned to Mills and Mulford.—N. Y. Jour., June 20, 1771.

The king incorporates certain persons under the title of "The Society of the Hospital in the City of New York in America" (see May 29)—From Papers relating to New York Hospital, among the Jay Papers, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. The common council showed its approval of this society on Sept. 12 (p. 6). The name of the corporation was changed by legislative act on May 9, 1780 (q.v.).
"We, the Said Corporation and General Committee, and the regulation of Crown (Liberty) St.—M. C. C., VII: 455. Its regulation was ordered, July 2, 1771.—Ibid., VII: 251-92, 315.
See March 11, 1791; April 21, 1791; and Landmark Map Ref.
Key, III: 997. For a protest against the committee's report, see July 15.

The ordinance regulating public slaughter-houses, passed July 24, 1766 (q. e.), is altered and amended. It is now provided that any person dwelling in certain parts of the Out Ward (carefully defined in the law) may slaughter on his own property, "without this being subject or liable to the payment of any sum or sums of money . . . to Mr Nicholas Bayard."—M. C. C., VII: 287-88.

Robert R. Livingston and others apply to the common council for permission "to lay a Block to the East River twenty feet in front of their several Wharfs, lying between the Whitehall Slip and the Old Crane of the late Coll Moore in order to secure their said Wharfs, against North Easterly storms." Such permission is granted.—M. C. C., VII: 289.

Copley writes from New York to Henry Pelham: "We are now fixed in a very commodious House in this City. We arrived here on Thursday night . . . Our Journey was not attended by the least uneasiness or any small inconvenience, but was delightfull beyond our expectation. Our Horses held out wonderfully well and brought us with great spirit forty Miles the last Day of our Journey . . .
I believe you will think I have done pretty well to be able to begin Mrs. Gages portrait [see April 17, 1771] tomorrow, which I propose to be a more Grant figure than the Congress portrait which I am now finishing, but the streets much Cleaner and some much broader, but it is not Boston in my opinion yet. I have seen the Statues of the King and Mr.
Pitt, and I think them boast good Statues. I find it so expensive keeping horses here that I think to send the Mare back . . .
I want my Crayons much and Layman and Drawings.—Clove there is enough here."—Letters & Papers of John Singleton Copely and Henry Pelham, 1735-1776, 116-17; Dunlap, Hist.

"For the Safety of Vessels coming into and going to Sea from the Port of New-York . . . The Master and Wardens of the said Port, did last Week place a large Can Buoy on the South West Spat of the East Bank, in eighteen Feet Water at low Water, hearing from the Light House on Sandy-Hook—N. W. and by W. half W. and from the Bluff of Staten Island, making the Narrows S. half East. Vess-sels going down must keep in 5 Fathom Water, till they open the Brew with the North Point of Sandy-Hook in the Spit."—N. Y. Merc., June 17, 1771. During the following winter, the buoy was carried away by the ice (see Feb. 17, 1772).

In a letter to Henry Pelham, Copely says: "I have begun 20 three portraits already, and shall as soon as time permits fill my Recorder . . . We have already had petitions from several people, as well from those to whom we were recommed[ed] as others into whose knowledge we have fallen here."—

CHRONOLOGY: THE REVOLUTIONARY PERIOD: 1763-1776

July

William Tryon, the new governor, arrives in New York.—N. Y. Merc., July 15, 1771. Smith writes, under this date, that "Ld Dunmore was absent in Jersey on a View of Lands sold by Lt Stirling to Drummond.—Oliver De Lancy was with him. They took a Row Boat at Pavlus Hook & went down to the Narrows, and about Noon came up with Tryon & his Wife in an Oyster Packet, VIII, 276. All the foregoing letters are from the Jay's S. City. Smith tells us that the Earl is disappointed in his hope that Gov'T Tryon would defer the Puhл of his Comт to the Packet arrived, by which he hopes to hear of Tryon's appointment to Virginia [was Dunmore himself who was appointed to Virginia.—see Aug. 29, tho' his Letters pressing such a Chance, arrived a Month before the last Packet sailed from England.]—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV. In a letter to Hillsborough, Tryon states that he arrived on July 7, and received his commission the next morning.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VII, 287. All other sources give July 8. Smith answers the Governor's—[letter to Hillsborough.—ibid.; also Assemb. Jour. (1772), 3; Cal. Coun. Min., 485.]

9. The administration of the government is transferred to Gov. Tryon in the usual manner. Gov. Martin of North Carolina is in town to see the Governor designated by his Col. & the last day the Governor's—[letter to Hillsborough.—ibid.; also Assemb. Jour. (1772), 3; Cal. Coun. Min., 485. Smith thus describes the events of the day: "Pursuant to a Summons of last Night [April 9] we met this Morning in Council for the Publication of Mr. Tryon's Comт—Ld Dunmore was amongst us & kept the chair till all the Oatlas were taken by the New Gov't except the State Council's—[Mr. Tryon] gave up the chair—Upon the latter—[Mr. Tryon] said he was too old & retired.—Upon Rec[ of it Mr. Tryon said to him I wish your Ld[ship] much Health & Prosperity in your new Government To which the other . . . only answered with a Bow, & turning to the Council invited them all to dine with him . . . We then went & republucky to the City Hall.—The Mayor & Corporation of that City was not great nor was there any Signal of Joy.—Not a Hurra till after the Comt was read & tho' the Mayor ordered it, the City was very partially illuminated.—My Lord took too Cheerful a Glass & forced it upon his Company—I escaped by a Cold for which he excused me—but the Company did not part without Blows.—His Ld[ship] struck Athorpke & Colp in front of the New Gov't Sec'y.—called Tryon a Coward who had never seen Flanders, and ran about in the Night assaulting one & another . . . he was heard to say 'Damn Virginia—Did I ever seek it!—Why is it forced upon me? I ask'd for New York—New York I love, & they have robbed me of it with a guv'nor.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VII, 287. But Smith says exactly the true State of Ld Dunmore Minds at that Moment.—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV. On the same day the common council convenes, not at the city hall according to regular custom, but at "the Dwelling House of Samuel Frances in the Dock Ward."—M. G. Co., VIII, 291. It is safe to assume that the board was conducting business with pleasure. Almost the entire business of the meeting related to the new governor—the reception to him, the freedom, and the address. Also there appears, in the records of Aug. 22 (M. G. Co., VIII, 305), the authorization of the payment of £86 64 to Samuel Franks for an entertainment by him provided by order of this Board for his Excellency Gov'T Tryon.

Copley, writing to Henry Pelham, says: "There is so many that are impatient to sit I am never at a loss to fill up all my time. My large Chamber is about 9 feet high and 20 feet long and near as broad, with a good room adjoining it, the light[ ] near north. I have been told that this was a Dwelling House, peace in which I have found the weather uncomfortably hot; a great deal of rain has fallen and injury has the soil is not very good naturally the terr[ ...] the streets. . . . We have been at Burlington July 3rd. This was a Dwelling House which had been pulled down and a large house built upon it. This house was built in the year 1670. . . ."

14. In a letter to Henry Pelham, Copley says: "I have been Aug. Painting to the amount of 3 hundred pounds Sterl, shall take four more and then Stop. We experience such a Disposition in a great Many People to render us happy as we did not expect. . . . Letters & Papers of John Singleton Copley and Henry Pelham, 1719-1776, 127-28. See Aug. 3.

15. Certain residents in Crown St. complain to the common council that the plan, adopted on June 23rd, for a new Market Street, will be "extremely burdensome to many of the said freeholders." They request the common council to adopt a former plan which will be "far less expensive," but the board decides that, as the plan of June 13th "appears to be of more Public Utility," the "prayer of the said petitioners ought not to be granted."—"M. C. C., VII, 293-94. The plan adopted seems to have been modeled some what (see Sept. 12). For earlier action in regard to the regulation of Crown St., see July 8 and July 12, 1769. See also Aug. 22, 1771.

18. The consistory of the Dutch Church presents an address of wel come to William Tryon, the new governor.—E. E. Rev., VI, 420.

Gov. Tryon receives from the common council an "Engrossed Address" and the freedom of the city (see July 8). In the address he is complimented highly on his administration of the colony he "lately presided over" (N. Carolina); on his "hazardous though necessary service, in Supporting the Laws of the Country, and the Quelling a daring Insurrection." "Favourable Countenance and Protection of this Corporation in the full Enjoyment of all its Franchises and Privileges" is extolled.

The governor replies that the testimony "from the Mayor Aldermen and Commonalty of this ancient Corporation" in regard to the "necessity of that Service" which he rendered recently "affords as much toward satisfaction to my mind, as it does me public honor." The corporation may be confident, he says, "of every possible Cordiality and Protection from me, in all its Franchises & privileges . . . their studious endeavours to promote the Success of my Administration will meet with all suitable returns of Respect & Gratitude."—M. C. C., VII, 294-97. The manuscript of the governor's reply is in file No. 4, city clerk's room.

James de Lancy and other residents of the Out Ward petition the common council to grant for their use the fee simple . . . of a certain Tract of unimproved Lands lying in the out ward of this City" (see June 25, 1772, for a description of the tract), which is "situated properly to Erect a Church & School on, which will relieve them from the Inconveniences they now labour under." They therefore ask that it may be granted to "the Rector and the Inhabitants of the City of New York in Communion of the Church of England as by Law Established," to be used for a church, a school, and a burying-ground. It is ordered that the committee for the Out Ward have a plan made of the ground by one of the city surveyors, and that the subject be considered later by the common council.—M. C. C., VII, 298-99. See Dec. 12.

Michael Bechades, "From Paris," informs the public that he "Teaches ancient and modern Languages in the most elegant and expeditious Manner. Has the clearest Set of Lessons for every Kind, and a particular Method by which a Person may in three Months speak it with Ease. . . . He is to be spoke with at his Academy at the Widow Hayes's, facing the Hou. John Watts, Esq., in Dock-street."—N. Y. Merc., July 22, 1771. For a list of some of the French books probably used by Bechades, see Oct. 28.

Lord Dunmore leaves for Albany. On passing the fort, he is "saluted with 15 Guns."—N. Y. Merc., July 29, 1771. He returned on Aug. 29 (q. v.).

The corporation's counsel, Samuel Jones (see Jan. 29), delivers an opinion that "it would be most advisable for the Corporation to Remove the Oswego Market, as the Indictment found against it [see Jan. 24] Cannot be defended." However, the board decides "not to take down or remove the same, but to let the Court proceed therein" as it shall judge proper.—M. G. Co., VII, 302. Though there is no record here of the Minutes, the market must have been removed between this time and Jan. 7, 1772, for on the latter date there is a reference to "the Inhabitants who reside near where the Oswego Market stood."—See Aug. 3, 1771, Adjenda. De Voe, in The Marker Book, I, 276, says that, upon its removal, the "Jew Market" was increased to six miles (outside of this City), and this week are to go up to Mr Athorp's that is about a mile further. I believe you will think we take a good share of pleasure, but I find I can do full as much Business as in Boston, having no interruptions or very long forenoon's, and...

Mrs. Wright has been "so assiduous in repairing the Damage done to the War Work by the late Fire in her House [see June 3] that the Defect is not only supplied by new Frets . . . but they are much more regular & well finished." - The Murder of Abel by Cain, and the Treachery of Delilah to Samson, are two principal Subjects of their last performance." — N. Y. Merc., Aug. 5, 1771.

On Jan. 30, 1772, Mrs. Wright was ready to sell for England — N. Y. Jour., Jan. 30, 1772. An account of her life and work is in Dunlop, Hist. of Arts of Design, I: 450-56.

In a private letter to Mayor Hicks, W. M. McAdam states that the proprietors of Dey's Dock are ready to pay when required £500 toward building a market there, believing it will increase the value of their lots. The location is between Vesey and Division Sts. — From the original letter in file No. 4, city clerk's record-room. This letter is not recorded in the Minutes, but is doubtless one of the petitions considered by the board at the next meeting. — See Aug. 19. See also March 15, 1795, when the Dey St. locality was first presented for consideration.

Another petition of this date is one in which several butchers who "have served the Oswego Market" protest to the common council against the proposal to erect a market at the North River instead of the Oswego Market (on Broadway), which "is now almost immediately to be removed." They recommend the Fields as more convenient for the public, "being nearer to the growing trade," and more accessible to the Farmers, Gardiner's and others who come from the Bowery." — From the original MS., in file No. 5, city clerk's record-room. See, further, Aug. 19.

The common council orders the payment of £27:6 for candles to illuminate the City Hall — Ibid., VII: 303. The occasion was the welcome to Gov. Tryon. — Ibid., VII: 202. See July 9.

Trinity vestry passes the following resolution: "Whereas the Oswego Market now Standing in the Broad way is ordered to be removed and it is proposed that a New one be erected on part of the Lots upon Hudson river belonging to this Corporation for which purpose, a Subscription paper has been exhibited as well by a Number of the Church Trumants as others to the Northward of division Street who have engaged to raise about Three hundred pounds towards erecting the said Market — Whereupon it is resolved and agreed that this Corporation also contribute the sum of Two hundred pounds towards building the said Market and will release their Right and Claim to the Ground on which the same is proposed to be built for the use of a Market for ever upon Condition that the Mayor Aldermen & Commonality of this City will grant and confirm to them the Water Lotts agreeable to the prayer of Subscription now before the said Mayor Aldermen & Commonality for that purpose." — Trin. Min. (M.S.).

A remonstrance to the common council, bearing this date, and signed by 71 inhabitants of the city, states that they will be great sufferers by the removal of the Oswego Market; that "the whole market will be a very considerable expense by putting new foundations under their houses occasioned by the regulation of said street;" that they consider the "most convenient place along the North River" to build the new market "would be from Meester slip unto Commissary Lakes. The owners of the lands fronting the street have offered "the ground fronting the river to erect a Market on (exclusive of the street) & to have it built by Voluntary subscriptions." A grant "for erecting a Market at or near Thumans slip was given to the former Petitioners, . . . In consequence of which they conceive themselves Intitled to the preference of having the grant here prayed for." — From original petition in metal file No. 6, city clerk's record-room. See, further, Aug. 19.

The common council considers "the Subject matter of the several Petitions preferred by sundry Inhabitants of this City relative to the erecting of a Market at the respective places therein mentioned, namely, Meester's Dock, Dey Slip and the Commons; & . . . on some of the Lots belonging to this Corporation, lying to the Northward of Dey Dock." — See March; Aug. 6 and 13. The vote of the board is against the Commons or Fields, and in favour of "Dye Slip" rather than "Meester's Dock," on the North River; but "whether the Market should be placed at Dey Slip," the vote is almost unanimous against it. The next ballot is in favour of "the Corporation's Lots to the Northward of Dey dock," as against "Meester's Dock," and it is ordered that, "if a Market be Erected by the Neighbourhood at the place now agreed upon, that the same do not exceed two hundred & ten feet in Length & thirty feet in breadth [see Aug. 22]; that a stone foundation be laid under the whole, and that the building of the same be under the entire direction of the Corporation." — Ibid., VII: 502-7.

The site fixed upon was the west side of the present Greenwich St. between Fulton and Vesey Sts. — Dee Voe, The Market Book, 307. The market was first known as "Oswego Market" (a part of the materials of the old Oswego Market — see July 29 — having been employed in its erection), later as the "Corporation Market at the North River," and finally as the "Bear Market." For origin of the name, see ibid., 508-11. See also Pl. 64, Vol. 1; and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 958, 959. For the building of this market, see Aug. 22, 29; Oct. 8.

A plan for the new market to be erected "on the Corporation's Lots to the Northward of Dey Dock" (see Aug. 19), to be 166 by 28 ft., is submitted to the common council and approved. A committee is appointed "to superintend the Building of the same, & see that it be Completed by the 1st of November next." — M. C. C., VII: 506. See, further, Aug. 31.

Inhabitants of the Dock Ward petition the common council to appoint a committee to complete an addition to "Coenties Market . . . on a range with the Old Market," for which a certain sum has been subscribed. They also ask that the board allow the county folk to sell meal there, "to which no Certain place is Assigned at the Oswego Market," and that attention be given to the fact that the board gave leave for such addition at "the time John Lawrence Esq" was Alderman, & Dirck Brinkerhoff, Assistant," but that nothing was done at that time. — From the original MS., in box No. 6, city clerk's record-room. The petition's granted, and the Enlargement of the same Markets, provided the Petitioners be at the Expanse thereof." — M. C. C., VII: 305. See also Nov. 16, 1720; March 25, 1763; April 16 and May 7, 1772; July 1, 1780; Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 958; Dee Voe, Market Book, 116.

The common council appoints a committee "to Cause the Pavement fronting the Fort to be taken up, & the ground there to be repaved." — M. C. C., VII: 306. Manifestly, this is a further effort to improve the vicinity of Bowling Green (see May 3). When, on Oct. 14, the committee was increased from three to five, its purpose was noted to be "for Regulating and Causing to be paved the Streets, near the fort Bowling Green & Battery." The committee made report of their progress on Oct. 24 (q. v. — Ibid., VII: 322-24. Payment for the work was ordered on three subsequent occasions. — Ibid., VII: 325, 328, 345. For a further improvement, see April 10, 1772.

17 Oct. the first of several payments is ordered by the corporation for building a Wharf & Pier in front of the New [Oswego] Market at the North River.—M. C. G., VII: 316. This wharf was at the foot of Fulton St. at Greenwich St., and is shown on Pl. 64, Vol. I. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 889, under "Corporation Dock." Subsequent payments show the total cost of construction was £356725.—Ibid., VII: 318, 345, 352-53. The dock was ordered to be repaired on June 20, 1774 (q.v.).

"Articles of Union" were adopted, also "The Church-Order, or Rules of Ecclesiastical Government."—Eccles. Rec. 1772: 426-27. A second convention, to ratify the "Union," was held June 16-18, 1772.—Ibid., VII: 4422.
21 Persons living around the Fly Market petition the common council for permission to build an addition to that market at their own expense, to serve as a shelter for the country people that resort to the said Market with provisions; ... and are Obliged to stand Exposed in the Open Street with their produce in all Weathers which is not only a Hardship on them but Inconvenient to some of the petitioners by having the Streets before their doors obstructed." The most recent market there is entirely occupied by butchers. These petitioners ask "leave to build a Market in the Middle of the Street to begin opposite the House formerly poss'd by Thos Kendal & to Extend to wards the river as far as the Smiths Shop now possessed by John Roome." The petition is endorsed "Read & filed Oct 23rd, 1771."—From the original MS., in box No. 6, in city clerk's record-room. The record is entered in the Minutes on Oct. 24.—M. C. G., VII: 324. On Oct. 28, permission was granted to enlarge the market.—Ibid., 326. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 958.

C. G., VII: 324-25. Payment of £80 was made Nov. 11, 1771, on this work (ibid., VII: 328), and the balance on Jan. 24, 1772 (ibid., VII: 345).
23 A committee is appointed "to Cause such of the Streets in the West Dock & South wards (as they shall judge necessary) to be Regulated and paved."—M. C. G., VII: 325. On Oct. 28, the chairman of the committee reported that "the Street [Whitehall St.] leading from the Custom House Corner, to the Whitehall Slip" had been regulated.—Ibid., VII: 325.
24 The following "Return of Deficiencies in the Barracks of New York," by Lieut.-Col. Dudley Templar, 26th Regiment, is perhaps worth quoting:
"Eighty of the mens Blankets at the allowance of one Blanket per man are old & wore out.
"The Stairs in the upper Barracks are so much out of repair that several of the men has been hurt by falling through them.
"The Room floors are broke in several places and wants repair.

25 A petition to the common council, signed by a large number of citizens, and endorsed "Read & filed 28th Oct., [1771]" states that since their petition of last March, the "Oswego Market has been removed, and another Market erected on the Dock at the North River," and that the new market is very inconveniently located; they now renew their former petition that one be erected in the Fields at their expense.—From the original petition in metal file No. 4, city clerk's record-room. See Nov. 27.
26 A petition from "a Considerable Number of Inhabitants" having been made to the common council on Oct. 24 (M. C. G., VII: 344), asking that a committee be appointed "to Carry into Execution a former Order of this Board, relative to the Erecting of a Market at Thomman's Slip in the West ward." (see April 6, 1773), it is now taken up for consideration, with: "two other Petitions each Subscribed by a very Considerable Number of Inhabitants of this City, the one praying leave to Erect a Market in the fields, and the other also praying leave to Erect a Market at the head of Maiden Lane Street, on part of the Ground formerly occupied by Mr Conora, at their own Expense." The board defers action on all three petitions.—M. C. G., VII: 326. Final action was taken on Nov. 27 (q.v.).
27 In a petition to the common council, William McAdam and others set forth that "they have lately at the Expanse of five hundred pounds Erected a Market, on the Corporations Ground in
THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

28. Compliance with a late order of this Board, which is now opened Oct. and much Related to:—This is the Bear Market. See Aug. 19.

28. The petitioners complain: "that they have since heard with much surprise of a late application made suprised to this Board for Leave to Erect another Market within two hundred yards of the one that has Erected." They ask that, "in Consideration of the Great Expense they have been at this Board, will not permit any other Market in that Neighbourhood to be Erected, as the one they have lately set up, will for many years to Come be sufficient for every purpose of a publick Market in that quarter of the City, But should this worshipfull Board not be pleased to authorize a Market, to be Erected within the distance aforesaid, of the one they have Erected; that in such Case, they Rely on the Equity of this Board that they will repay them the money they have so Expended on the Good faith of this Corporation." The common council postpones consideration of this petition also.—M. C. C., VII: 326. See further, Nov. 27. The Bear Market survived the Revolution.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 978; De Vere, Market Book, 313.

28. An advertisement reads: "Those who teach, or want to learn the French Language, may be supplied at Noel and Hazard's Book-Store, next Door to the Merchant's Coffee-House, with Boyer's and Perrin's Grammar, Chambaud's and do's Exercises, Perrin's Spelling Book, do's. Guide, do's. Vademecum, do's. Verbs, being a Collection of French Verbs, both regular and irregular, disposed in alphabetical Order and conjugated; they are all comp. in a single volume of Paper." "Boyer's, D'Alembert's and Nugent's Dictionaries; French Testaments, Epistolary Correspondence in French and English, Telemaque, Economy of Human Life, &c."—N. Y. Merc., Oct. 28, 1771. There were at this time several French schools in the city.

28. An advertisement through the round course at Poulus Hook, is adver- tised to be held on this day between "Booey, Mug, Bastard, and QuickSilver." The match is for 30 dollars, the horses to run twice round to a heat; to "catch catch riders, and start precisely at two o'clock."—N. Y. Merc., Oct. 14, 1771.

Nov. 6. Robert Holl who "entends in a few days to open the well-known tavern in the Broadway, lately kept by Richard Bolton," announces his house on the "corner of the Jew's alley, in Broad-street" to be let.—N. Y. Merc., Nov. 11, 1771. See May 1, 1770.

On April 29, 1772, he was in- structed to pay the accounts of Gavin Louise "for repairing barracks and lodging officers of the 26th regiment."—ibid., 489. The accounts of Evert and Gerard Bancker as barrack-masters of New York prior to the Revolution are preserved in the MSS. Division of the N. Y. Pub. Library.

27. The common council orders that the platform at the end of the Fly Market be removed.—M. C. C., VII: 320.

27. The common council denies the petition "of John Thurman Junr. and others see Oct. 18, relative to the Building a Market at Physicians Dock." The "Several other Petitions preferred to this Board for Leave to Erect Markets, leave the respective Petitioners therein mentioned" (see Oct. 28) are likewise voted down in one inclusive motion.—M. C. C., VII: 351-52. See, however, Jan 7, 1772, for the favourable action finally taken by the city as a result of the initiative taken by the projectors of the market at Nov. Meister's Dock.

27. Since the laudable Design of improving the Streets of this City, has lately been begun by a Gentleman who is a Friend to the Arts, and a Well-wisher to this Province, the Board are pleased to authorize him to carry on the following Particulars; and to recommend them to the Attention of those, who are capable by their Importance and Influence, of carrying them into immediate Execution, as an Extension of the Plan for a further Accommodation and Improvement of the City. 27. The "Union Library Society" is organized. A twelve-page pam- phlet of "Articles" was issued, the preamble of which declared that "the private purchase of books is attended with an expense too heavy for many persons whose inclinations lead them to im- provement." The establishment of a "public library" is thereby justified. A treasurer and 12 directors were provided for, to be elected annually. The directors were to hold monthly meetings and were entrusted with entire management, even to removing the treasurer for incompetence or neglect. The cost of a share was 20s, and the annual subscription, 10s. From the original pamphlet entitled Articles of the Union Library Society of New York, preserved in N. Y. Soc. Library. Cf. Keep, Hist. of N. Y. Society Lib., 112-18. The library was opened Jan. 7, 1772 (p. 6). John Freebody, Jr., of New York City, writing to Christopher Comfort, says: "The cooler is in cool weather.

12. "Pease in cool weather."

12. On July 22 (p. 9), "to view the Ground" in the Out Ward desired for a church, school, and burial- ground, presents its report, which, however, is not of record. The common council orders a copy of it to be served "on the Corpora- tion of Trinity Church in order that their Sentiments may be known Respecting the taking a Grant upon the Conditions mentioned in the said Report."—M. C. C., VII: 336. For Trinity's action, see June 26, 1772.

After a six and a half months' residence in New York (see June 16), he set out for Boston on Dec. 25.—Letters & Papers of John Single- ton Copley and Henry Pelham, 1737-1776, pp. 179, 183-84. the transportation of unfortunatest out of town (see May 9, 1721), deportation back to England was unusual.

The common council decides that "The Petition and the Procedings had thereon Relative to the Granting of the Water Lots prayed for . . . between the Exchange and the Corporation Pier" be taken into consideration on Jan. 7, 1772.—M. C. C., VII:
340. On the latter date, the board agreed to grant the lots as laid down on the plan dated Oct. 29, 1766, and made by Mr. Race and Bancroft. The petitioners were to pay a yearly rent of 18s. 6 foot and "to build them a Bason at the End of the ground prayed for similar to the present one."—ibid., VII: 341.

About this time, "Aristides" issued a broadside addressed "To John Cruger, James Jauncey, James Delancy, and Jacob Walton, Esqr.; The Representatives in General Assembly, for the City and County of New-York." This resented against the overtaxation of New York City. "Aristides" claimed that the city, "notwithstanding its growing and intolerable poor tax," was subjected to the "unreasonable proportion" of one-third of the entire provincial assessment, due to "a confederacy of all the country members against the citizens." He adds: "The city has been stung by a serpent, she feels the poison in her veins . . . Let it not be the fate of your posterity; you are charged with the welfare of a great trading city, that bids fair to be the grand emporium of the new world. Her Merchants are too sensible, rich, and independent to be any man's or any families dupe or slave.—
Her citizens too, even below the order of Mechanics Know their right in the person of Richard Smith & Eiel Jaguart ground upon for their preservation . . . A day of reckoning will come, and woe to the man, who deservefully feels, either their indignation or their contempt. Be it your study then to assert the rights of commerce, to expand its wings, to advance . . . the general federal interest, and above all the public interest, to restore courage to a town too long pulleyed and abused by faction, and to deliver the poor citizens of this metropolis, from the grievous burdenses under which they groan."—From an undated original in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

r in the Oswego Market, and, since its removal, have procured similar accommodation in the new Bear Market, complain, in a petition to the common council, that, "hoping, in the honest exercise of their trade there, to gain a Comfortable maintenance for themselves & their Families," they have been "greatly Deceived in their expectations." Nevertheless, because they have usually exercised their trade in the western part of the city, and being unwilling to lose their customers, they have, at great loss, continued their attendance in the new market. Customers at this market are so few that the butchers are often compelled "to carry their meat unsold Home again by which it depreciates upon their Hands." They are compelled to desert the new market, and express their confidence that a public market-house directly below the place where the Oswego Market stood (in Broadway, at Liberty St.), but adjoining the river, would be "attended with a great concourse of buyers and sellers, and tend much to promote the public convenience." They add the announcement "That the persons who have erected, at their own cost, a large, convenient building there [see Jan. 7], are willing to devote the same to the use of a public market." They therefore pray that the board "will permit them to erect their stalls in said market-house."—From the original petition, in city clerk's record box. See also De Veg's Market Book, 506, where it is printed in full. See, further, Jan. 7.

7 The library of the Union Library Society (see Dec. 3, 1771) is depicted "at the House of Captain John Berrien at Burling's Slip." The public notice, issued "By Order of the Directors, Joshua Watson, Sec'y," declared that new subscriptions would be recurred. The "Annex," declared that, "The Founders of this Institution flatter themselves with the Prospect of a speedy Advancement of so useful an Undertaking, as they conceive it founded upon Principals of Freedom and Abraham Meiser and others inform the common council that they have erected a market-house at the North River, and desire to convey it to the use of the public.—M. C. C., VII: 341. This was in conformity with the original permission to build given in 1717.—See summary under April 6, 1733, for the long history of this grant. This was the Crown Market, in Liberty St., west of Greenwich St. It was sometimes known as Meiser's or Watson's Market.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 958. For the city's acceptance of it, see March 31, 1771, an advertisetisement, signed by Adria Rutgers, Richard Sharp, John Morin Scott, and Benjamin Kissam, for the sale of part of the estate of the late Petrus Rutgers, refers to the lots as "situate at the North River fronting Thurman's Slip, near the new market."—Ridgeway's Gazetteer, Jan. 14, 1771. The Crown Market was destroyed by fire in September, 1776 (p. 0).—De Veg, Market Book, 339.

The inhabitants who reside near where the Oswego Market formerly stood, who petitioned "sometimes ago . . . for leave to erect a Public Market on the Lot known by the name of Courto's Lot" (see April 24, 1771), petition again for consideration of their former petition, believing that it was not favourably considered because the place asked for was not "put Separately" in their petition,—that is, not specifically asked for.—From original petition, in metal file No. 6, in city clerk's record-room, encored
"in favor of Corvin & Eiel Jaguart and for the protection of their rights . . . and Thomas Hicks . . . as Commissioners for that purp"ose . . . from the Town of Harlem to this Corporation Relative to the Settlement of the Boundaries between them & this Corporation, by Commissioners, meet with the approbation of this board . . . they do therefore on their part name William Nicoll and Thomas Hicks . . . as Commissioners for that purpose . . . and the General assembly shall direct and subscribe to be Chosen by the Town of Harlem do name a fifth person, which five persons Shall be Commissioners for finally Sething the aforesaid Boundaries . . . And it is further ordered & agreed to, that Mr. Recorder be desired to prepare a Bill to be laid before the General assembly layer and invest the Commissioners with full and absolute power to settle effectually the controversy aforesaid."—M. C. C., VII: 347-44. See also Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 803-4.

A committee is appointed "to view the place proposed as a Bason, in front of the Ground agreed to be granted to the Propriitors of the houses frothing the East Great Dock & Cause a plan to be made of the same and prefer it to this Board with all Convenient Speed."—M. C. C., VII: 345. The plan was submitted to the board on April 10, and approved. The clerk was ordered to prepare "the Draft of Grants to the petitioners accordingly they shall have the aid of the Committee."—ibid., VII: 353.

The assembly resolves, by a vote of 13 to 7, "that no person is capable of being elected a representative to serve for any city, county, town, borough or manor, in this or any future Assembly in and belonging to the City of New York . . ."—N. Y. Jour., Jan. 23, 1772.

Whitehead Hicks issues the following proclamation "To the Inhabitants of the City of New York:

Considering the extreme Danger of Gunpowder in this City which must be manifest to every thinking Person; and that the Practice is in direct Violation of a Law of the Corporation, or agreeable to any such order and to avert or prevent their own Safety, as well as that of their Fellow Citizens as to expose both to such imminent Hazard. Did we not see it exemplified in Fact, one would scarcely imagine it possible that the Love of Gain (and a pauly Saving it) should so far extinguish the Sentiments of Honor and Religion, as to brook any Man of Thousand-sands of his Species, rather than comply with a most salutary Law, and pay for the Storage of his Powder. . . .

"I am desired by some of the principal Firemen of the City
. . . to issue this Haal Bid, in order to acquaint the Inhabitants here and there with their Duty and to deter them not to presume, for the future, to store any Powder in the City, but in Magazines prepared for the Purpose: That if they do, they must not expect their Assistance in Times of Fire, as they cannot think of running headlong into inevitable Destruction, but are determined to neglect their Offices. What a deplorable State this City must then be reduced to is easily to be conceived—Should any Persons, not duly impressed with a Sense of the Danger arising from such Practices, have any Powder stored in the City, I must beseech them forthwith to remove it, and thereby prevent the pernicious Consequences to which, in the mean Time, he exposes his Fellow Citizens."—From an original to the N. Y. Pub. Library.

Gov. Tryon urges the assembly to appropriate money towards the establishment of a hospital, which has been "planned by a society lately incorporated" (see June 15, 1771) "for the reception of the poor, debilitated by age, or oppressed with infirmities."

Trinity vestry "taking into Consideration the requisition of the governors of the Hospital or Infirmary for Two Acres of years for the sole purpose of Building a Hospital at the Annual Rent of Twenty pounds."—Trin. Min. (MS.), Jan. 31. Keatings' "Paper Manufactory" (see July 14, 1768) was between the "Fly-Market, and Burling's Slip."—N. Y. Jour., Jan. 4, 1770.

In a message to the assembly, Gov. Tryon says: "By an extract of the King's instructions . . . I am required and directed to apply to you to pass a law for collecting a powder duty; and upon inquiring into the state and condition of the ammunition for the defence of this province, I find there are but few barrels remaining for the public service. I am therefore recommended to you to provide for the same as will correspond with his Majesty's wishes, and be most effectual in furnishing a constant and regular supply of ammunition."—Assemb. Jour. (1772), 27. On March 13, the assembly resolved not to present such a bill—ibid., 97.

The account of William Wanton for "Paving round to Bath House, New York, being undertaken . . . by order of the common council on this day, includes an item 'To pull out the Stumps £2-10.'—From original voucher in comptroller's office, box No. 1.

that this Corporation will lease to the Governors of the said Hostery Two Acres of Ground on the North side of Keatings Paper Mill for the only purpose of a Publick Hospital or Infirmary for the Term of Ninety nine years at the Annual Rent or sum of Fifteen pounds per annum.—Trin. Min. (MS.). Such an arrangement was not acceptable to the governors (see Feb. 13). For a different location, see May 20.

"A copy of an Order of the Common Council of the City of New York reciting a Report of a Committee of that Corporation founded upon the Petition of James D'Lancy Esq! and others praying for a Grant of a Piece of Land in the East Ward of this City in Trust to this Corporation for the Erecting and building a School House, Church and Parsonage house and for the use of a burying Ground, being Produced and read And the same being taken into Consideration by this Board It was thereupon Resolved and Ordered that Mr. [John Talbot] Kempe, Mr. [Edward] Light and Mr [Theophilus] Bache be a Committee to Confer with the Common Council of the City of New York, and to apply for a Plan of the Proposed Building and finally to agree with the said Corporation upon the Terms and Conditions on which this Corporation will accept the Proposed Trust."—Trin. Min. (MS.), See June 26.

Andrew Elliot was at this time the receiver-general, as appears from a memorial by a stockholder of the Manhattan Corporation:
"A Court. Min., 489
(see also 470, 478). He later became lieutenant-governor.—See May 23, 1781.

"As the Distresses of the Prisoners confined in the Goal of this City, appear to be very great, they being in want not only of Eating but even water, and to prevent their remaining not to presume, for the future, to store any Powder in the City, but in Magazines prepared for the Purpose: That if they do, they must not expect their Assistance in Times of Fire, as they cannot think of running headlong into inevitable Destruction, but are determined to neglect their Offices. What a deplorable State this City must then be reduced to is easily to be conceived—Should any Persons, not duly impressed with a Sense of the Danger arising from such Practices, have any Powder stored in the City, I must beseech them forthwith to remove it, and thereby prevent the pernicious Consequences to which, in the mean Time, he exposes his Fellow Citizens."—From a copy of the letter among the original Smith MSS., folio 195.

A petition, emanating from New York City, to allow Isaac Teller "to administer medicines in the Indian method" is rejected by the assembly.—Assemb. Jour. (1772), 52.

"It may not be amiss to remark this public. That we are told the Buoy lately fixed on the S. W. Spit of the East Bank, near Sandy Hook [see June 17, 1771], is carried away by the Ice."
—N. Y. Min., Feb. 17, 1772. Later, the buoy was found and set up again.

Gov. Tryon sends this message to the assembly: "The present Secretary's office being wholly inadequate to the purpose of preserving the public records, and as the accidents which they are liable in their present situation, must be justly alarming to every person who is interested in the security of property; I cannot avoid recommending these considerations as highly deserving your attention. To erect a new building I consider as the best expedient. In which, besides the apartments necessary for the transaction of the ordinary business, there may be one room so constructed as to afford all possible security against fire or other casualties. A plan of such a design accompanies this message, the estimate of the expense of which, in brick work, amounting to eleven hundred pounds, possible. Should the same meet with your approbation, I flatter myself, you will make provision for carrying it into execution."— Assemb. Jour. (1772), 61. For the assembly's action, see March 13.

The treasurer of the colony, Abraham Lott, having used the funds of the colony not properly appropriated by the approbation of the Governor, and after his retirement, has been instructed to account to the public for the moneys, it is resolved that Lott's action was imprudent but not dishonest. However, as the precedent might become dangerous, the house resolves that in future so money shall be issued out of the treasury except upon lawful authority.—

The legislature passes "An Act for making a further Provision of two thousand Pounds for furnishing his Majesty's Troops quarter-ted in this Colony with Necessaries for one Year."—Col. Laws N. Y., V, 274-75.

Tryon tells Smith that he is "determined to be drawn into no dangerous Measures," that he means "to be independent," and that he intends "to coax the Interest of the Province" and not to "steer by the Popular Voice nor be a Dupe to the Assembly or Gentlemen."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

"From this Day I predict that the DeLancys will begin their Measures to harass this Governor, but they will proceed slowly this year," Fear of his Temper."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

In response to the governor's message (see Jan. 8), the assembly resolves "that there be allowed a sum not exceeding £1500, for making the necessary repairs to the fortifications of this City."— Assemb. Jour. (1772), 97.

The assembly resolves that the matter of building a new secretary's office, recommended by Tryon in his message of Feb. 21 (p.62), be postponed till the next sessions.—Assemb. Jour. (1772), 97.

Moutagne’s Tavern (now 253-254 Broadway) and at Protestant Hall on Long Island.—N.Y. Mercury, March 25, 1772. 24

The following passage "is owing to the circumstance of this Colony" is passed by the legislature, because the laws "are at present irregularly bound up, and not properly digested, which often occasions Difficulties and Inconveniences." This directs that Peter van Schaack collect, arrange, revise, and index all the laws passed since the happy Revolution (New York, 1774).—Col. Laws N. Y., IV: 355-57. Publication of all the laws enacted from 1664 down to and including March 8, 1773, was made by Hugh Gaine in 1774. The subsequent laws, of 1774 and 1775, were also published by Hugh Gaine.—Explanatory Note, I: vii.

The legislature passes an act "to settle and establish the Line or Lines of Division between the City of New York, and the Township of Harlem, so as to secure the right of Soil in Controversy" (see Jan. 9. This names the commissioners who are to have charge of the dispute and provides that each place shall pay half of the total cost.—Col. Laws N. Y., IV: 452-571 Assembly Journ. (1772). 64, 85-86, 96, 113. This law was approved by the king (see Dec. 4, 1773). Regarding the new line, see Apr. 14, 1773.

The law provides an act "to remove the Indians and the negroes to and from the theatre which is called the Theatre near the Broadway and the North River" (see Jan. 10. The board of health is empowered to do this lot.—From the original petition, in metal file No. 6, city clerk's record-room, endorsed "filed in C: Council March 26: 1772." See also De Voe, Market Book, 509-10. The board orders "that this and the other Petitions relative to the Building of Markets" be considered on March 31 (p.c.—M. G. C., VII: 348-49; De Voe, 350. A large number of farmers of Orange and Bergen Counties, in a petition to the common council, state that "they bring to New York considerable quantities of Rice Indian & Wheat Meal, Poultry & Pork & Butter & other country produce," to "the New Oswego Market" (see Jan. 10, 1773, (q.v.)) and the removal of the old one; that sales have diminished because the market is situated "where there is no thoroughfare." They explain that "the Oswego Market is what is commonly call'd a Tide Market;" and "having tried both the old market in the broad way & the New down at the North River, those were found both less convenient for traders, and for new location. They add: "That it may be objected by the Citizens, if we get a low price for our produce it is a saving to the City which objection would hold good, if all was bought by housekeepers, but that is not the case for as soon as the price of Meal & butter the two principal articles are a little under the price, the Meat sellers & Hucksters purchase all we have (after Twelve a Clock) & afterwards sell it for an advanced price to their fellow Citizens so that the advantage centers in a few Individuals whereas if we could get a living price so as to pay us for our expense & trouble in comming down, it would encourage us to bring our produce to market & lay out our money freely where we sell our produce, but if we must sell so as not to be paid for our trouble to come to town, we would rather sell our Meal & butter to the Country shopkeepers who are glad to take these articles of us & when it gets in their hands they pack them in Casks & Skins and send them to the stores in N York where they lay for a market & then the Citizens are obliged to pay an advanced price besides paying for the casks which is all lost. This is also the case with Pork in the fall of the Year.

That your petitioners have understood that a lot is purchased by Individuals near where the Old Broadway Market stood." They state that the board resolves to the former this lot.—From the original petition, in metal file No. 6, city clerk's record-room, endorsed "Petition . . . to Erect a Market House on the lot formerly occupied by Mf Conaro, filed March 31: 1772." See also De Voe's Market Book, 510-11. For the board's further action, see below.

The common council decides to accept the market-house presented to the city on Jan. 7 (p.c.), the order being "that the said Building so lately Erected at the North River by the said John Thurman & others be accepted of by this board for the use of a publick Market House and this Board Do hereby Establish the same Building as a publick Market House accordingly, provided the proprietors of the Ground on which the said Market Stands, do in Some short time, Release the said Ground to this Corporation & their Successors."—M. G. C., VII: 345, 350-51. This was the Crown Market.—See Jan. 7.

The city is also ordered "that permission be Given to the said Petitioners [see Jan. 7, and March 26] Residing in the Out Ward, for leave & Licence to Erect & Set up a Market House on the aforesaid Lot of Ground, formerly Occupied by the said Mf Conaro Situate on the West Side of the Broadway Street, in the West Ward of the City, provided the proprietors of the said Ground do Release the same."—Ibid., VII: 350-51. This was the new Oswego Market. It was finished by May 15 (p.c.). Its situation, however, was not, as stated in the Minutes, on the west side of Broadway, in the West Ward, but, as shown by the deed, was in the bed of the present Maiden Lane, just east of Broadway, and extending to the corner, that is, between the north-east and south-east corners of Maiden Lane and Broadway. See also Sketch entitled "Bounds of Oswego Market at Maiden Lane," with Bander Paper (Misc.), in N.Y. Pub. Library. This was the second site of the Oswego Market, and the third market that bore that name. —De Voe, op. cit., 326. See, further, May 15.

The committee of the common council appointed on May 5, to consider late & Opposite the street before the fort and about the Bowling Green" (see Aug. 22, 1771) is now ordered "to raise the said Bowling Green four inches & a half, or so high as to Carry off the Water that usually remains there after every Considerable Rain." —M. C., VII, 355. A payment of £20, ordered on July 23, was for this improvement. —Ibid., VII, 399.

The common council orders "that the Alderman & Common Councilman of the West Ward Do Cause that part of the Broadway Street whereof the Late Oswego Street stood to be Regulated & paved, this board only finding the Stone & Labour." —M. C., VII, 355. See description of the Montrose Plan, I, 349-61.

A committee is appointed to consider a petition of Edward Nicoll, "praying Leave to Erect a Store House, or Dwelling house on the Water Lot in front of his Dwelling House adjoining the West Great Dock in the South Ward." —M. C., VII, 355. The committee reported, on June 11, that Nicoll had proposed that he be granted "the Breadth of his Lot & Seventy feet in Length, in such Manner as not to Incommode the Street nor to Build before his Neighbours, nor to take in any Part of his Neighbours Ground." As the members of the committee found "that the west side of the Runs Diminishes and it is probable the hands of the people shall, and the company of the said Edward Nicoll shall receive, instead of the full breadth of his Present Dwelling house," only his proportion of the same, as shown on a plan submitted. The board agreed with the committee and ordered the draft of the grant prepared accordingly. —Ibid., VII, 360-61.

Samuel Waldron, to whom the ferry to Nassau Island had been leased Jan. 24, 1771 (p. 20), has died, and the ferry is now leased to Nicholas P. Bogart upon the same terms except that the lease is to be continued for five years "in Addition to the Unexpired Term of the Said Samuel Waldron." —M. C., VII, 352. See, however, April 16.

"The Petition of Samuel Francis was read praying that some recompense may be made him for the Damages he has sustained by Lowering the street in front of his House [Nassau—see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III, 981] Whereupon it is ordered that the same Committee that was appointed to regulate Warren Street be a Committee to view the Promises and report to this Board an Estimate of what They conceive will be the expense of Erecting a Wall for Securing the Foundation of his House."

—Tern. Min. (1772), 441.

As appears by the following advertisement, a dwelling and storage were part of the John St. Theatre property: "For sale! The lease of three years to come from next May, of the dwelling house and store house, situated in John Street, being part of the lot where the Play-house stands on." —N. Y. Gaz. (Weyman), April 11, 1772.

The "Nassau Ferry" is leased to Adolph Waldron on the same terms provided in the lease to Nicholas P. Bogart (see April 10), the latter having "declined taking the same." —M. C., VII, 354.

The common council appoints a committee to "Examine and View what Condition the Lots Market is in and whether any Necessarys ought to be made, and how much." —M. C., VII, 354. This appears to be the action taken in response to an undated petition asking the board to give financial assistance in rebuilding and enlarging Counties Market for the use of country people. —See the original in metal file, No. 4, city clerk's record room. The committee reported on May 7 that necessary repairs would cost £20, and recommending that this sum be so expended, or he contributed "towards building a New Addition to that part, of the Market lately Erected there." The board ordered that it be allowed "towards the Berry's Map. —Ibid., VII, 357.

A house occupied by George Brush, (later called a White Conduit House—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III, 981), "in the upper end of the Broadway, opposite the Fresh Water Pond," is offered for sale; and, "... a road passing the front of the house & garden [extension of Broadway] will be opened in the spring to Green-Wood Avenue." —N. Y. Jour., April 16, 1772. This seems to prove that, contrary to the statement on p. 568, Vol. III, the extension of Broadway beyond Canal St. was under way in 1772.

A special order of Council was completed and espoused as far north as the Sand Hill Road (Greenwich Avenue) in the spring of 1773. See also Nov. 23, 1773.

The "Scheme of a Lottery" is advertised. "For raising the Sum of £720 to build a Pier, or convenient Harbour on the North River, at the Wharf of the Estate of Nicholas Roosevelt, Esq.; and in Case of this Scheme not being much involved, it is hoped, that the Owners of Crafts, Boats, Vessels; Boarmen, Farmers, and Merchants, trading on the North River, will use their utmost Endeavours to facilitate and encourage a Plan, of such general Utility."

"Timely Notice will be given of the precise Time and Place of Drawing. To consist of 4000 Tickets, at 3 Dollars each, is 12,000 Dollars. Subject to 15 per Cent Deduction." —N. Y. Jour., April 23, 1772. See June 29.

That postal service is now extended to include Quebec (see Feb. 10, 1769), is shown by the following: "His Majesty's [Deputy] Post-Master General, intending to establish a Weekly Post to Quebec, any Person willing to undertake the riding work, between this City and Albany, (setting out every Wednesday Morning, on the arrival of the Post, at South Ward, and that can give sufficient Security for his faithfully delivering the Mail at the Post-Office in Albany, every Saturday at 12 o'clock, to be dispatched from thence on Saturday Evening, and return with the Canada Mail to this Office, on Tuesday Evening,) will please to send his Proposals in writing, as to this Office as soon as possible. The officer Colton, Sec'y General Post Office, New-York." —N. Y. Merc., May 4, 1772.

"Mrs. Farrari removes from the old, and opens the "spacious elegant new Coffee-House on the opposite cross corner" (south-east corner Wall and Water Sts.). Her regular customers assemble and are "unexpectedly and generally regaled with arrack, punch, wines, cold ham, tongue &c." The two insurance officers are likewise moved from the old to the new Coffee House. —N. Y. Merc., Apr. 27, 1772.

Colesen, Secretary of State for the Treasury, is appointed to the post of Post-Master General. The officers and soldiers make "an elegant appearance," Rummor says that the regiment "is to go to Montreal in about a fortnight." —N. Y. Merc., May 4, 1772. They embarked on May 24 (p. 20).

The provincial council issues an order for application for quotas and transportation for troops marching from Quebec to New York and vice versa. —Col. Gaz. Min., 460.

Between two and three o'clock in the morning, a fire breaks out "in or near the Distillery back of Mr. Benjamin Hildreth's in St. George's Square. ... the wind being at about N.W. the Flames soon reached the Wooden Buildings adjoining and carried all before them to the Front of Water Streets." Notwithstanding all the efforts of the inhabitants, seven houses on the north side of Water Street, one house on the south side of Water Street, and two houses "in a narrow Street to the Eastward of where the Fire originated" were burned.—N. Y. Merc., May 4, 1772; N. Y. Jour., May 7, 1772.

The common council, for liquors "delivered out at this fire." —M. C., VII, 355. St. George's Sq. was the present Franklin Sq.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III, 1009.

"John Cox, (Late a Prisoner confined in Gaol in this City upwards of twelve Years, as a Debtor) Bega Leave to inform the Public, that by the Assistance and Encouragement of a Number of Friends, he intends opening a Tavern on Tuesday, the 4th Instant, at the House lately occupied by Mr. Henry Bicker, in the Fields, being the Corner House above where Mr. Abraham De La Montagne now lives." He has laid in a "Quantity of the best Madeira Wines, Spirituous Liquors, etc., etc., as he is no Parsonist, nor does he intend to keep a Pity, Apr. 16, 1772. This was Hamden

The town of Warren was new settled by the people of the country, and some of them lived at his home, "generally called the Glass-House," which hereafter will not be "open'd for public entertainment."—N. Y. Merc., May 4, 1772. Baysau succeeded Taylor, who left the house in 1776. See Oct. 7, 1754. 5

"Proposed—That seven Guineas be paid to Capt. Isaac T. Winn in lieu of the damages which he sustained by the guinea sheep which he lost in the storm of 1775, and that afterwards the same was paid Mr. Rache, late Treasurer, for a Seal of this Corporation."—Col. Rec. N. Y. Chamber of Commerce, 176. This seal was made in London, and brought out by Capt. Winn, commander of a trading vessel. It bears the date of the royal charter of the chamber, 1756, and is of solid silver about three inches in diameter and about one inch in thickness. It bears the motto, "Non Nobis Natt Solum" ("Not born for ourselves alone").—Bishop, Chron. of 150 Tr. Chamber of Commerce of the State of N. Y. (1768-1918), 14.

The seal disappeared during the Revolution and was recovered by marvellous chance a few years later. A gentleman interested in the affairs of this country was looking over the collection of a curiosity-shop in London when he came across it; he at once restored it to the custody of the president, who was the designated custodian of the seal by resolution of June 2, 1772. It seems probable that the last colonial president, Mr. Isaac Loy, took it with him on his mission to the British troops in 1778, and that it afterwards found its way into the shop from whence it was rescued. The seal is in fine preservation, in the custody of the secretary, and is still used in the authentication of documents.—Colonial Records of the N. Y. Chamber of Commerce, 160, 152-56.

Key, III 981) is indicated in a vestry order which requires that the Committee appointed to regulate Warren Street [see April 10] have also power (if they think proper) to build a Wall on the North west side of Samuel Francis's House to Support the Foundations of the said House."—Ibid. See May 26, 1773.

The common council orders the recorder and the several aldermen to enforce "so far the State of the Bridges and Embankments in and Endeavour to fall upon ways & Means for putting the same upon Some better Regulation."—M. C. C., III: 756. This committee failed to present any report until April 7, 1775 (p. v.). For the early history of the bridewell, which name was, at yet, only applied to a few rooms set apart in the "New Goal," see Nov. 21, 1765; regarding the keeper's income, see Nov. 28, 1767.

A committee is appointed "to remove two of the fire Engines now under the City hall, & fix one in the West Ward and the Other in Montgomery Ward."—M. C. C., III: 356. A payment of $31 was authorized, on Nov. 15, to be "applied towards Building a Fire Engine House in Montgomery Ward."—Ibid., VII: 389. See Dec. 23, 1773.

The manner of raising money to pay for the new market, now completed on Conaro's lot (see March 31), is set forth in a "Scheme of a Lottery." For raising the sum of three hundred pounds, towards Thomas Baysau offers country lodging the comer of Maiden-Lane, near the place where the old Oswego-market stood, in the Broad-Way. The Lottery to consist of two thousand five hundred tickets, at two dollars each. . . . N. B.—Not two blanks to a prize; Tickets to be had of Nicholas C. Bogert, Henry T. Allen, Jeremiah F. Beekman, and all the neighbours about the market."—N. Y. Jour., June 25, 1772. The lot was purchased by a neighbourhood subscription, with bonds to secure the full amount.—M. G. C. (1784-1813), I: 1451; De Voe, Market Book, 370.

A survey of this date in the Baeker Collection in the N. Y. Public Library bears the title, "Plan of a parcel of Land situate and lying in the West Ward of the City of NY purchased from Anthony Rutgers by the Governors of the Hospital to be erected in said City. The ground had a frontage of 440 feet on the west side of Broadway, between the present Duane and Worth Sts., and extended 300 feet, west to Church St. The corner-stone of the building was not laid until Sept. 3, 1773 (p. v.).

Samuel Francis, in advertising this Queen's Head Tavern, also announces "that his gardens at Vaux-Hall, . . . are now open for the Summer season."—N. Y. Merc., May 25, 1772.

This is the date on a survey entitled "Plan of a parcel of Ground together with the Buildings erected thereon lying between Maiden Lane and John Street in the North Ward of the City of New York surveyed at the Request of Mr. Anthony Rutgers." The places marked include a "Brick Stone," the "New Brick Coach House & Carriage," and the "Kitchin," and that it afterwards found its way into the shop from whence it was rescued. The seal is in fine preservation, in the custody of the secretary, and is still used in the authentication of documents.—Colonial Records of the N. Y. Chamber of Commerce, 160, 152-56.

The provincial council receives a legal opinion concerning a letter from Thomas South, envoy of the French, concerning the fortifications of New York City.—Col. Coun. Min., 460.

The 21st Regiment (see May 24) is reviewed near the city by Gen. Gage. "The Exercise was continued for several Hours, and exhibited a great Variety of Manoeuvres and Modes of Attack, Defence, Advance and Retreat, etc., with Firings and Movements suitable to every Occasion in actual Service; all which were performed with surprising Dexterity and Exactness, to the great Delight of every Spectator, but cannot be described, with Justness and Propriety, by a Person not Master of the Subject."—N. Y. Merc., June 8, 1772. Part of the regiment left on June 4 (p. v.).

Three companies of the 60th Regiment (Royal Americans) arrive from Quebec.—N. Y. Merc., June 8, 1772. More of the regiment came on July 1 (p. v.).

At midnight, a number of people in boats board the armed schooner "Gaspee" at Providence, Rhode Island, bind the crew, and send them ashore, and then set fire to the vessel. A pistol is "discharged by the Captain of the Schooner, and a musket or Pistol from one of the Boats," by which the captain is wounded. The ship is totally destroyed.—N. Y. Merc., June 22, 1772. This event is "considered by Rhode Island writers as the earliest aggressive conduct of the patriots."—Winnet. Nat. Soc. Ctrl.Hist. of Am., VII: 90.

The affair created a great sensation in England, and it was ordered that those engaged in it should be sent to England for trial. For this purpose the home government appointed colonial commissioners [see Dec. 29], who sat at Newport from the 4th to the 13th January, 1773, to consider the case of the prisoners, and to find out a regular way to allow the arrest of, any person for transportation. Nothing came of the order except ill-humor in England and indignation in the colonies, where it was regarded as an invasion of their constitutional right of trial by their peers."—Ibid., VI: 55.
June 1772. De Lancey's Horse Poppet. On the 10th, a purse of £50 was won by "Mr. Water's Horse Auctioneer," which outran "Mr. Cornell's Horse Richmond, Mr. Elsworth's Horse Quicksilver, and Mr. Medicare's Horse Columbus."—N. Y. Merc., June 15, 1772.

The Trinity Corporation again petitions the common council for the "Land and Soil lying on their side of the North Side of Vesey's Street" and extending the same, as described in the original petition (see Feb. 26, 1760, and April 7, 1769). This time the request is considered and agreed to. In payment, the corporation of the city is to receive forever "the Yearly Quit Rent of one Shilling p'd foot for every foot so to be Granted them from Hudson's River," from the date of the grant.—M. C. C., VII: 356. The water lots thus granted lay between Vesey and Barclay Sts., between Murray and Warren Sts., and between Warren and Chambers Sts. On June 22, Trinity Corporation received the report of its committee, announcing the favourable action of the common council.—Trin. Min., (MS.).

The Committee that was appointed to apply to the City Corporation [see June 16] for a Grant of the Water Lots fronting the Church Lands reported that the said Corporation had agreed to grant to this Corporation so much of the Water Lots fronting the Church Lands as lay between Vesey Street and Barclay Street also between Murray Street and Warren Street and between Warren Street and Chambers Street at the rate of one Shilling p'd foot. Ordered that the said Committee apply for the Grant accordingly.—M. C. C., VII: 366.

An advertisement informs the public that "The Stage Coach between New-York and Boston which for the first Time sets out this Day from Mr. Fowler's Tavern . . . at Fresh-Water, in New-York, will continue to go the Course between Boston and New-York, so as to be at each of those Places once a Fortnight, coming in on Saturday Evening and setting out to Return, by the Way of Hartford, on Monday Morning. The Price to Passengers, will be 4d. New-York, or 3d. lawful Money per Mile, and Baggage at a reasonable Rate. Gentlemen and Ladies who choose to encourage this useful, neat, and expensive Undertaking, may depend upon good Usage, and that the Coach will always put up at Houses on the Road where the best Entertainment is provided. . . ."—N. Y. Jour., June 25, 1772. A New York penny was worth only 3d. of a Boston penny because in New York eight shillings were reckoned to a pound while the value of the ducat was reckoned. Boston money was called "lawful" because its ratio to English sterling money had been regulated by law.—Wight, Currency of the Brit. Colonies in Am. (1765), xi, 161; Adler, Money & Money Units of the Am. Colonies, 1-3.

The clerk is ordered to prepare the draft of a grant to the "Rector & Inhabitants of the City of New York in Communion with the Church of England" for a triangle of ground in the Out Ward of the city at the end of Bowery Lane (see Jan. 31) bounded by the road leading to Kingsbridge, the Bloomingdale Road, and the fence of Benjamin Nicoll, and terminating in the south where the Kingsbridge and Bloomingdale Roads separate.

This is to be used as the site for a church, school, and burying-ground.—M. C. C., VII: 298-99, 366. This triangular plot of 26 acres may be readily located on W. 15th St., between the present Madison Square. It was never actually granted to Trinity, the projected action never having been consummated (see Nov. 1, 1786, March 12 and Aug. 20, 1788, and June 24, 1789). Part of this trangle came into use, towards the latter part of the eighteenth century, as a burying-ground for the Paris火箭, or potterfield, and this use of the ground ceased in 1797.—M. C. C. (MS.), XII: 170. Part of the tract was granted, in 1807, to the United States government for an arsenal.—Ibid., XVI: 262-64; XVII: 360. The arsenal later became the first home of the Society for the Reformation of Juvenile Delinquents—the House of Refuge. This was in the year 1825.—Ibid., L: 116-19.

The public is assured that the lottery "for raising a sum of money for building a safe and convenient harbour (so necessary for preserving the crafts, vessels and property of traders in general) on the North River [see April 23], has met with great encouragement, and will certainly be drawn on the 37th of July next."—N. Y. Merc., June 29, 1772. No evidence appears that the drawing actually took place, or that the improvement contemplated was carried out.

Scotch Street, for which one searches in vain on any plan of the city, can be identified by a line on the City Hall plan, 1769), from near the present Twenty-fifth Street, over the East River to the Water Slip.—Ibid., July 6, 1772. The regiment was reviewed on Aug. 8 (p. 2).

One of the attractions of Vauxhall Gardens, as announced by Mr. Francis, is "a number of Wax Figures as large as life, first in the newest and most elegant manner, representing their present Majesties, King George and Queen Charlotte, sitting on the throne, with their usual attendants, several of the nobility, &c., properly disposed in a large apartment genteelly fitted for the purpose, and proper persons to show the same, from eight in the morning till ten in the evening."—N. Y. Merc., July 6, 1772. Before July 25, Francis had added to his collection of wax figures the "Banquet in Macbeth, with the Appearance of Banquo's Ghost, and a large Gallery filled with Spectators," also "Harlequin and Columbine," finished "in a very pleasing Manner."—Ibid., July 25, 1772.

The common council appoints a committee "to cause a Cover to be made over the fish market at Countess Slip."—M. C. C., VII: 366. A payment of £1,010.14 was ordered by the board on Dec. 2 in settlement of an account "for Building a fish Market; and £201,714.13, a year later, for work done there."—Ibid., VII: 390, 464.: Of April 16; and see De Vor, Market Book, 117. See also, reporting Commissary (of the Great Fish Market), Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 938.

The engaged grants to Augustus and Frederick von Cortlandt John Vredenburgh, Jonas and Henry Remsen, Henry Holland, Wal- dron Blau, and William Milliner, "for the Water Lots in front of their Respective Dwelling Houses in the Dock Ward" are approved and signed by the mayor.—M. C. C., VII: 366 City Grants, Liber Deeds, I: 231-28-38. These lots were situated on the south side of Water St., extending south into the East River, between Broad St. and Countryside Slip.—See Jan. 24, 1767.

The common council grants a petition for filling up Peck's Slip (see Aug. 24, 1767) "at the Expense of the Petitioners." This action followed the consideration of two petitions, one for filling up, and the other against it.—M. C. C., VII: 365, 366. To compare the shore line before and after the filling, see Pls. 42 and 64, Vol. 1, the first depiction of Boston as a city, and the above, the board voted to contribute £5 to "making the front wall across Pecks Slip."—M. C. C., VII: 368. The expense necessary to "Extend the drain" was also assumed by the board.—Ibid., 366, 391.

Alderman Gautier lays before the board "an Account of the Cost of two fire Engines, belonging to Thomas Tiller—the largest of which this board agreed to purchase." He is "requested to purchase the Same."—M. C. C., VII: 366. On July 25, the board ordered that William Shipman be paid £51,711 for a fire-engine.—Ibid., VII: 368. A committee was empowered, on Sept. 9, to buy an engine from Davis Hunt.—Ibid., VII: 373. Hunt was paid £500 on Sept.

On this day Gov. Tryon administered oaths to the municipal officers at his house, only with Isaac Granger, N. Y. Society, 381-82. This was Richmond Hill house, formerly occupied by Abraham Mortimer. See Nov. 23.

Alderman Blagge, who has served on the board several years, and by virtue of his office is also justice of the peace for N. Y. County, has recently been appointed county coroner by the governor. The board now votes to seek the opinion of several "Gentlemen of the Law" as to the legality of his holding both offices.—M. C. G., VII: 383. A legal decision was never rendered. Blagge resigned as coroner, and Gov. Tryon appointed Blagge's son, John, to the office.—Ibid., VII: 479.

Under this date there is recorded in the Minutes a list of 135 freemen belonging to the several fire-engines. They are listed by wards and are said to be "under the Command of Jacobus Stoutenburgh Engineer and Isaac Stoutenburgh, George Stanton & Jacob Roofe Assistants."—M. C. G., VII: 385-87. A legislative act, of Feb. 6, 1775 (p. 5.), provided for an increase of 20 men.—Col. Laws N. Y., V: 456-57.

The provincial council makes an allowance for firewood for the Royal Artillery camp on Nassau Island.—Col. Coun. Min., 493.

The second battalion of the 6th Regiment embarks on board the Transports destined for "the Island of Antigua." Since their arrival in the city (see June 3), the soldiers "have conducted themselves greatly to the Satisfaction, and deserving the Applause of the Inhabitants of this City, which certainly the good Conduct of the Gentlemen Officers contributes very much to their own Honour, and the Behaviour of their Interners."—N. T. Merc., Nov. 9, 1772. See also Sept. 7.

The Chamber of Commerce orders a payment of £57 to Mr. Nov. Pratt "for taking Governor Colden's portrait" (see April 2, 1774). 3

A committee is appointed to have it framed and "placed in the Chamber," where it still hangs.—Col. Recs. N. Y. Chamber of Commerce, 160.

Judge Robert R. Livingston writes to the Earl of Dartmouth that he has been "five times chosen Representative for the Manor of Livingston in General Assembly," but that the members have excluded him on the ground that "no Judge of the Supreme Court should sit or vote in the House." He considers "this assumption of power in the Assembly ... injurious to His Majesty's just authority," and feels it his duty to lay the case before Dartmouth.—N. Y. Col. Doc., VIII: 318-20.

They are commissioned to erect a public library which shall "for ever hereafter be called by the name of, The New-York Society Library."—Charter, Recs. Tuesdays and Wednesdays of the N. Y. Soc. Library (1789), 3-11.

A plan of the ground between Cometics Slip and Whitehall Slip, showing the Albany pier and basin and the exchange at this time, and bearing this date, is reproduced and described as A. Pl. 5 a, Vol. III.

A petition, endorsed "Read & filed November the 15 th 1774," is presented to the common council by "the proprietors, and Inhabitants, adjacent to White Hall Slip," declaring that this slip is "rather a Nuisance, than a Conveniency," and asking "that Liberty may be given, that the said Slip may be filled up, as far to the Southward, as the house of Mr. John Martin, and from that in a line, to the Battery, or in such manner, as to the Worshipfull Board, shall appear most convenient."—From the original petition filed in metal file No. 6, in city clerk's record-room. The board orders that the petitioners be permitted "to fill up said Slip, as far to the Southward, as the house of Mr. John Gnage, M. C. G., VII: 386. A manuscript list, dated July 19, 1773, of subscribers who promise to pay the city for filling up a part of Whitehall Slip "and running a wall across" is preserved in the N. Y. Hitt Soc. A later record (see April 27, 1774) shows the corporation itself expending £100 in collecting the work.

The "Air Furnace belonging to Messrs Sharp and Curtenius [see Aug. 20, 1767], in the West-Ward of this City," is almost totally destroyed by fire. The loss is estimated at about £200.—N. T. Merc., Nov. 23, 1772.
The Iconography of Manhattan Island

1772. The Govv sent for me to the Hill (formerly Mortiers Country House). In coming Home a Foot with Fanning—He told me that the Govv had such Dejections at Times, that he was inclined to give up his Government, but that the Spirit of Party deprived him of confidential & agreeable Friendships, as the Jealousy he was obliged to oppose to the Jealousy of Parties for the Dignity of Govr1 obliged him to be shy.—That he was obliged to act as it were alone.—That he could get no Credit with the Body.—That he had insolent Remonstrants from both Parties.—That there was a painful Vigilance to be maintained & that the Business he had to do was various and immense.—That his Temper would not permit him to neglect any Thing, & that Nothing but a Fear of Expense in England prevented his Return Home.

"I colonel him to cast his Labour upon the Council, to continue indifferent to both Parties—to live more temporarily by keeping less Company, & assure him that his Conduct had not only preserved Peace, but that he stood in high Reputation all along the Continent as a spirited able Govr2—That he had nothing to Fear, & that the Parties favored his Power as both courted his Smiles—That he could do what he pleased.

"From the whole I begin to apprehend that there is a struggle between his Pride, which is great, & his Fears which are the Effect of ill Health—I wish the latter may not gain strength, & falling in with the former, will place him in a Situation to Business, to reduce him to cast his Labour upon the Council, who are as yet . . . with the De Lancy's."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

Dec. Gov. Tryon writes to the lords of the committee of the privy council: "It is not uncommon, My Lords, to find in New or Infant Governments several distinct offices engrossed by one person, and it is owing to the low State of their business; but when the increase of the Country takes away the necessity of these Monopolies, their inexpediency must be very manifest, the public becomes ill served, and the Govr3 weakened . . . I think it my duty therefore, on the behalf of your Lords, to enquire into the Nature and variety of the employments exercised here by Mr. [George] Clarke [Jr.]."

"He is Clerk of the privy Council, Clerk of the Legislative Council, and Clerk for the Court for appeals in Error. He is Secretary, and as such, all civil Commissions, Grants, patents, pardons, and every instrument passing the great seal goes thro' and returns to his hands to be recorded . . . He is also Clerk of the Supreme Court. . . . Mr. Clarke abus' has the keeping of all the minutes pleadings and Records that belong to this Court with the Custody and all the profits of the seal, for he is sole Clerk of all that immense variety of business which in three of the Great Courts of Westminster is defrayed out to so many hands.

He is therefore . . . Prothonotary, Chief Clerk, Clerk of the Crown, Secondary Filler, Chirograph Examiner, Clerk of the Judgments, Clerk of the Dockets, Clerk of the enrolments, Clerk of the Escaus, and has some other offices of less consideration.

"I am not to inform your Lordship of the amount of the income of these employments, which have been in the hands of the Petitioner and his Father or their Deputy . . . near seventy years."—N. Y. Col. Doc., VIII, 326-57. Valentine asserts that "the emoluments were considered as lucrative as those of the Govr."—Man. Gov. Coun. (1864), 572.

Lieut-Gov. Colden, now 85 years old, writes to the Earl of Dartmouth (the new secretary of state for the colonies) that he has not yet been reimbursed for his losses of Nov. 1, 1765 (p. c.), and has put to expense in defending himself against the suit of Dunmore (see Nov. 16, 1770). For preparation, he now sits a salary as lieutenant-governor from Oct. 18, 1770, the date of Dunmore's arrival.—N. Y. Col. Doc., VIII, 327-30. This was refused.—N. Y. Col. Doc., VIII, 347-48.

"The Governor's Guards, Grenadiers, Light-Infantry, Rangers, &c. (being the Independent Companies of this City)" are publicly reviewed for the first time. Newspapers of the occasion say: "His Excellency Governor Tryon, and the other superior Officers, with a splendid Assembly of the principal Ladies and Gentlemen, appeared in the Field. The Officers of the several Companies, perform'd their Parts, in their respective Departments, with great Skill and Regularity; and the Men went thro' the different Exer-ices and Manoeuvres, with an Order and Dexterity, which did Dec. them much Honour. In fine, the Neatness of their Uniforms, the Readiness and Grace with which the various Evolutions were performed, and the Propriety observable on the whole, gave much Satisfaction to the numerous Spectators, and must be agreeable to every one who wishes to see a well disciplined Militia amongst us.

After the Business of the Day was concluded, a splendid Entertainment was given to the Officers, by their worthy Commander the Govr, Mr. Tryon, Dec. 7, 1772. N. Y. Jour., Dec. 10, 1772. Cf. N. Y. Merc., Dec. 14, 1772 and Tryon's letter to Dartmouth in N. Y. Col. Doc., VIII: 341-42, which give the date of the review as Dec. 7. The independent companies were formed by "some Gentlemen of the first families and distinction" who had received commissions for that purpose from the government "On condition, that they cloathed, armed & accoutred them at their own expense."—Ibid.

An advertisement states that "James Gilliland, near the Old City Hall, Teacher of Writing, Merchants Accounts, Navigation, Dialing, Gauging, Surveying, and Measuring in general, &c. according to the most Modern and approved Methods; will open a Night School, on Monday the 4th of January next."—N. Daniel Horrmanden, chief-justice of the supreme court of New York, and Frederick Smyth, New Jersey's chief-justice, sail for Rhode Island "to execute the Commission lately arrived for Enquiring into the Burning of the Gaspey Schooner last June at Providence [see June 8]—Horrmanden informed me a week before, that they were to send Home the Accused as Trustees, & report concerning the Payne's of the Courte and variety of the employments exercised here by Mr. [George] Clarke [Jr.]."

"I am not to inform your Lordship of the amount of the income of these employments, which have been in the hands of the Petitioner and his Father or their Deputy . . . near seventy years."—N. Y. Col. "Resolved that the Thanks of this Board and also a piece of Plate of the Value of Thirty-Guineas be presented to the Reverend Doctor Myles Cooper 2d Pres. of King's College for his services in procuring a Remission of the Quit Rents on the Tract of Land late granted to different officers."

At about this time (probably shortly before) was drawn the large Atlantic Neptune View of New York from the south-west (the engraved title reads from the north-west). This view, which shows very clearly the fort and the buildings which it contained at this period, as well as Trinity and the other churches, extends as far north as the ferry to Paulus Hook, and is one of the finest, rarest, and most important views of the city. It is reproduced and described in Vol. I, Pl. 44.

Pres. Myles Cooper, of King's College, thus described the college as it was at this time: "The College is situated on a dry gravelly soil, about one hundred and fifty yards from the bank of the Hudson river, which it overlooks; commanding from the eminence on which it stands, a most extensive and beautiful prospect of the opposite shore and country of New Jersey, the City and Island of New-York, Long Island, Staten Island, New-York Bay with its Islands, the Narrows, forming the mouth of the Harbo, etc., etc.; and being totally unencumbered by any Property observable on the whole, gave much admiring the purest circulation of air from the river, and every other quarter, has the benefit of as agreeable and healthy a situation as can possibly be conceived."—Moore, An Historical Sketch of Columbia College (1846), 56.

In this year, it is not unlikely that the Post-Boy suspended publication.—See Early N. Y. Newspapers, II: 427 ff, of which the "Bibliography of Am. newspapers," in Am. Antiquarian Proceedings (1917), XXVII (N. S.): 445-47.

Since the above written, we have received the following by former express:

SI 18, Thursday 5 o'clock afternoon.

I am this moment informed by express from Woodstock, taken from the mouth of the express, that arrived there at two o'clock P.M. that the contest between the first brigade, that marched to Concord, was still continuing this morning at the town of Lexington, to which town the said brigade had retired. That another brigade, said to be the second, mentioned in the letter of this morning, had landed with a quantity of artillery, before been where the first did. The provincials were determined to prevent the two brigades from joining their strength, if possible and remain in great need of succour.

N. B. The regulars, when in Concord, burnt the court in Wic, took two pieces of cannon, which they rendered useless, and began to take up Concord bridge, on which Captain ——, (who, with many on both sides, were fom-killed) then made an attack upon the King's troops, on which they retreated to Lexington. I am your humble servant, Eb. Williams. To Col. Obadiah Johnson, at Canterbury.

P. S. Mr. Tarlond, of Cambridge-merchant, has just returned from Bolton, by way of Providence, who conveyed with an express from Lexington, who further informs, that about 4000 of our troops have surrounded the first brigade, above mentioned, who were on a hill in Lexington; that the action then continued, and there were about 3000 of men killed, and 1200 of the regulars, as near as they could determine, when the express came away; it will be expeditious for every man to go, who is fit and willing. The above is a true copy as received per express from New-Haven, and attested to by committees of correspondence, from town to town.

Attest, Jonathan Sturges, Andrew Rowland, G. Scleek Silliman, Thaddeus Burr, J. Bartram.

Records show that he was a member of the Gold and Silver Smiths' Society in 1766, and of Mechanics' Institute in 1802. Two alms boxes and a bowl made by him are described in the Museum of Art Cat. of Exhibition of Silver used in N. Y., N. J. and the South (1911), 24-25.

An extract of a letter from a "Gentleman of Character in London," printed in the Mercury, reads: "I hear your Militia are put on a Foot and Collar, and that you March and counter-March; It is well; but I am most desirous you should fortify; as sure as you live if you do not, the Town will be burnt about your Ears in the next War; and in a couple of Years, or sooner, such an Event is like to take Place."—N. Y. Merc., Jan. 4, 1773.

Smith records in his diary: "Schuyler dined in a Family way with the Gov't who expressed his Uneasiness about the Rhode Island Affair [see June 8, 1772]—The Spirit of Party in the Province . . . . He is sickly and fearful—I foresee a Storm, and certainly the De Lanceys will lead or drive . . . . He complained of a Want of Friends."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

6. Gov. Tryon, in a message to the assembly, says: "I have been obliged to order considerable repairs to be made to the mansion house in Fort George to make it habitable; the estimates of which shall be laid before you." He adds that "the sum of money voted the 4th instant for repairing the battery in Fort George, has been appropriated to such necessary, useful and ornamental purposes, as afford the clearest demonstration of the expediency and propriety of that vote, and cannot fail of giving satisfaction to the public."—Assemb. Jour. (1773), 4. On Feb. 18, the assembly resolved to allow him $5,764.142 for "sundry repairs in Fort George, and the Mansion house therein, and on the battery."—Ibid. 69. See also Cal. Hist. 12. The directors of the Union Library Society inform the public that the subscription money which gives a Right in their Society, is fixed at the small Sum of Thirty Shillings; that the Library consists of near One Thousand Volumes, and is continually receiving new Additions to that number of members in the society.—N. In a message to the assembly, Gov. Tryon says: "The increase of inhabitants in this Colony, as well as the extent of its settlements since the late war, having necessarily multiplied the business of the courts of law, and rendered the duty of the judges proportionably burdensome and expensive, an addition to their salary is become essential to the advancement of justice, and proper for the due support of the honor of government."—Assemb. Jour. (1773), 41. St. John's Cases, 314.

The committee of the assembly suggests that, to remedy the evil of counterfeiting the paper currency of the colony, some device difficult to imitate be engraved, and copies of it pasted upon the bills. This device, in their opinion, might represent "an eye in a cloud,—a bubble on a gallow's—" or, in its simplest form, "Let the name of a Money Maker rot."—Assemb. Jour. (1773), 50. See March 8.

The De Lanceys are certainly uneasy under him [Tryon], & mean either to enrage him for the Introduction of L.D. Dunmore or Sir Wm Draper, or to hoist a bloody Flag to intimidate him."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

The legislature passes an act "to increase the Number of Firemen in the City of New York." This provides that 10 men shall be added to the existing number.—Col. Leis. N. Y., V: 456-57. See Dec. 31, 1765, and Oct. 19, 1772.

The legislature passes an act "to prevent the Defacing the Statues which are erected in the City of New York." This provides that anyone found damaging the statues of George III and William Pitt (see Aug. 16 and Sept. 7, 1779) shall be fined £500.—Col. Leis. N. Y., V: 457.

The act of May 4, 1775 (p. v.), empowering the "Mayor Aldermen and Commonalty of the City of New York, and their Successors to prevent & remove the particular Nuisances within the Same to the benefit of the Fresh Water Spring," now extends the jurisdiction of the legislature extended to the Olive Ward.—Col. Leis. N. Y., V: 455-56.

Tryon writes to the Earl of Dartmouth that almost every great seal sent from Great Britain arrives in this country "defaced and reduced to a small Lump of wax." This is due, he says, to "its being chiefly composed of Rosin which is reduced to powder by the friction of the voyage," but if the seals were "formed of a proper mixture of Bees wax and Turpentine without any Rosin, they would arrive unjured." The validity of instruments, such as commissions, has been doubted when the great seal is defaced.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 349.

15. "The Governors, My Lord, of His Maj'y's Colonies on this Continent, meet with many Thorns in the Paths of their Administrations, and if they are not allowed on extraordinary emergencies, to put a liberal interpretation on his Maj'y's instructions, and the Kings Ministers may be general a construction on the late Government's Conduct of faithful servant of the Crown in that Station, cannot long keep his ground, or preserve his Gov't in peace."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 350.

A prospectus in the form of a broadside announces that "James Rivington, Book-seller, Printer, and Stationer, in New York. Proposes to publish a Weekly News-Paper, every Thursday, differing materially in its Plan from most others now extant; He has been honoured with Encouragement from the first Personages in this Country, and now begs Leave to solicit the public Patronage in Behalf of Rivington's New-York Gazetteer; or The Connecticut,

In short, every Particular that may contribute to the Improvement, Information and Entertainment of the Public, shall be constantly conveyed through the Channel of the New-York Gazetteer. Subscriptions for this Paper, at Twelve Shillings, New-York, Currency, a Year, are taken at Mr. Nicholas Brocks's, near the Coffee-House, in Market-Street, where a Book is open for that Purpose."—From the photocop in the Y. Pub. Library, (Evans, 1928). Under date of March 8, 1773, Rivington published the same announcement in the N. Y. Merc. of March 15 and 18. For his first issue of the new sheet, see April 22.

18 There is advertised: "To be Let, (And enter'd upon the first day of March next) The country seat situated about four miles from this city at present occupied by his Excellency General Gage; it contains about 20 acres of land, under fine improvement; the garden afforded in abundance almost every vegetable, together with a fine collection of fruit, and the meadow produces yearly upwards of thirty loads of clover, besides an improved spot of meadow. The house, kitchen, barn and stables in good order a full prospect down the East River to Cocks-Hook, from the house; an excellent landing which admits a boat that will carry eight or ten cords of wood, to the dock. It is without dispute quite an elegant situation. For particulars, apply to Mrs. Provost, on Golden-Hill, next door to Benjamin Kinns's, Esq."—N. Y. Merc., Feb. 15, 1773. The house was still being advertised for rent in May 29, April 26.— Ibid., April 26, 1773. Gage departed for England on June 8 (p. 26).

19 Gov. Tryon sends this message to the assembly: "As there is not among his Majesty's ordinance belonging to this province any field artillery, and as such may be extremely necessary upon emergencies, I would recommend to you to make provision for obtaining a few short brass field pieces.

10 At the same time I must apply to you for a supply of gun powder, as the small quantity remaining in Fort George when I arrived in the province is now expended."—Assem. Jour. (1773) 52.

21 These matters were provided for on March 8 (p. 96).

22 The new city chamberlain (see Sept. 29, 1772) is authorized by the common council "to sue for all such Debts as now are, & shall hereafter Grow due & belong to this Corporation."—M. G. C., IV. 401.

23 Mr. Walto lays before the assembly "sundry accounts of monies" expended by himself and Mr. Janoucy in repairing the battery in the city of New York, and "making carriages for the guns therein."—Assem. Jour. (1773) 75. See March 8.

24 The several complaints (cited under March 6), in a petition to Gov. Tryon, that Benjamin Blagge, an alderman and justice of the peace of the city and county of New-York, was commissioned last October, under the great seal of the province, as a coroner,—an office which, under the laws of England and the charter of the city, he could not occupy while holding the other two. They ask that, as his appointment to the office of coroner is void, the governor will appoint another person to fill the office.—M. G. C., VIII. 407-8. The original draft of this petition is preserved in metal file No. 6, city clerk's record-room. The governor refused, on May 3 (p. 19), that he had nominated Blagge's son, John, to succeed to the office of coroner, the latter having resigned.—Ibid., VIII. 419.

25 An advertisement informs the public that "Sharpe's Tavern, and Lyle, Have rebuilt (at a considerable expense) The New-York Air-Furnace...[see April 26, 1776] In a more compiler manner than before it was burned down [see Nov. 20, 1775], and as they have provided themselves with a sufficient stock of pig metal, &c, they propose to carry on the foundry business in all its Branches with great diligence, and fatter themselves that the friends of America will encourage them, by preferring goods manufactured in their shop...[in fact] they are as good, and as cheap as they can be imported from Europe."—N. Y. Merc., Feb. 21, 1771.

26 The harbour is so full of ice that many people walk "over the East River to Long-Island, and back again."—N. Y. Merc, March 1771.

27 The following resolutions are passed at a town-meeting in Mendon, Mass.: "Z. Resolved, That all Men have naturally an equal Right to Life, Liberty and Property. Therefore, 1. Resolved, That all just and lawful Government must necessarily originate in the free Consent of the People... 3. Resolved, That the Good, Safety & Happiness of the People is the great End of Civil Government; and must be considered as the only rational Object, in all original Compacts & Political Institutions...

28 They resolved, That a Principle of Self-preservation, being deeply planted by the God of Nature in every Human Breast, is necessary, not only to the well-being of Individuals; but also to the Order of the Universe... Therefore 5. Resolved, That a voluntary Renunciation of any Pows or Privileges, included in, or necessarily connected with a Principle of Self-preservation, is manifestly acting counter to the Will of the great Author of Nature, the supreme Legislator. Therefore 6. Resolved, That a Right to Liberty & Property (which are natural Means of Self-Preservation) is absolutely unalienable and can never lawfully be given up by ourselves, or taken from us by others."—Bryant & Gay, Popular Hist. of U. S., III: 473; Am. Antiquarian Soc. Proceedings (April 27, 1870), 15. Winsor thinks these are probably the earliest "exhibitions" of independence.—Winsor, Nat. & Crit. Hist. of Am., VII: 257. For the "Mechlenburg Resolves," see May 31, 1775.

30 "The Tax-Yard, at the East-Water, belonging to the Estate of Mr. John Robinson, deceased" is offered for lease.—N. Y. Merc., March 1, 1773. See March 23.

31 Dartmouth writes to Gov. Tryon: "A well regulated militia is certainly a very constitutional establishment and it will be a satisfaction to me to find that the act passed by the legislature of New York for that purpose has been framed in such a manner as to be liable to no objection; at the same time it does not appear to me that this is in the present moment, so much an object of attention as to require any new or particular managements, that may either induce the necessity of greater burthens upon the people, or divert them from the pursuit of those more useful arts, which ought to be cultivated in times of so great public tranquillity."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 356.

32 The assembly resolves that a sum not exceeding £500 be applied in repairing the barracks in the city of New York.—Assem. Jour. (1773), 85. Gov. Tryon had requested £500 for that purpose.—Ibid., 85.

33 "We have had a long Session of the Assembly ever since the 7 Jan. 6. It has had and will have lasting Effects. I date it from the Abatement if not the Ruin of the Power of the De Lancey Family, and the introduction of new Men. They have lost their Influence in Town, in the Assembly and in the Council, unless by some unforeseen Event they can restore it—Many Causes contributed to it—I will enumerate such as I recollect—1 The People have discovered in the 3 Families a Rage for Offices... 2 The Detection of a Design to greaze the Gov't or drive him away for the Return of L'd Dunmore—Tryon was popular and the High Church particularly attached to him... 3 The Merchants turned upon the City Members for cheating them in a Bill to amend the Flour Act. The Affair appeared to stand thus... 4 Our Flour had got into Repute in the West Indies, and the Chamber of Commerce had formed a Design to amend the Law, agreeable to that in Pennsylvania, resolving to have but one Inspector—Notes were given to the City Members for the Purpose... 5 Gruzer the Strong Land, had proposed Blagge to him & the other Bakers for Inspectors, & the Bill when it came up amounted to nothing else—all the Coffee House was in an Uproar & an open Quarrel ensued... 6 Much about the same Time the Common Spirit appeared in the By Eliz. of Bays, and the New Company of Albergmen for Montgomery Ward in Spite of all the Interest that could be made for Wm. Walto—This taught both the Assembly & People without Doors that the old Despotism was broke, & the Members had hourly Experience of it in losing Bills Motions &c in spite of their Aid" (see Feb. 23).—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.
THE sum of £1,000 is granted by the legislature "for furnishing Mar. 8 the first Day of January next."—Col. Laws N. T., V: 493-94.

The legislature passes an act "to remedy the Evil this Colony is exposed to from the great Quantities of counterfeit Money introduced into it" (see Feb. 5). This provides that a number of commissioners "cause such plate or plates, and Device or Devices to be formed and engraved, as they shall judge to be most difficult to be imitated and counterfeited ... and forty thousand Copies thereof to be struck off upon thin paper to be pasted, glued or fixed to the bills of lading. These plates or devices were to cost not more than £300.—Col. Laws N. T., V: 510-13. The expenses for engraving and printing actually amounted to £1524.—Assemb. Jour. (1775), 12.

A law is passed by the legislature providing that the excise on spirituous liquors be appropriated for 20 years as follows: £800 (part of the £1,000 to be raised by excise in the city and county of New York) is to be paid annually for 20 years to the governours of the hospital (see March 24, 1773) which is to be built; and the remaining sum of £400 is to be paid for the first five years to the cor- poration of the Chamber of Commerce, "for encouraging Fishery on the Sea Coast for the better supplying the Public Markets of the City," during the remaining 15 years this sum is appropriated for repairing public roads.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 453. Col. Laws N. T., V: 500-10.

The question concerning fisheries was worked out by the Chamber of Commerce in a system of bounties to the owners and crews of fishing boats who succeeded in supplying the New York markets with the largest quantities of fish of various kinds.—Rin- gington's Gazetteer, April 25, 1773; De Voe, Market Book, 117-19.

The legislature passes an act "to prevent the firing of Guns and other Fire Arms within this Colony."—Col. Laws N. T., V: 513-33.

The question of the sale of bricks is debated in the assembly in 1771, but failed to pass.—Assemb. Jour. (1770-1), 21, 26.

Because "great Damages are frequently done on the Eve of the last Day of December, and on the first and second Days of January by Persons going from House to House with Guns and other Fire Arms, and being often intoxicated with Liquor, have not only put the Inhabitants in great Terror, but committed many Mischiefs," the legislature passes an act "to prevent the firing of Guns and other Fire Arms within this Colony."—Col. Laws N. T., V: 513-33.

A sum not exceeding £500 to Gov. Tryon "to purchase Black Field pieces (see Feb. 16) to carry Ball of six pounds weight, with proper Carriages," and also "such a Sum as will be sufficient to purchase one thousand Weight of Gun Powder for the use of Fort George and the Battery in the City of New York."—Laws 1773, 2: 269-404 to Jacob Walton "for a Ballance due to him for providing Carriages for the Cannon on the Battery."—Laws 1773, 2: 269-404 to Jacob Walton and James Jaunsee (see Feb. 20) "for a Ballance due to them for repairing the Battery."—Laws 1773, 2: 269-404 to James and Alexander Stewart "for repairs to the Flag in Fort George."—Laws 1773, 2: 269-404 to Daniel Ebbets "for sundry Repairs at Fort George, the Store House, and Fences" from 1768 to Feb. 4, 1773.—Col. Laws N. T., V: 498-99.

After proceeding the assembly, Gov. Tryon makes a spech of the state of the Colony. He says, "We have now done business together for two Sessions, and it is very proper we should know each other for our future Regulation. I wish to promote the Interest of the Province, and find it very disagreeable to me to be crossed by your Parties. I know no good End that Party Spirit can be effectually in Difference between one Sect of the Community and another—You are equal to me—The People of this Country are all loyal Subjects as far as I know and I will make no difference—I will take no sides myself, and desire that I may not be dealt with or crossed for Party Purposes—if you will maintain Parties keep the Party Spirit to yourselves—I mean to visit all that visit me, whether of one Party or the other, without exciting any Man's Jealousy—I will act from no Party Views, & nothing that is of a Party Nature will recommend the Man or the Measure to me. If I can't manage the affairs of the Province, I will quit it.—My own Life Health the 'Attachment' to my Continnance here set very light upon me, But yet I will submit to the Duties of my Station, as long as I can serve it, with Honor to myself or advantage to the King or the Province—There have been Schemes to draw me into Parties—Projects to disgrace & degrade your Chief Magistrate —I saw no reason to prevent the public Interest, and the Council will not stand between the Govr & the People, he can neither be useful nor happy ... Party there is and I am ren- dered constantly uneasy by it. It is this that may perhaps induce me to speak warmly, but I mean the public Good, & when ever I find that my Intentions to serve the Province are generally ill taken, I will take myself away, I will do Business with every Body—I will do the Public Business with those whom your Parties force me to act with if it must be so, but I wish you would put an End to your Parties."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV. Smith ventures the opinion that "this Address was doubtles to break the De Lancey Dominon (already tottering) in the Council, as essential to his own Safety, for he could not but have perceived, that they meant to depose him."—Ibid.

The bakers of New York, operating under a law passed 15 years ago, appeal to the court as proprietors of land, who are unable to support themselves and families on account of the increased expense of baking, and they ask a new assize for loaf bread. Regarding their expenses, they state that when the law was made "the Bakers bought their Wood for Ten Shillings, but now must give Twenty Shillings for a Cord of Curts,Per Cord," that the bakers could then "get one Pail of good Yeast for Three Shillings, but now must give Three Shillings for two or three Quarts thereof, and they are very often, in the Summer Season, obliged to throw it away by means of its being made so very bad;" that then "every Body could buy in the Markets &c as much for Two Shillings as now can be bought for Five Shillings;" that the Bakers "and others are now greatly increased;" that "the Bakers are now obliged to give one Loaf of Bread to the Retailers on every twelve Loaves they sell them, for their Incouragement;" and that "the Bakers at the Time of the Making of the said Law could buy Flour from twelve to sixteen shillings per Hundred, but now must give Twenty Shillings and upwards for the same, and therefore must have more money." They must thus be "discounted from Buying good Flour," and be obliged to seek their reasonable Profits in buying the cheapest: Which they look upon as not only Losing the Character of having good Bread in the City of New York, and be- ing hurtful to the Citizens thereof, But also as being prejudicial to the Sale of the Flour of this Province at foreign Markets. They ask for an assize which will relieve them, and will give them "a reasonable Increase of Profit."—From the original petition (in ms. file No. 6, city clerk's room), dated March the 17th 1775. The petition is referred to a committee for instructions with preparations to new table for the assize of bread.—M. C. C., VII: 411. See July 1, for their report.

At a committee of the Dutch Church it is suggested that "Since Mr. Nicholas Welp, our free school master, has died, it is highly necessary to appoint another to instruct thirty poor children, in reading, writing, and cyphering, both in English and in Dutch." The members decide to offer the position to Mr. Peter van Steenberg, resolving to allow him, besides a house and garden, £60 for teaching the children, £8 for firewood, £5 for books, paper, etc., and £18 for kindling wood and lighting oil as the wages of a schoolhouse [see Aug. 15, 1748] and Consistory Chamber is also so decayed that it cannot stand much longer." A proposal is therefore submitted "whether it would not be advisable to take down the old school-house at once, and put up a new one, several feet broader than the old, and about twice as long, and have a new school-room which will make a more substantial building for the accommodation of the children who now go a walking one story higher for a Consistory Chamber and Catechising Room. Thus would the dwelling house and the new building be brought under one roof. The building should be a frame building, with a brick front, which can be built before the new school-room can be put up. Another objection is apt to be raised against this matter.—Eccles. Rec., VI: 4260. On March 20, Mr. Van Steenberg accepted the position of schoolmaster upon the above terms.—Ibid., VI: 4261. The treasurer was ordered, on May 13, "to furnish such sums as may be necessary, from time to time, for the 1773. Life and building the said school house, provided the amount does not exceed four hundred pounds."—Ibid., VI: 4566. On Aug. 6, the new schoolhouse being ready for the reception of the children, the consistory adopted the following for the Gazette and scholars and for the use of the school:—Ibid., VI: 4566-65.

22. A city survey is prepared, with the title: "Map of the Corporation and Contiguous to the New Gall, compiled from different surveys made by Gerard Bancker, C.S., March 23, 1772." It is now preserved in the comptroller's office (filed in tin tube No. 3, in division of surveys, department of finance, Borough of Manhattan).

23. A survey bearing this date and the title "A plan of the Tan yard Near Fresh Water Surveyed and Divided March 23, 1773 by Frances & Andrew Marchal Cydy (from one annexed to a deed to Jacobus Quirk by A. Hardenbrook George Shaw Abram Mason Hague (Gaz.)) is preserved in the Bancker Collection in the N. Y. Pub. Library (box B-G, folder 74). Cf. plate description, I: 358, in which some inaccuracies appear in the spelling of names.

27. Every Day offers new proofs of the Declension of the De Lancey Interest.—The Zealous Episcopallans are very free & almost universally so in . . . Censures of their Politics—I believe that Family has arrived at its ne plus ultra in this Country, & that they begin to perceive the folly of their Opposition to the Dissenters—& the Non Importing Compact, as well as of their Juncture with Colen in Sept.' 75, the consequent Vividtnes adumbrated by their own Rapacity for Officers. They want such a Leader as the late L's Gov. De Lancey—a man who laid deep Foundations for Power in his Popularity—who except in the affair of the college studied to please all sects, and made the Dissenters confident of his Protection. It is true, the Times are greatly altered—There is more Knowledge among the People—Property is divided—Men of Orulence live more independently—& above all the Independency of the Govt renders Popular Sway less useful. A Demagogue who led the Assembly held the Govt & Council at Defance—With Power to save the Govt he had the whole Provincial Command. —This James De Lancey knew, & this Sway he held.—"Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

32. The major part (four names out of a possible seven are subscribed to the report) of the committee appointed concerning the Dividend (see May 7, 1772) finally render a report, which is to the effect that a new agreement has been made with Capt. Dobbs, the keeper. The essence of the agreement is that the keeper consents to a decided reduction in salary, i.e., from $70 per year to $50. —M. G. C., VII: 414. Dobbs was soon succeeded by Alexander McCaffrey, who accepted a smaller salary still (see July 17).

33. The common council contributes $130 toward completing the new road "leading from Anthony Rutgers' farm to Grintage" (Greenvich).—M. G. C., VII: 416.

34. The Harlem line, as newly established (see March 24, 1772), is surveyed and marked "Harlem" in the N. Y. Pub. Library. It bears this date. The line begins on the east side at what is now 47th St, crossed Second Ave. at what is now 79th St, and Third Ave. at 81st St, and reached the Hudson River at the present 129th St.—Peterson & Edwards, N. Y.: as 18th Cent. Municipalities, 346. There is a summary of the controversy concerning this line in ibid., 344-46. The line is shown on A. Pl. 9, Vol. III. Cf. Jan. 9, 1750; and Pl. 36, Vol. IV.

35. The American Company of players has returned to New York after an absence of almost four years (see Jan. 25, 1768). An advertisement of this date reads: "Theatre. By Permission of his Excellency the Governor. By the American Company, on Wednesday next, being the 14th of April, The Theatre in John-Street, will be open'd with A Comedy, An occasional Prologue, A Farce, and Entertainments, Which will be express'd in the Bills for the Day. It may be necessary to inform the Public, that as the Season is so very far advanced, it will not be possible to keep the House open longer than the end of May."—N. Y. Merc., April 12, 1773. Contrary to the latter part of this notice, the company gave performances until Aug. 5.—Seehamer, Hist. of the Am. Theatre, I: 318. See also May 3.

36. An extract of a letter from Dublin says: "No one is to succeed General Gage, but Gen. Halldimand [see June 14] nor is it likely there will be any other. The Naturalization Bill was pass'd for the purpose of giving him the Command, with Propriety."—N. Y. Merc., May 17, 1773.

37. An advertisement addressed "To the respectable Publick" reads: "Samuel F. Parker and John Anderson, Of this City, Apr. Printers, Have entered into Partnership together, for the carrying on that Business in all its Branches; and propose in August next to publish the New-York Gazette, A Weekly News-Courier, which was published for many Years by said Parker's Father, and esteemed to be a paper of as good credit and Utility as any extant since the first Commencement thereof . . ."—N. Y. Merc., April 19, 1773. No issues of this paper are known to exist.

21. N. Y. Merc., May 17, 1773. It is evident the family have taken the house at present occupied by Mrs. Daunby, situated in French Church-Street, a few doors from Mrs. Beau's boarding school, where they intend to open a Boarding and Day School for young ladies . . . where they will be politely and courteously instructed in reading; after the best grammatical rules, with elegance and propriety, writing, arithmetic by a short method, needle and tambour work; the polite French language, which is constantly spoken in the family, being now a-days part of the education of young ladies; will likewise be taught grammatically by Mr. and Mrs. Laugin, with that accent and pronunciation peculiar to the natives of France.—"Rivington's Gazetteer, April 21, 1774. A writer in, 1778, said: "In America, female education should have for its object what is useful. Young ladies should be taught to speak and write their native language with purity and elegance; in which they are often deficient. The French language is not necessary for ladies. In some cases it is convenient but in general it may be considered as an article of luxury. As an accomplishment, it may be studied by those whose attention is not employed about more important concerns."—Am. Mag., May, 1788, 367-74, cited in "The Teaching of French in Colonial New York" in Romanic Review, Oct.-Dec., 1919, p. 576.

The provincial council pays an account of Thoephilus Harddenbrook for repairs in Fort George, in the mansion-house, and on the battery.—Col. Coun. Min., 496.

The first issue of Rivington's New-York Gazetteer or Connecticut, New-Jersey, Hudson's-River, and Quebec Weekly Advertiser, appears (see March 18). It is "Printed by James Rivington, facing the Coffee-House Bridge."—Rivington's Gazetteer, Apr. 23, 1773. In his issue of Oct. 15, 1774, Rivington states that "The weekly impression of this Gazetteer is lately increased to Three Thousand Six Hundred, a number far beyond the most sanguine expectations of the Printer's warmest friends; as the presses of very few, if any of his brethren, including those in Great-Britain, exceed it. This paper is commonly distributed thro' every colony of North-America, most of the English, French, Spanish, Dutch, and Danish West-India islands, the principal cities and towns of Great-Britain, France, Ireland, and in the Mediterranean."—Rivington's Gazetteer, Oct. 15, 1774.

Its Tory tendencies, however, subjected it to various attacks. Ebenezer in 1774, committee of inspection or corresponding organizations in Rhode Island, New Jersey, and New York, adopted resolutions denouncing Rivington and advising subscribers to stop their papers; the last mentioned committee went so far as to say: "for we do believe he is a Ministerial hireling, an enemy to his Country, and a traitor to the British Constitution."—Am. Arch., II: 12:15: 55-16; 50-51. A royal commissary, granted to Rivington to tie his majesty's printer (see April 5) added fuel to the flame and, on May 10 (p. 2), he was the victim of a mob attack. Although, as a result of this, the editor was absent for nearly a month, the Gazette appeared regularly and its publication continued until Nov. 23, 1775 (p. 11), when a second mob, by destroying his presses and carrying away the types, ended the paper's existence for the time being.
“three Lots of Ground belonging to him, in the rear of the City Hall” for £450.—M. C. C., VII: 420.

29 A committee of the common council reports regulations for “Streets in the Vicinity of the College,”—viz., Murray, Robinson, and Warren; the report is approved and orders are issued to “the Rector & Inhabitants of the City of New-York in Union with the Convention of the Church of England” to “Cause the said Streets to be Regulated.”—M. C. C., VIII: 421-22. Although orders were given by the common council for the regulating of Murray St. as early as June 26, 1768 (p. 97), the regulation of that street is first recorded at this time. The landmark map Ref. Key, III: 1066, gives 1783-6, as the earliest regulation of Murray St., overlooking the record of this date. For a later regulation of the street, see July 25, 1776.

30 The mayor produces to the common council a list of 396 names of persons who took “Licenses for Retailing of Strong Liquors within this City from the 25th of March 1773 to the 25th of March last.” The amount received from the same totalled £591:41; of this amount the mayor is ordered to retain for himself 4s. for each license, plus £235 for his fees as “Clerk of the Markets” for the year ending May 1. He was further ordered to pay to the City the remaining £350:14, was paid into the city treasury.—M. C. C., VIII: 420-21.

31 Mrs. Brock, widow of Walter Brock, who for many years had maintained a tavern on Wall St., opposite the First Presbyterian Church (see 1758), announces that she has moved “to that elegant and pleasant situation of Mr. Martin’s House at the White-Hall, opposite the Battery, at the Sign of the Fry’d Oysters.”—N. Y. Jour., May 20, 1773. Elias Pelletreau had formerly been proprietor of this tavern.—N. Y. Merc., May 31, 1772. In less than two years Mrs. Brock moved from Whitehall to the house of David Prevost, nearly opposite the Coffee House.—N. Y. Jour., April 19, 1775. This was near Wall and Water Sts. Timothy Day, “from the country,” was the new proprietor of the Whitehall tavern.—N. Y. Jour., Feb. 6, 1775.

32 “To be Sold, at private Sale, the convenient and well situated Dwelling House of the Subscribers, being in Crown-Street, formerly called Oswego-Street the House is two stories High, having proper and convenient Rooms, with a good Cellar and Kitchen, three small Tenements Back, and a good Cistern in the Yard: It is very convenient for a Tavern, which has been kept there some Years, and is, now as such, being in the Possession of David Gregg, Esq.”—N. Y. Jour., May 20, 1773. Elias Pelletreau, informs the public that he has “set up at 24 House on Golden-Hill, at the Sign of the Dish of fry’d Oysters, a place for cutting of Whale Bone.”—N. Y. Merc., May 24, 1773. The whale bone business seems to have flourished in this neighbour-hood ever since; the last “coffee-house” in New-York—in Ann Street—closed its doors in 1920.

Washington arrives in New York from Mt. Vernon to take his “son-in-law [errò for stepson] Mr. [John Park] Custis, to King’s College; he lodges at ‘a Mr. Farmer’s,” and passes the evening at Hull’s Tavern. The following evening, May 27 (p. 97), he was present at Hull’s Tavern “at the entertainment given by the citizens of New-York to Gen’l Gage.” On the evening of May 29, he was again at Hull’s with the “Old Club.” He was entertained at dinner during his stay by James de Lancey and Maj. Bayard. He returned to Mt. Vernon on May 31.—British Echoes of Washington (福特 ed.), 389-91. Regarding young Custis’s short career at King’s College, see Hist. of Columbia Univ. 43.

Mayor Hicks reports that Gov. Tryon desires “the Pond opposite the Barracks on the Battery” to be filled up, on the plea that “the same is at present but a Nuisance.” The common council orders—M. C. C., VII: 412-17.—that any improvement totalled £320.—Ibid., VII: 440. 444. 454. 458: VIII: 65. This pond is clearly shown on Pl. 40, Vol. I.

The common council orders “that Alderman Blagge have permission to Erect a Hay Machine at such place Near the Corpora-tions Market at the Mouth of the River [the Best Market] as shall be judged most proper by the Alderman & Assistant of the West Ward.”—M. C. C., VII: 453. The committee “fixed on the South end of the Oswego Market [the same market], opposite to the Middle Post there.”—Ibid., VII: 457. See also De Voe’s Map Book, 31.

The council approves unanimously the agreement regarding the boundary line between New York and Massachusetts (see May 18).—N. Y. Col. Acts., VIII: 371.
THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

1773 The provincial council directs the sheriffs of New York and My 36 Albany to send in the census returns.—Col. Coun. Min., 166.

An "elegant entertainment" is given by the merchants and a great number of the inhabitants, at Hull's tavern to his Excellency General Gage on occasion of his approaching for England.—"Rivington's Gazette," June 3, 1773. Washington was present.—See May 26. June 4, for the return entertainment given by Gen. Gage.

The flower and Harrow, a tavern kept by John Fowler, is advertised.—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 98.

Gen. Tryon sends to Dartmouth: "I returned this City from Connecticut the 22d inst, and have the pleasure to inform your Lordship that the Commissaries who met at Harvard have amicably and unanimously agreed upon a line of partition between the Govm. of New York and Massachusetts Bay, and the Govt. Hutchison and myself assented to and approved of the same [see May 18], one of the original agreements of this actual survey of that Part of Hudson's River, which lies opposite, upon a medium course, to the dividing line, I have the honor hereafter to transmit to your Lordship. As the earlier the said decision is had upon this matter, the happier for both Govms. I am satisfied that such a convention will be a sufficient motive with your Lordship to press forward this business. It is very probable the parties may not agree to run the line until the Royal confirmation is obtained. I laid the above agreement before the Council Board the 26th when it was unanimously approved."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 377.

"The Scenery, Decorations, Dresses and Machinery of the Opera de Cyron, to be performed this Evening, are allowed by the most critical Judges of Theatrical Splendor, to be more Magnificent than one would be expected to see at so early a Period, on the American Stage. During the Performance at Philadelphia, several Gentlemen from London, attended the Representation, and made Comparisons much to the Honour of our Infant Western Theatre. We are informed that as it is so very late in the Season, it can only be performed one Night."—N. Y. T. Mer., May 31, 1773.

Gen. Tryon writes to Dartmouth: "The nine independent Companies formed last year in this City, were not equipped under any express clause of the Militia Law, except one of the Cadet Companies, but purely in virtue of the delegated prerogative of the Crown. And as this Town, by its situation lies extremely open to the insults of an Enemy, I thought, times of public tranquility were the most leisure (and best) season to form a body that might in time of occasion be of public service."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 377.

Tryon sent this justification of his conduct in this matter because of the criticisms contained in Dartmouth's letter of March 3 (p. 6).

Trans. to Dartmouth: "An Abstract of the State of Militia in the Province of New York, shewing the Number of Regiments Battalions and Companies with the Number of Colonels, Lt. Colonels, Majors, Captains and Subalterns in each County." The record shows that New York County has 1 regiment, 1 battalion, 14 companies, 1 colonel, 1 lieutenant-colonel, 1 major, 14 captains, 28 lieutenants, and 14 ensigns, besides a troop of light horse and 6 independent companies.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 377.

Jacob Bates, after a tour of Europe, advertised on May 31 to perform feats of horsemanship on this day, "At the Bull's Head, in the Bowery-Lane."—N. Y. T. Mer., May 31, and June 7, 1773. For portrait, and account of the career of this famous English equestrian, see Greenwood's The Circus (1909), 26, 61. The location chosen for his exhibition was south of the windmill, about 200 feet north of Bayard St., on the west side of the Bowery. His last appearance was on Aug. 3, prior to which time the boards forming the "Riding Yard" or "Manage" (menage) were offered for sale. —Ibid., 65; and N. Y. T. Mer., Aug. 2, 1773.

Special effort is manifest in the brilliant celebration of the king's birthday. The events of the day include a review by the governor of the Guards on the Common, a dinner, and toasts to the king at the fort, and an entertainment there in the afternoon. The decorations included many curious devices, and in the evening the "City was illuminated in a more superb and general Manner than was ever known before. From one end of the Barracks at the Fort, and from the Bowling Green, behind the Gate, some very curious Fire Works were played off; particularly the Representation of an Engagement between two Ships at Sea, which after a furious alternate Discharge, ended in the Destruction of one of them; gave great Entertainment to a vast Multitude of People. The most elegant Part of the Entertainment was the brilliant Appearance of Ladies at the Fort, which must have been delightful to his Majesty himself, had he been present—and would have convinced him, that, as America vies with Great Britain, itself in Loyalty and Affection to his Person and constitutional Government.—so it evinced for his Embarkation in the Charms of Beauty and Female Attractions."—N. Y. T. Jour., June 10, 1773.

An interesting bit of evidence as to the extent of the illuminations on this occasion is afforded in the account of Francis Child, the keeper of the jail, dated June 16, 1773. Against the date June 4, he writes: "To Carry paid for 500 Pieces of Paper, for His Majesty's Birthday (by order)... 11:16:6."—From the original bill preserved in city clerk's record-room. In the evening, Gen. Gage gave a grand entertainment to a number of merchants and military gentlemen at Hull's Tavern "in the broad way."—Rivington's Gazette, June 10, 1773; N. Y. Jour., June 10, 1773. Gen. Gage left for England June 8 (q. v.). Hull's was also the meeting-place of the "Sons of St. George," on Apr. 23d—Ibid., May 3, 1773. Under Aug. 20, 1774 (q. v.), John Adams records his arrival in New York from Philadelphia, and stopping at Hull's tavern the sign of the Bunch of Grapes. The City Tavern, or Providence Arms, was called "Hull's Tavern," as it was generally called under Hull's management, was known during its long existence by many names, but this is the only reference to it as the "Bunch of Grapes," if, indeed, it ever bore such a sign. Stephens, in an article on "Famous Taverns," in the N. Y. Herald of March 18, 1894, calls it an error.

The common council waits upon Gen. Gage to present him with an address and the freedom of the corporation, "the Seal of the said Corporation being enclosed in a Gold Box and annexed thereto."—M. C. C., VIII: 426. The box had the city arms engraved upon it (Ibid., VII: 425) and cost $206 (Ibid., VII: 427). An "elegant entertainment" marked the event, which cost the city $641106.6—Ibid., VII: 428. N. Y. Gem., June 14, 1773. The account of Robert Hall of this date for "Corporation Dinner to his Excellency General Gage" is preserved in the comptroller's office; there were 60 at the banquet and the liquors consumed are "Benitez, Madeira, "Claret," "Porter," "Spruce," "Cydze," and "Ale." Gen. Gage and his family embark for London. The general is attended by the chief military officials "to the Water-Side, at Murray's Wharf, near the Coffee House, where a Company of the Royal Artillery, under Arms waited his coming. As soon as the Ship got under sail, he was saluted by 10 Discharges of a Field Pieces, belonging to the Artillery; and as he passed the Battery, by a like Number from thence."—N. Y. T. Jour., June 10, 1773. On Feb. 15, (q. v.), his country seat (about four miles from New York) had been advertised for rent.

A transport of Royal Welch Fusiliers arrives in the city. June 12, on N. Y. T. Mer., June 14, 1773. The last transport arrived on June 16—Ibid., June 21, 1775. The regiment was reviewed on June 50 (q. v.). His Excellency General Haldimand [see April 13] we hear has taken the House on Broad-Street, lately occupied by General Gage.—N. Y. T. Mer., June 14, 1773. To be Sold at public Vendue, on the Premises, The first day of September next, or at private Sale any Time before, The large commodious and well fitted House and Gardens, in the Out-Ward of this City, wherein Col. See May 16, 1765. The sale was not effected on Sept. 1, as appears from a later insertion in the Gazetteer, advertised on the front for a brush for the Merchant's Coffee-House, at which time a sale will be "positively made."—Rivington's Gazetteer, Sept. 23, 1775. First advertised in May (ibid., May 13), it was purchased by Erasmus Williams (see Oct. 15).

Richard Varian is appointed "keeper of the Publick Pound station in the Court of Baynard's Castle, in the Possession of the said Richard Varian."—M. C. C., VII: 438.

Hamilton, Esq. for Baltimore and Charlestown, in Maryland, and Mr. Green, printer in Annapolis.

"N. B. There never was any compleat set of church service made public, nor can any be procured but by friendship and a great expense; neither is any burial service of the kind to be purchased, unless it be that in Dr. Croft's anthems, which is sold for Two Guineas."—Rivington's Gazetteer, June 24, 1775.

The 23d Regiment of Welch Fusiliers (see June 9) is reviewed "in the Plain, near the Ship-Yards" by Gen. Haldimand and Gov. Tryon. "The Soldiers wore Sprigs of Oak Leaves in their Caps, which we hear distinguished them at the Battle of Minden, in which, under Prince Ferdinand, this Regiment greatly distinguished themselves."—N. Y. Merc., July 5, 1775. The regiment was reviewed again on Oct. 25 (q.v.).

July
"We hear that Richard Colden, Esq, is appointed Surveyor and Searcher of this Port, in the room of his Father Alexander Colden, Esq. resigned."—Rivington's Gazetteer, July 1, 1775.

A table for the assize of bread, formulated in response to the baker's petition of March 17 (q.v.), is adopted by the common council. On every 100 pounds of flour, the baker is allowed from seven-twelfths of a shilling, to cover cost of wood, yeast, and his profit.—M. C. C., VII: 434.

A street in the "Meadows," leading from Queen Street to "James's Streets," in front of the house of John Woods, is complained of in a petition to the common council. It has become a nuisance by cattle sheltering themselves there, and by water settling there, so that several houses and lots have "become as it were little Islands especially in a showery time."—From the original MS, endorsed "filed July 11, 1775," and "no order made hereon, as the 9th Street is already regulated," filed in box No. 6, in city clerk's record-room. The street alluded to as running from Queen Street to St. seems to be Buckwells (now Madison St.)—See Fl. 42, Vol. I.

Alexander Monfort is appointed by the common council as keeper of the bridgewell to succeed Capt. Dobbs on Aug. 1, the latter having "Signified to several of the members of this board his Intention of giving up said Office." Monfort's salary is to be $200 per year.—M. C. C., VII: 435. Monfort's original petition is preserved in city clerk's office, also many of his itemized bills, most of the latter in the comptroller's office. The one large item which appears repeatedly is for feeding vagrants, 6. 9d. the account of July 24, 1774, gives a list of such, consisting of 114 persons, aged 31, with a total of 4,249 days care. In another account, of the same date, the charge for "work done" (see Nov. 20, 1767) totals £235 10s. and includes the spinning of cotton candle wicks and the picking of "ockum."—From original MS. in comptroller's office.

The large number of vagrants in the city at this period probably explains an action of the common council of this date whereby July coastables or marshals were "Allowed the Sum of two Shillings for Every Vagrant that they shall apprehend Wandering in and about this City," provided an order for the same be obtained from a justice of the peace for the removal of the vagrant to the place where such person "hath Gained a Legal Settlement."—M. C. C., VII: 435. This may serve to explain many charges for "ferriages" in the accounts of the bridewell keepers.

An account of Messrs. Burras and Creamer of this date contains the item: "To their time & trouble in going to Newhaven to bring darcus who stole the Governors Cubs [Cups]. . . . £8: 16: 0."—From original bill preserved in comptroller's office.

Anthony Fiva announces that he "Continues teaching gram- mar every morning, at his house, near the Supreme Court of Appeals, to the greatest purity on moderate terms: He also attends ladies and gentlemen in their own houses at any convenient hour; likewise translates from any one of said languages into the English, or either of the two others, with accurate dispatch and secrecy for attorneys, merchants, &c. and as Mr. Fiva has had an academical education, and resided many years in Paris and Madrid, he is therefore able to resolve any question that might puzzle his scholars, and entirely ground them both in the true accent of these polite languages, and all the rules of the syntax."—Rivington's Gazetteer, July 22, 1775. Fiva was still teaching in the city on Dec. 22, 1774.—Ibid., Dec. 22, 1774.

The common council orders that "the Long Bridge at the 23 North End of the Exchange be plank'd, and that the Carriage Way, that is now Arch'd be continued, not to Exceed fourteen feet."—M. C. C. VII: 437. Payments for this work are recorded.

Ibid., VII: 440, 442. For a further order, see Sept. 22.

"The American Company" (see Apr. 12) advertises for this evening a benefit performance for "the Hospital to be erected in New-York." The presentation announced is "a Tragedy called 'The London Merchant' Or the History of George Barnwell ... to which will be added, a Dramatic Tale, call'd Edgar and Emmeline.

The people are urged to "countenance this Play with their Presence; or otherwise contribute their Mite towards so Good a Work as the providing a Receptacle for the Sick and Needy. It is hoped by the Friends of the Hospital, that the Moral of the Play to be acted will have some Influence with those who are, otherwise, no Friends to the Theatre."—N. Y. Merc., July 26, 1775; Aug. 2, 1773. See Oct. 20, 1774. An advertisement appears also of a forthcoming presentation at the same theatre of "Dr. Goldsmith's new Play, called 'She stoops to conquer, or The Mistakes of a Night!' An excellent dramatic Piece, lately brought on the Stage under the Patronage of Dr. Samuel Johnson, Author of the Rambler, &c. This Play is intended to recover the expiring Art of writing true English Comedy."—Ibid., July 26, 1773.

In this year and month Gerard Bauer, city surveyor, made "A map of the Lands of the late Sir Edmund's estate in the City, to Sir Peter Warren, living at Greenwich in the Outward of the City of New York." This interesting and finely executed drawing shows the old Warren mansion, later known as the Van Nest house, and also Abingdon Road, Bowery Lane, Fitz Roy Road, Old Greenwich Lane, Great Kill Road, Skinner Road, Greenwich Street, etc. It is reproduced in A. P. C. J., Vol. III. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, Addenda, Vol. V.

John Simmons, tavern-keeper, is paid £2056 by the common council for "Liquor found for the Jury who sat to enquire of the Death of Mary Murphy."—M. C. C., VII: 440. Simmons' tavern was at Wall and Nassau Sts. See Oct. 8, 1770. For other expenses incurred by the court at this tavern, see ibid., VIII: 195, 98, 101, 102, 132, 139.

Linst.—Col. John Reid, late of the 42d or Royal Highland Regiment, Henry Erley, and others report to the provincial council new outrages by Seth Warner, Remember Baker, Ethan Allen, and others. The governors of the hospital intend to assist "in laying the Foundation of that truly charitable Asylum of the Distressed, who will have Reason to remember with Gratitude and bless the benevolent Founders, through a long duration of future Generations."—N. Y. Jour. Sept. 2, 1773.

The building thus started occupied a part of the Anthony Rutgers estate, Ranelagh, and was destroyed by fire on Feb. 18, 1772 (p. 2). For summaries of the hospital's history, see plate description, III: 570-71; Daily Adv., July 24, 1794; Mon. Coun. Min., 1826; and E. W. Sheldon's Historical Address (Oct. 26, 1918).

The provincial council takes cognizance of Gen. Haldimand's refusal to send regular troops against the New Hampshire grants rioters, thinking the militia ought to be called out. Opinion of counsel was obtained on the 9th. On Sept. 29, Gen. Haldimand was to send 200 men to Crown Point and Crowners for the suppression of the rioters, but declined as too late in the season.—Col. Coun. Min., 498. On Dec. 15, Mr. Duane, of counsel for the New York patentees, was granted access to the papers relating to the notes.—Ibid., 499. See Feb. 8, 1774.

A very large and remarkable Sea Tortoise, of a Species before unknown here," is brought to the city. It weighs about 500 lbs., is 7 ft. long, 3/8 ft. wide, and 15 in. thick. "The Fish is probably as good as any other Sea Tortoise, but as it is an unknown Animal, no body seems inclined to eat it."—N. Y. Merc., Sept. 13, 1773.

13 "We think the public ought to be informed: "To Be Seen, At the house of John Rawdon, hair-dressing, facing the Post-Office, in Broad-Street: The Wonderful Electrical Fish: It is a native of South-America, has never before, that we know of, been seen in the northern parts of America or Europe."—N. Y. Merc., Sept. 13, 1773.

15 The Committee appointed to View of Lands and report what part was proper to be appropriated for a Burial Ground for the Negroes belonging to the Church Reported as their Opinion that the Block or piece of Ground bounded by Church Street, Rade Street, Chappell Street and the Ground of Anthony Rutgers was proper for that purpose. Ordered that the said report be confirmed and that the same Committee have the said piece of ground (or such part thereof as they shall see fit for the present) fenced in, and also to report to this board what fees they think reasonable to be paid for the ground for a grave and for digging the same."—Trin. Min. (MS.).

Trinity vestry approves the draft of a grant from the city of certain water lots fronting the church's lands on the Hudson.—Ibid. Cf. June 16, 1772; Nov. 18, 1773.

A beautifully written statement of account of Abraham Meiser for work done for the city shows a total of $590.43, of which the balance due him is $590.43. The work is described as consisting of the streets, one item, Nov. 29, 1772, "Reading p. 4 for Carriage Stamps from Broadway... £60."—From the original, in the comptroller's office. Cf. M. C. C., VII: 445.

As at the last university of the king's coronation, "His Royal Subjects, the Militia of this City, consisting of 7 Independent Companies, assemble on the green, near the liberty pole, and go through their "Exercise, Firing and various Evolutions."—N. Y. Merc., Sept. 27, 1773.

It is ordered by the common council that "the Committee for the Long Bridge [see July 23] cause 20 feet of the same to the southward of the Exchange to be arch'd and to Board the remaining part to the End thereof & also that a Number of Posts be fixed at such places near the said Bridge as the said Committee may think sufficient to prevent Carts from passing over & injuring the same."—Ibid., VI: 415.

Robert Livingston has been appointed recorder in the place of Thomas Jones (see Sept. 29).—Rivington's Gazetteer, Oct. 7, 1773.

An advertisement is apparently kindling in America—Within a Fortnight... we have Intelligence that the East India Company resolved to send Tea to America to be sold they paying the Duty on Importation—that the Philadelphia, New York & Boston Captains had refused to ship it—that Mr. Fignon of London had then chartered a ship to carry 500 Chests to Boston 600 to N. & as many to Philadelphia—that Mr. Kelly had ingaged Abraham Oct. 10. Lott the Treasurer to be their Factor... The Fact is that ever since the Duty of 8d per Pound had been laid, by the [stateute] 7 Geo III (see June 29, 1767), all Tea had been Smuggled from Holland, to the great Detriment of the Indian House—and now the Sons of Liberty & the Dutch Smugglers set up the Cry of Liberty.—At New York it opened Wednesday the 6th with a Paper ailed the Alarm No. 1. Saturday we had No. 2 & yesterday a Paper arrived from Philadelphia, being a Letter to the Commissioners appointed by the East India Company for the Sale of Tea in America, holding up the Factors as another Species of Stamp Masters, & pened to inspire Terror into those Factors, & aminate the Populace ag't them. Virtue and Vice being thus united, I suppose we shall repeat all the Confusions of 1766 & 1766.—Time will show the Events. Our Domestic Parties will probably die, & be swallowed up in the general Opposition to the Parliamentary Project of raising the Arm of Government by Revenue Laws."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV. See Oct. 15.

"We are desired by the Magistrates of the city of New-York, to inform the inhabitants, That the act of this colony for the more effectual preventing of fires, and for regulating of buildings in the city of New-York, will be in force on the first day of January next [see Dec. 31, 1768]: By which law every dwelling-house, and other building whatever, whether public or private, thereafter to be erected within the said city, to the southward of Freshwater, is to be made of stone or brick, and roofed with tile or slate, under the penalties mentioned in the said act."—Rivington's Gazetteer, Oct. 14, 1773.

A list of titles of the music imported and sold by Rivington indicates the character of the music of the period. The catalogue includes, among others, Handel's voluntares, Garth's sonatas, Bach's sonatas, for the "Harpsichord, Spinnet, Piano Forte & Organ;" Bach's sonatas, duets, Bach's symphonies, for the violin; Magherini's trio, Giordani's chamber concertos, Bach's quartettern, Fétis's sonatas, Dutch minuets for the flute; and various selections from the guitar. He also advertises English operas with all the songs. Musical instruments and equipments are listed, and he offers to furnish tutors or musical instructors. Samuel Francis advertises that he has fitted up a "large commodious room in the lower part of his house [Queen's Head Tavern, near the Exchange in Broad St.] for the reception and entertainment of such persons, who may choose to regale themselves with fine Ale of this country produce, equal to any imported;" etc. At any time "in the day or evening beef stakes, mutton or pork chops, veal, oysters or eggs" can be procured. The elegant Wax-figures... are removed to the above house from Vaux-Hall [see June 14], and proper attendants to shew the same any hour of the day or evening."—Rivington's Gazetteer, Oct. 14, 1773.

In response to a handbill sent through the city, a large number of citizens meet at the Coffee House to signify "their Thanks to the Captains of the London Ships belonging to the Port, and the Merchants to whom they were addressed, for their patriotic Conduct in refusing... a Quantity of Tea, on which a Duty laid by the British Parliament was made payable in America on Importation." The following address is drawn up, read, and unanimously approved by the citizens: "Gentlemen,

Your prudent Couduit in refusing the Freight of the India Company's Tea, justly merits the Esteem and Applause of every Well-Wisher to the Liberties of this or any other Country.

The invicious Purpose of levying the Duty in America, and taking off a much greater in England, is equally manifest and detestable; being nothing less than to establish the odious Precedent of raising a Revenue in America. But it is a Happiness to the Inhabitants of this Colony and the Whole Continent, that Stamp Officers and Tea-Commissioners will ever be held in equal Estimation.

The Tribute, therefore, of our most grateful Thanks is most justly due, and is now hereby most heartily rendered to the truly patriotic Merchants and Masters of Vessels in London, who by their virtuous Example contributed so eminently to Discontinue a Measure which ought to be opposed by all good Men, as contrary to every principle of British Liberty, and therefore cannot but incur the just Indignation and Resentment of the much injured..."
A broadside, directed to the "Friends of Liberty and Commerce in New-York," and signed, "By Order of the Legion's Committee, Cassius," is distributed about the city. This broadside, issued by Mr. W. Kelly, now in London, "with sundry Speeches, tending to encourage the sending to America Tea, subject to its Arrival to a Duty imposed by the British Parliament." In the evening, an effigy, with his Name inscribed in luminous Letters, and suspended on a Gallows, stands to a Cart, with a Tea Canister before him, inscribed Tea, 3d. Sterling Duty, with several other Inscriptions and Devices, expressive of the Peoples Resentment," is drawn through the principal streets of the city and at last burned "before the Door of the Coffee-House."—N. Y. Merc., Nov. 15, 1775.

Hughes's English Grammar and general School, in Kings-street, is now open for Pupils. A Petition of this date to the common council, endorsed "Read & filed March the 5th 1774," from inhabitants of Montgomery Ward, asks the board's assistance to extend "Hague Street" through the land of Daniel Bonnett into "Frankford Street," for the purchase of which lot the petitioners have raised the insufficient sum of £118. From the original petition, in metal file No. 6, city clerk's record-room. See July 24, 1774.

"The Inhabitants of this City are hereby acquainted by the Magistrates, that the usual Scarcity of O J L Is the Reason the Lamps are not better lighted."—Rivington's Gazetteer, Nov. 11, 1774.

A section of what is "commonly called the Broadway," near the "Governor's Garden," is spoken of as Great George St.—Rivington's Gazetteer, Nov. 11, 1775. A use of the name "Great George St." is to be noted, therefore, prior to that given in the Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 905 (p. v).

The city grants water lots to Trinity Corporation, extending the church's property 200 ft. beyond its existing water grant for a space of 624 ft. in width.—Man. Com. Coun. (1570), 760. For street developments here, see M. C. C. (MS.), XXII: 76.

John Thurman writes to Rutgers Bleeker of Albany: "No Tea is yet Arrived we have had a Comity from a Select Body of the Inhabitants who waited on the Commissioners appointed by the India Company to know what they Intended to do with the Tea When it Arrived when they Generously Informed them they Thought it was so much against the Science of the Inhabitants that they could not Execute the Treaty they had made. There was no thing that was Contrary to the Settlement of their fellow Citizens which makes us very Easy on this head & I hope we shall have no disturbance when it arrives seeing the Commissioners are ready to do whatever the City shall Judge Right."—Letter Book of John Thurman, Jr., in Hist. Mag., 2nd ser., IV: 289.

A broadside of this date reads: "Whereas our nation have lately been informed, that the fetters which have been forged for us, (by the parliament of Great-Britain) are hourly expected to arrive, in a certain ship, belonging to, or chartered by, the East India Company. We do therefore declare, that we are determined not to be enslaved, by any power on earth; and that whosoever shall aid, or abet, so infamous a design, shall presume to lay their store, or stores, for the reception of the infernal chains, may depend upon it, that we are prepared, and shall not fail to pay them an unwelcome visit, in which they shall be treated as they deserve by—" The Mohawks.—Rivington's Gazetteer, Dec. 2, 1775.

A broadside, headed "A Letter from the Country To a Gentleman in Philadelphia," and signed "Rusticus," is issued from Fairview. It inveighs at the London administration of the East India Company and urges the people not to accept the tea.—From the broadside in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. This was reprinted in New York on Dec. 4 (p. v).

The first tea ship, the "Dartmouth," arrives at Boston and anchors "off the Long Wharf."—N. Y. Merc., Dec. 6, 1773. See Dec. 16.
A broadside appears under the caption: "The Association of the Sons of Liberty of New York." The preamble opens with the statement: "It is essential to the freedom and security of a free people, that no taxes be imposed upon them but by their own consent, or their representatives." After reciting the history of this association and its present legislature, and the East India Company, it continues: "Therefore, to prevent a calamity, which of all others, is the most to be dreaded—slavery, and its terrible concomitants,—We the subscribers, being influenced from a regard to liberty, and disposed to use all lawful endeavors in our power, to defeat the pernicious project, and to transmit to our posterity, those blessings of freedom, which our ancestors have handed down to us; and to contribute to the support of the common liberties of America, which are in danger to be subverted, Do . . . agree to associate together, under the name and stilte of the Sons of Liberty of New York, and engage our honour, to and with each other, faithfully to observe and perform the following Resolutions." The resolutions recite in detail that whoever shall aid in introducing into this place dutiable tea, whether the duty be paid in England or America, or aid in carting or storing such tea, or who shall buy or sell the article, shall be considered an enemy to American liberty with whom we will not deal, employ, or have any connections. An advertisement to the public, Dec. 15, says that the preceding "Association is signed by a great Number of the principal Gentlemen of the City, Merchants, Landlords, &c., inhabitants, of all classes, and is still carried about the City, to give an Opportunity to those who, have not yet signed, to unite with their Fellow Citizens to testify their Abhorrence to the diabolical Project of enslaving America."—N. Y. Jour., Dec. 16, 1773. One such broadside was among the Geo. D. Smith MSS. sold at the Anderson Galleries, Mar. 14-15, 1921.

The governor's council decides that the tea shall "be taken into the Care of Government," and that it shall be stored in either the fort or the lower barracks. The inhabitants are to be informed of this decision. Smith says: "This seemed to have a good Effect till Tuesday 7 Dec when an Express arrived with a Letter to Mr. Livingston, Livingston, Low, Dearborn Isaac Sears & Alex McDougal containing Resolves of the Town of Boston, that the Tea arrived there, should go back in the same Bottom. . . ."

"The Liberty Boys now changed their Tone & seemed adverse to the Landing, and their chief Motive was an Abreproachment, that the Populace would change their present sentiments and call for the Tea—They had Reason for these suspicions (1) because the Subscription to an Association Paper printed & set on Foot the 30 Ins! proceeded slowly & 2 because there was little Tea in the Port of York—Mr. Livingston, Low, Dearborn, McDougal, & Van Horn called on Smith, and Low, as spokesman, said in substance: "The Inhabitants heard of the Gov't. Intention to land & store the Tea, & approved it as a good & moderate Measure—They supposed it was founded upon a Belief that it would be a proper Care of the public. . . ."

—The Gov'rs of Boston and Philadelphia & Adm' Mountagne concieve that gov't. have nothing to do with Merchants Goods, if their Agents will not take Care of it—We think so too. . . . The Inhabit. wish Mr. Tryon would not charge him with it—If he does not it will go Home of Course—If he does it will not be Safe—If we land it here they will elsewhere—. . . immense animalities may arise from it."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV. See Dec. 15.

A proclamation of the royal approval of an act "relating to the division line between New York City and the town of Harlem" is issued.—Gazett. Hist. MSS., Eng., 814. The act was passed on March 24, 1772. (p. 2)

The "Ruticles" letter of Nov. 27 (p. 2) is reprinted in a broadside by the New York "Committee of the Association," and its authorship ascribed to the "celebrated Pennsylvania Thrower." (John Dickinson). On the reverse is the broadside with the title: "The Association of the Sons of Liberty of New York."—From the broadside in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. See Nov. 29.

Henry White, Abraham Lott, and Benjamin Booth, of New York City, have been appointed agents for the sale of the tea declared by the East India Company. Oct. 2, but as there is a "general Opposition to the Sale of it, as it stands charged with a Duty payable in the Colonies," they have refused to receive it. In consequence of this, it is said that the tea "will be taken into the Protection of Government, and be deposited in the lower Barracks."—N. Y. Jour., Dec. 6, 1773. For a meeting of the inhabitants in regard to this, see Dec. 17.

In a letter to William Cooper of Boston, Alexander McDougal writes: "The worst that can or will happen is that it will be called too late, and the Tea will have to be destroyed. All that the zealous Friends of Liberty could as yet effect, is to get the inclosed association Entered into [see Nov. 29], and signed By a great Number of the Principal Merchants, Lawyers & other Inhabitants; and this not without secret opposition. The Members of the Association will be called together to appoint a Committee to correspond with yours, on all interesting subjects you mention. That would have been done some time ago, but we waited for an accession of more reputable members."—From the original in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

"It is observed that we have had in our Markets for some Days past, a greater Quantity of Provisions of all Sorts, than has been known for many Years at the same Season, and at pretty reasonable Prices."—N. Y. Jour., Dec. 13, 1773.

Tryon declares in council that he will not "use Military force for the Landing" of the tea. Upon Col. Morris's suggesting that he ought to be prepared "to prevent Insult," the governor answers: "I will use no Arms until they [the citizens] have abused & disgraced their Gov't. & themselves. I will run the Risk of Brick Batts & Dirt and I trust that you & others will stand by me."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

The "Boston Tea Party" occurs. Rivington prints an account of it, but editorial comment is entirely lacking. The narration concludes with the statement that "one of the spectators, tempted by the exquisite flavour of the finest hyson, greedily filled his pockets, and the lining of his doublet with tea, which enraged the people, that after every grain of it was taken from him, and discharged into the water, he underwent a horrid discipline which threatened his life."—Rivington's Gazetteer, Dec. 23, 1773. Winsor says that the Boston Tea Party, "although applauded throughout the colonies, was not imitated by them."—Winsor, Nat. & Crit. Hist. of Am., VI: 57. This statement is an erroneous one, for a "Tea Party" took place in New York on April 13, 1773. (p. 53).

"The Members of the Association of the Sons of Liberty, are requested to meet at the City-Hall, at one o'clock To-Morrow, being Friday, on Business of the utmost Importance [see Dec. 17]; And every other Friend, to the Liberties, and Trade of America, is hereby most cordially invited, to meet at the same Time and Place."—The Committee of the Association.—N. Y. Jour., Dec. 16, 1773.

A committee is appointed to "View & Consider of Proper Places for storing the Curious Boxes for watching this City, also to adopt a Plan for Regulating the Watchmen & Lamplighters and to make an Estimate of the Expenditure thereof for the ensuing Year."—M. C. C., VIII: 462. The recorder was added to the committee on May 4, 1774, at which time several sentinel boxes had been completed and were prepared to be set up in the City.—M. C. C., VIII: 28, 29.

Another council meeting is "occasioned by a printed Summons in the New[?] Papers [see Dec. 16] of the Citizens to the Town Hall at 2 o'clock this Day." Smith suggests that "if many Met that the Gov't should & speek to them and I would Insure a Vote for the Storing of the Tea—That if they were a contemptible Handful—We might trust to their sinking into Despondency of bringing the City to Violence." Some council members object to this proposal, and it is finally decided to send for the mayor and recorder. When these two arrive, the governor thus addresses them: "Tell the People that I shall think my Duty to protect the Tea so far as to prevent its being destroyed—That I should be obliged to do this, if it was the Property of Aliens—that I owe it more especially to the Kings Subjects who have no Persons here, who will take Charge of it—that I do not mean to use Force for the Purpose—that I expect none but Citizens to assist in the Storing of it—that I shall see that it is done and I hope it will happen in a proper manner, but that I have my own Cause to behave with Moderation Justice & Decency on this Occasion—that they may depend upon my Word, that it shall come in by Day Light & go out by Day Light, with out any Secrecy, and that not an Ounce of it shall be delivered to any Person, without the express order of the Gov't, or the consent of the Council—that we can do no more or less, & that I hope they will neither disgrace their Gov't nor themselves by any imprudent violent & intemperate Behavior."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.
A newspaper account of the meeting states that "a very num-eros and respectable Number of the Citizens" met at the city dec 17 hall. "Letters received from the Committee of Correspondence of the Town of Boston, and a Letter from Philadelphia relative to the in-m ctee of the East-India Company's Tea," were read and a committee of fifteen was chosen to answer the letters and and to correspond with our Sister Colonies on the Subject of the dutied Tea." After the "Association of the Sons of Liberty" (see Nov.

29) had been communicated to the people, Mayor Hicks delivered the governor's message. Upon his asking if it were satisfactory, the answer was a general "No, No, No, John Lamb, a leader of the "Sons of Liberty," next reading the parliament act imposing a duty on tea imported into America, and a resolution was passed "that no Tea, subject to a Duty by a British Act of Parliament, for the purpose of raising a Revenue in America, should be landed." The meeting then adjourned till the Arrival of the Tea Ships.
report to the council after the meeting, the mayor said "that there were at the Hall about 800 or 1000 People . . . that the General Temper was ag^ the Landing of the tea; that he & the Recorder both conceived of the Question Remaining undecided."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV. On this same date it is calendared in the Council Minutes, "the people are averse to the landing of the tea."—Cal. Coun., Min., 499. For the arrival of the first tea-ships in New York, see April 19, 1774.
A letter communique of correspondence, copies of which are sent both to Philadelphia and New York by Paul Revere, says: "Yesterday [see Dec. 16] we had a greater meeting of the Body than ever, the Country coming in from twenty miles round, and every step was taken, that was practicable for returning to the Town. The moment it was known out doors that Mr.
Rotch could not obtain a pass for his Ship by the Castle, a number of people huzza'd in the Street, and in a very little time every ounce of the Tea . . . was immersed in the Bay, without the least injury to private property. The Spirit of the People on this occasion surprised all parties who view'd the Scene." There is a MS.
copy of this letter in the New-York P. Lib. And see also The True Story of Paul Revere, by Gettény (1905), 50-51.
William Smith wrote in his diary on Dec. 21: "An Express from Boston to Phil Livingston Sears Broune & McDougal each 11 Chests & the Loss of the 4th Ship with 58 Chests on Cape Cod. The Custom House delayed to clear the Vessels, & the Gov't

Smith records in his diary: "Some say there were 2 others 300 People Yesterday [Dec. 21] at the Hall by Enquiry I learn that the Principal inhabitants who were of the Gov't opinion, did not exact themselves—I suspect
1. That some were fearful of the Populace
2. Some curtailing the People ag^ Elections
3. That the Delaneys rather fell in with the Multitude to save Interest, & out of Pique to the Gov't who is Too independently spared by them.
This Evening I saw Mc Dougal Sears & Sams Broume at Simmon's Tavern—These were three of the Committee appointed yesterday for Correspondence . . . These Three are confident of opposition to the Landing, and that the Ins of the inhabitants

Fears of no being chosen, Mc Dougal, Sears, and Broume smiled, & expressed only very soft & jocular Negatives," and intimated that if they had known at the meeting "that the Majority was so great, they would have had the Credit of a Division upon the Question, are you for opposing or for storing; & got the Teas andship of the Two Bodies is to send to the Weakening of those of for storing the Tea."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.
"News that the South Carolina People had resolved to send back the Tea ordered this day, and to import no more themselves while subject to Duty—This greatly inflames the Populace here, & certainly it will not be landed, if they do not change their Opinions."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.
In a Letter from Tom Bowline, to his worthy Messmates, the renowned Sons of Neptune, belonging to the Port of New York, and dated "From my Moorings, in Ratline Lane," is issued. It reads:
"As the Time is approaching, in which the Ship, with the East-India Company's Tea may be expected to arrive, and he moored in our Harbour, to put the finishing Stroke to our Liberties, and ruin the Trade of our Country, by establishing a Monop-opoly; which will in Time (should it be effected) deprive Numbers of our worthy Merchants of their Sheet Anchor, and oblige them to quit their Moorings and steer into the Country, to take a Trick at the Plough; and will (as sure as the Devil's in London) drive many of us to the cruel Alternative of seeking Employment in a foreign Country, to prevent starving in our own: And, as much depends upon our Steadiness, and Activity, in regard to weathering this Storm; I must therefore, strongly recommend the Necessity of keeping a good Look-out, and being all, and all, hold ourselves in Readiness, and heartily join our Merchants, and other worthy Citizens, in preventing the pestilential Commodity from being parbuckled on Shore."—From original in N. Y. Hist. Soc.
Smith's diary states: "The Boston News [see Dec. 17] astonished the Town—Those who were for storing the Tea now affect to change Sentiments & agree to the present Resolution—Truth they are allright—All now are of one Mind & those who were for storing it seem most disposed to intrest the Gov't to change his Resolutions for Fear of the Multitude—Henry White [see Dec.
6] told me . . . that he was going to the Gov't to intimate this News & to signify that it would be best to let the Ship return [see Dec. 23] . . . This Eveng I discover by Hints that the Mechanics convene at Beer-Houses, where Sears McDougall & al meet them to concert Measures for the Day of the Ship's arrival.

An Event which writes: "Rivett's Paper of this Morn announces that the Tea Ship is to be sent back—The People understood it to be solved in Council—I guessed it to he . . . the Effect of Whites Interview with the Gov't [see Dec. 22]—The Town applaud the Gov't!—But what will the Gov'n at Home do? This Eveng I learn that Aythough the Cap' of the Frigate whose ship is come up from the Hook, said last Night to Sam Broume, that the Gov't told him the India C9 would lose their Tea if landed
"I must mortify Tyrion who has spoken Vauntantly, & wrote assuring Gov'n of the Landing here—But he is determined to be popular here, to save himself from the Impu-tation of a Want of Praucence in Carolina—He can justify himself from the Violence at Boston . . .
"The Boston Violence has evidently effected this Measure here.

"After all had we stored the Tea between 1 & 7 Decf this Event at Boston would have excite our People, to demand it for Retrangement or Destruction."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.
The common council authorizes the payment of £18:16:1
for a "Fire Engine for the use of the West Ward."—M. C. C., VII:
465. Inasmuch as the cost of a fire-engine was regularly far greater than this amount (see July 15, 1772), it seems more probable that this expenditure was for a fire-engine house. An order of May 7, 1772 (q. v.), called for the removal of the two fire-engines "now under the City hall," one to the West Ward, the other to Montgomery Ward. The sum of £1 was authorized (ibid., VII: 189) for the engine house in the ward last named, an amount which is closely approximated by this expenditure in the West Ward.
Smith learns from White that "it is to be concerted if possible that the Cap' of the tea-ships be prevented from coming up & [that he] has sent off without the Gov't knowledge of his Arrival at the Hook." White also tells Smith "that he said to the Gov't your Council will all advise, to send away the ship, & that he replied
I don't want to know anything of the Matter—a plain point.
"Give him White." Besides this, Tryon has told the captain of the man-of-war "that he did not want him to look for the Tea Ship any longer."
Smith writes of the situation: "From all which that plain

John Thurnan writes to Amos Heyton, probably of London: "You will see by the News Papers what Kind of Reception the India Companies’ Teas have had in America [!] Boston hath been drove to the Kissus of Destraction, Dec. 15th. George Phillips & this Place I trust will have it in their Power to Return it [!] our Governour having the affections of the Inhabitants used his best endeavours to get their consent to Land it, but the affair at Boston has determined the Americans to perish Rather than suffer it to be Land’d or for having forc’d themselves upon them [!] unless Parliament determine to Repeal those acts they had Better declare war against the Colonies at once & I dare say they will stand forth for their King & Liberty Like sons of Freedom, we all wish for Peace & a Good understanding between Great Britain & her Colonies and as much wish to support our Liberties which never will be tamely Given up you may be assured."—From "Extracts from the Letter Books of John Thurnan, Jr.," in Hist. "We have the inexpressible Satisfaction in acquainting our Readers, that it is determined, on the Arrival of the Ship Nancy, with the Tea from the Honourable East-India Company, the Commander will be made acquainted with the Sentiments of the Inhabitants respecting the Shipping that Article [see Dec. 17], which will indubitably occasion his return with it in statu quo, to England, and that he will be provided with every Necessary for the prosecution of his trade, which, however, may be done, both to this Colony and the Honourable Company, will be most happily prevented, and a Succession of that blessed Tranquility, which we enjoy under the present wise and serene Administration, will be secured."—N. "The Government House" in Fort George is destroyed by fire. The governor’s daughter jumps from a second story window into a snow-bank and is saved. A maid perishes. All the contents of the building except "a little Furniture out of the Parlour," and the great seal (see Dec. 31), are destroyed, including all public and private papers in the governor’s possession. Deep snow on the roofs of the houses, with the help of the fire engines, prevents the spread of the flames.—N. Y. Col. Doc., VIII: 457. [MS.]

At a meeting of the governor’s council, Jan. 5, 1774, Gov. Tryon reported that "in order to trace if possible the Cause of this Distress his Servants had by his Directions been examined on Oath before the Mayor of the City, and their Depositions taken, by which it appear’d that the Fire was first discovered in the Council Room, and probably originated there but in what manner is unknown."—Capt. George Smith (MS), XXVI: 353 [Albany].

"Col. Fanning has also been a great Sufferer, but has been happy enough to save the Papers belonging to the Surrogate Office."—N. Y. Mercury, Jan. 3, 1774. Some "Pieces of Plate belonging to his Excellency our Governor, were found among the Rubbish in Fort-Gorge, as likewise several of Mr. Tryon’s Jewels."—Ibid., Jan. 10, 1774.

At a meeting of the common council, March 11, 1774, warrants totaling £5,411-12 were ordered issued to five different persons for liquor delivered at the fort at the time of the late fire; and also a warrant, to Robert Totty, for £2,559 for sundry articles declared to be destroyed in the fire that happened last Thursday, Jan. 9, 1774. Manuscript accounts preserved in the comptroller’s office contain three later items concerning payments for liquor for the same purpose, one of March 29, 1774, one of April 12, and one of April 24; the three amounting to £8,110.10. on April 22, apparently intended for £2,976 for "Baking dinner, A Sea Arch of Chimes, and some Wine of the house that was Burnt in the Fourth, another of the same date is for £4,278." The estimated population of the province of New York is 182,427, of whom 161,098 are whites. This is 14.140 more than the total recorded in 1772.—Dec. Hist. N. Y. (400 ed.), I: 474.

A compilation is issued of the Laws of New-York from the Year 1664, to 1773. Isaiah Thomas begins the publication at Boston of The Royal American Magazine, or Universal Repository of Instruction and Amusement. Tryon writes to the Earl of Dartmouth: "From the general Appearance of the united opposition to the principle of the Monop- oly, as established by the East India Company, and the spirit in America, I can form no other Opinion than that the landing [at New York], storing, and safe keeping of the Tea, when stored, could be accomplished, but only under the protection of the Port of the Bayonet, and Musle of the Canon."—N. Dartmouth writes to Gov. Tryon: "When I consider that the Alarm which has been spread with a view to excite an opposition to the Landing of Teas sent by the East India Company to New York, is not apparently, may awefully founded upon self-interested motives, I cannot but flatter myself that the authors and abettors of such unwarrantable proceedings will meet with Disappointment and Disgrace, and that any new attempt to disturb the peace and tranquility of a Province so deservedly distinguished for its peaceful and good government, will be defeated.

"The inhumane, Extracts of my letter . . . to Major General Haldimand will however inform you, that there has not been wanting a due attention to what may be necessary in case matters should turn out contrary to my hopes & expectations, and the civil power should, in case of any public Disturbance be found inadequate to the preservation of the King's subjects."—N. Referring to the recent destruction of the government house (see Dec. 29, 1773), Tryon says, in an address to the council and assembly, that he is filled with "the strongest emotions of regret for the demolition of that mansion, particularly after your liberal grant for its repair." He further says: "my warmest gratitude is due to Almighty, that by the powerful exertions of the citizens and military, this metropolis was preserved from the destructive calamity." An advertisement informs the public of "A Plan for a Public Fire Office. For the purpose of raising and employing fifty men, and the number of engines, buckets, and other serviceable implements used in extinguishing fires. And for providing a Fund for the Public Hospital."

"It is computed that there are at least three thousand houses in this city. In one room of each of which there must necessarily be a fire kept every day. Cleansing the chimneys of these from soot ten times per year . . . at one shilling for the service would produce fifteen hundred pounds yearly.

In two thousand of these houses it may be supposed that a second fire is kept as a precaution, from the beginning of November, to the last of April, and these being cleaned five times in the term, on the aforesaid plan, would produce five hundred pounds yearly.

Taking the extra fires on an average (meaning in those houses wherein are kept three or four fires, as is the case in many, during the winter months) it is supposed that there would be at least fifteen hundred more, to sweep four times in the cold season, which would bring in three thousand pounds yearly further."

With this data the advertiser suggests that a public office for the cleaning of chimneys might be established with a superintendent at an annual salary of £200, one master sweeper with a salary of £100, 14 sweepers each with a salary of £60, and £50 set aside for tools. The total cost of this office would be £1,050 and when this was subtracted from the estimated earnings of £2,500, there would be a balance of £1,450 "to be appropriated to the purposes of this plan, of which two hundred and fifty pounds would apply sufficiently for fire service; so that there would be one thousand pounds per annum for the Hospital."—Rivington's Gazette, Jan. 31, 1774.

"In all probability the Tea-Ship, which has been long expected, is near at hand, and it is the noble and impatient desire of every son of American freedom here, to see the day, when they shall have the inscrutable satisfaction of gloriously assisting their sister colonies, in establishing the freedom of their country. For, to their immortal honour be it said, that no monopolizing company upon the face of the earth, with all their subtility and iniquitous designs; with all their own sophistry, or the craft and cunning of their most subtle Agents, shall ever be able to put their enslaving schemes into execution.—Schemes which the very children of America can see through, because self-evidently destructive of the happiness and growing prosperity of this country. And when such base designs, become obvious to the understanding of all, they must, and ever will be opposed by all; a few venal Parasites only excepted.

Our sister colonies, have gloriously defended the common cause of this country. A few persons have suspected, that as this is a central province, ministerial manoeuvres might probably be exerted here with more success. But superior opportunities must never be thrown away, for they ought to be proportionately improved by us, as we have had more time to think of the machinations that have been formed against our general constitutional liberty; But we trust," with God’s blessing, to stand our ground, and as the day of trial is now come, that we shall convince the

A. BROADSIDE LIST OF 150 MEN RECOMMENDED AS PROPER FOR ELECTION TO A GENERAL CITIZEN COMMITTEE, APR. 17, 1777. SEE P. 883.

CHRONOLOGY: THE REVOLUTIONARY PERIOD: 1763-1776

The provincial council, which orders the issuing of a proclamation confirming all officers in their places.—Cal. Coun. Min., 501.

The common council agrees to the committee’s recommendation that the west side of the corporation pier on the west side of Pecks Slip be the landing-place for the ferry from thence to Nassau Island, where the landing-place shall be at the wharf of Jacob Brewerton. It is ordered that a proper bridge be built at each landing-place. In New York the landing-place for the Counties Shipyerry to Nassau Island is fixed between the west side of the slip and the east side of the Long bridge and it is ordered that two landing-places be built between said limits.—M. C. C., VIII: 22. For the purchase of the ferries, see March 1.

The recorder proposes to the board for its consideration whether it would not be more for the Interest of this Corporation to Allow their Chanceler a Certain Sallary than a Commission, that as their Revenues were daily Encresing the Commission thereon in time would be Immense.”—M. C. C., VIII: 23.

Robert R. Livingston, the recorder, resigns and the common council orders that he be presented with the freedom of the city.—M. C. C., VIII: 23. See April 12, for his successor.

A petition of this date to the common council from “the Directors of the Union Library Society in the City of New York,” signed by Walter Franklin, president, and endorsed “Granted 7th 12th of April 1774,” states that this society “consists of upwards of One Hundred and Thirty Members, who have already a very Com- mercial Library,” (see Jan. 14, 1773) “so that the public are greatly tended to the Dissemination of useful knowledge” and they ask the boards permission to deposit it in the eastern part of “the Room in the City Hall where the New York Society Library is deposited,” and that “a Partition be erected between them and a New Door opened.” They express their willingness to erect the partition at their own expense, and also to “take Order that their Librarian shou’d Act as Librarian to the Corporation Library without any Expenditure to this Honourable Board, provided the Corporation shall have the Books of their Library numbered and properly Catalogued”—From original petition, in state file No. 6, in city clerk’s record-room. The petition was granted the next day (q. v.).—M. C. C., VIII: 24—25. For the removal to these new quarters, see July 25.

John Watts, Jr., takes his seat as recorder, succeeding Robert R. Livingston who resigned on April 7 (q. v.).—M. C. C., VIII: 241. N. Y. Merc., April 11, 1774.

The common council appoints a committee to cause Golden Hill to be “dug down & Regulated.”—M. C. C., VIII: 24. Certain inhabitants of the locality petitioned at the next board meeting that the regulation thereof might be so directed as to prevent the utter desolation of many of their houses.—Ibid., VIII: 26. Those petitioning “to have Gold Hill Demolished” (q. v.) in order to build dwellings were notified to attend on common council for a hearing.—Ibid., VIII: 28. Golden Hill was the high ground between William, John, Fulton and Cliff Sts. See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 966.

The common council grants to the members of the Union Library Society under the use of the East part of the Room in which the books of the New York Society Library are Contained... they being at the Expense of a door and making the Partitions required.”—M. C. C., VIII: 24—25.

A “Plan of the Fort Made at the Request of Mr Speaker & the Committee appointed to fix on a Suitable plan to build a Gov’t House” (see March 11), which shows the fort as it was at this date, is reproduced and described as Pl. 46-a, Vol. I.

“A purse of fifty pounds, will be run for over Newtown, on Long-island; and two fifty pounds purses will be also run for over the old course at Hartlem [see Feb. 22, 1762].—The revival of the sport at this last place, affords much satisfaction to the Brothers of the Bridle, and occasional cheerful contributions to the purses. The particulars of the plates will be very soon advertised.”—Reynolds’ Gazetteer, April 14, 1774.

The provincial council swears in Samuel Bayard as deputy-secretary. This Mr. Bayard, having been the proper power of attorney from Sec. George Clarke.—Cal. Coun. Min., 501.

Aside from the expected tea-ship (see March 17), word comes by way of Philadelphia that “Captain Chambers of the ship London, of this port [New York], had taken on board, at the port of London, 18 boxes of fine tea, which were regularly cleared; and the mark and numbers were taken from the cockney by Captain All of Philadelphia. As Captain Chambers was one of the first who refused to take the India Company’s tea on freight the last summer, for which he received the thanks of the citizens, they could not be satisfied that they knew of the tea being on board, and therefore sup-pended it to have been shipped by some ministerial cool, under another denomination, in order to injure the owners, or the reputation of the master, or to make an experiment of this mode of introducing the tea to America.—The Committee are convinced the inhabitants were therefore determined to examine into the matter with great vigilan:—Rivington's Gazette, April 28, 1774. See April 22, for arrival of Capt. Chambers.

"Notice is hereby given that the tickets of the Bridewell lottery are now rolling up, and every deponent receiving his ticket made in the same way the public are therefore informed, that the drawing will certainly commence on Monday the 25th of this instant April [9-v.]
All such persons therefore who choose to become adventurers in so advantageous a scheme, and encourage so useful an institution, are desired to apply without delay, lest they may be precluded in their design."—N. Y. Merc, April 18, 1774.
The corporation of the city evinced its approval of the project by taking some of the tickets (see April 23).

"Peter Stuyvesant, who for some years past drove a stage from Bowles-Hook to Brown's Ferry, proposes to revive the same business this season, and will set out the first Monday in May: He
... from Mr. Elsworth's, and deliver his passengers at Brown's Ferry, to Mr. Josiah Crane, who carries them to the house in Newark lately occupied by Mr. Bank's. ...—N. Y. Merc, April 18, 1774.

"A New York broadside, addressed "To the Public," states that "The long expected Tea Ship arrived last night at Sandy-Hook, but the pilot would not bring up the Captain till the sense of the city was known." Such liberty is allowed, but "care will be taken that he does not enter at the custom-house, and that no time be lost in despatching him." From broadside in N. Y. Hist. Soc., reproduced as Pl. 41, Vol. IV.

Rivington's account of the episode is as follows: "In the night, the long expected tea-ship (see March 17), Nancy, Capt. Lockyer, arrived at Sandy-Hook. ... Letters being delivered to him by the pilot, and some questionable items in the ticket of the tea, the admiral of the city went on board his ship to be landed, he requested the pilot to bring him up to procure necessity and make a protest, but he would not do it till leave was obtained. Early the next morning this was communicated to the committee; and it appearing to him to be the sense of the city, that such leave should be granted to him, the ship to remain at the Hook: the pilot was immediately dispatched to bring him up. This intelligence we immediately communicated to the public by an hand-bill." A P. M., the pilot-boat returned with Capt. Lockyer on board; and although the people had but a very short notice of it, the wharf was crowded with the citizens, to see the man whose arrival they long and impatiently wished, to give them an oppotunity to co-operate with the other colonies. The committee conducted him to the house of Hon. Henry White, Esq.; one of the consignees, and there informed Capt. Lockyer, that it was the sense of the citizens, that he should not presume to go near the Custom-house, and to make the utmost dispatch in procuring the necessary articles he wanted for his voyage. To this he answered;
"That as the consignees would not receive his cargo, he would not go to the Custom-house, and would make all the dispatch he could to leave the city. A committee of observation was appointed to go down in a sleep to the Hook, to remain near the tea-ship, till she departs for London. ... Wednesday night arrived Capt.
Lawrence, from London, who confirmed the account received from Philadelphia, of Capt. Chambers going on board 18 chests of fine tea, but could not tell who was the shipper, or to whom it was addressed. Thursday the committee interrogated Capt.
Lawrence relative to what he knew of the tea's being on board of Capitn Chambers, when he shewed them a memorandum in his pocket-book, which he took from the cock in the middle of Captains Chamber's file of papers in the Searcher's office at Gravesend, corresponding with the advice transmitted from Philadelphia, except some variation in the mark. This morning the following hand bill was distributed:

"To The Public. The sense of the city, relative to the landing the East India Company's tea, being signified to Captain Lockyer, by the committee, nevertheless, it is the desire of a number of the citizens, that at his departure hence, he should see, with his owners eyes, their detestation of the measures pursued by the Ministry and the India Company, to enslave this country. This will be declared by the convention, & the people at his departure from this city which will be on next Saturday morning, at 9 o'clock, when no doubt every friend to this country will attend. The bells will give the notice through the city, and he will be embarks from Murray's Wharf.

the same. Burke next attacks the British colonial policy in general. Before 1764, England was satisfied with having a commercial monopoly of America, and there was no great protest from the colonies against taxes imposed solely to regulate trade. But since 1764, Great Britain has been trying to raise a revenue in the New World, and the combination of the colonial customs with the determined resolutions of the citizens not to suffer the tea on board of his ship to be landed, he requested the pilot to bring him up to

interrogated relative to his having the tea on board, but he still denied it. He was then told that it was in vain to deny it, for as there was good proof of its being on board, it would be found, and the ship was to leave port. He was then told that he had better be open and candid about it; and demanded the cockpit for the tea; upon which he confessed it was on board, and delivered the cockpit. The owners and the committee immediately met at Mr. Francis's, where Captain Chambers was ordered to attend. Upon examining him who was the ship's and owner of the tea, he declared that he was sole owner of it. After the most mature deliberation, it was determined to communicate the whole state of the matter to the people, who were convened near the ship; which was accordingly done. The Mohawks were prepared to do their duty at a proper hour, but the body of the people was so impatient, that before it arrived, a number of them entered the ship, about 8 P. M. took out the tea, which was at hand, broke the cases, and started their contents into the river, without doing any damage to the ship or cargo. Several persons of reputation were placed below to keep tally, and about the companion to prevent ill-disposed persons from going below the deck.

"At 10 o'clock all dispersed in good order, but in great wrath against the Captain; and it was not without some risk of his life that he escaped."—Rivington's Gazetteer, April 28, 1774. See April 25.

The Annual Register (London, 1774), 132, reports that "a number of persons habited as Mohawks, entered the ship, took out the tea that was at hand, broke the cases, and started the contents into the river, without doing any damage to the ship or cargo." An interesting similarity exists between the treatment of the tea-ships in New York and that in Boston, on or about Dec. 16, 1773 (p. 7), but also on March 6, 1774, when a vessel arrived in Boston having on board 258 chests of East India tea together with other goods. At the custom-house a warrant was granted for landing all merchandise but the tea, but the officers steadfastly refused to furnish papers which allowed even for the return of the tea. "This determination of the officers to open every package, and the number of men having the appearance of Indians entered the vessel, took out the tea, emptied every chest overboard, and effectually destroyed the whole; after which they peaceably retired, without doing any further damage."—N. Y. Jour., March 17, 1774.

Christopher Colles proposes to the common council "to Erect a Reservoir, and to Convey Water thro' the Several Streets of this City." The consideration thereof is "deferred to Some future Time."—M. C. C., VIII: 26-27. See June 14. This is the first recorded proposal that the city government create a water supply. Before 1774, the city's supply of water, the drinking water was confined almost entirely to the famous "Tea Water Pump," at Chatham and Pearl Sts. (see Pls. 40 and 53-B, Vol I; A. Pl. 14-b, Vol. III, and Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 976), and was peddled about the city from casks. Water from wells was also used, but this water was generally so bad that, as one early traveler observed of the "water even the most ignorant of the city have to drink,"

This morning "the shipping in the harbour displayed their colours, and a large flag was hoisted on the 'Liberty Pole,' and at 8 A. M. all the bells of the city (except those of the city hall and college, as indicated in a letter signed 'Brutus' in Rivington's Gazetteer, May 12, 1774) rang, . . . About nine, the greatest number of people were collected at and near the Coffee-House, that was ever known in this city. At a quarter past nine the committee came out of the Coffee-House with Captain Lockyer, upon which, the band of music attending, played God save the King. Before 2 P.M. there was a call for Capt. Chambers.—Where is he? Where is he? Capt. Lockyer must not go till we find Capt. Chambers to send him with the tea ship. This produced marks of fear in Capt. Lockyer, who imagined some mischief was intended him; but upon assurances being given to him of the contrary, he appeared composed. The company then proceeded to open every package, though the multitude to the end of Murray's wharf, where he was put on board the pilot-boat, and wished a safe passage; upon which the multitude gave loud huzza's, and many guns were fired, expressive of their joy at his departure. The committee of observation at the Hook, have cognizance of him till a fair wind offers for the return of the ship."

"On Sunday night at 8 P. M., the Committee of Observation returned from the Hook. They inform us that the sailors of the Tea Ship, being unwilling to proceed with her to London, made a raft of spars and boards, in order to quit the ship with the tide of flood, but were observed by the Captain, and being aided by the Committee, who offered their assistance to him, they desisted from their project.—They drank效应, with the Committee, weighed their anchors and stood to sea; and at 2 P. M. the pilot boat and the Committee's sloop left her at the distance of three leagues from the Hook."

"With Capt. Lockyer, in the ship Nancey, went passenger, Capt. James Chamber's skipper and mate; also a private person for the Committee's sloop, with the Committee, weighed their anchors and stood to sea; and at 2 P. M. the pilot boat and the Committee's sloop left her at the distance of three leagues from the Hook."

"Many persons still suspecting that Captain James Chambers continues privately in this city, they may be assured that he sailed out of the Hook, for London, on Sunday last, on board the Nancey, Captain Lockyer, who afforded him a very hospitable and gentlemanly reception. And whose whole behaviour, during his stay in this city, proved him to be a sensible, discreet, and a very well-behaved man."—Rivington's Gazetteer, April 28, 1774.

For a discussion of the slight attention given by historians in general to the New York "Tea Party" as compared to that of Boston, see Dawson's, Westchester County during the Am. Rev., 7.

The treasurer of the city is ordered to "take 7000 tickets of the Bridewell Lottery on & for the Risque of this Corporation."—M. C. C., VIII: 27. The lottery was drawn on April 25 (p. 7).

A gentleman in London writes to his friend in New York: "The present great Topica and universal Inquiry is, what will the Americans do now?"—The generally answered,—They must submit, they can't possibly do other Ways—the Boston Port Bill will speedily and effectually execute it itself.—Taking away the Trade, ruins every Man of Property in the Place.—This Idea will strike such a Panic, as must render it easy for Mr. Gage to obtain not only ample Indemnification for the East India Company; but Submission on the part of the Bostonians, and acknowledgment of the Parliament's Right to Tax them: And should the Port Bill fail in effecting all this, a Corps de Reserve is at Hand; A Bill ready for the Royal Assent, new modeling their Constitution and Government, which will put such a Reim in the Minister's Hand, as may enable him to pull them by the Back, as well, as his 3, 4, 5, & 6. They say they must submit, and the same Measure will produce the same Effect, in every refractory Colony."—N. Y. Jour., July 7, 1774.

"On Thursday the 8th Instant, Joseph Bryan, who was employed as the Constitutional Post Rider from Philadelphia to Baltimore, and was instuted with 128 Dollars in a Bag directed to Mr. William Luz, at Baltimore, rode off with the Cash and has never been heard of since."—N. Y. Misc., Apr. 25, 1774. Such occurrences must have brought home to the people of the country how rapidly and inconveniency of payment in currency instead of bank exchange. It was not until 1784 (p. 2) that a bank was established in New York.

Solomon Griffiths establishes what is evidently the first employment agency for servants, at his house in Quee St., near Fresh Water. He calls it a "General Register Office," and announces that it is patterned after the institution in England and New York. These desiring servants, by paying two shillings may have their names entered in a book; and servants desiring places, by paying two shillings each, will be registered.—N. Y. Misc., Apr. 25, 1774.

"Notice is hereby given, That the Bridewell Lottery is now in entire readiness for drawing, and that the same will certainly commence This Day, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, at the Long Room in the Exchange, in presence of the managers, who are now sworn to the due execution of their trust. Those therefore who wish to become adventurers in a scheme whereby they may advance both their private fortune and the interests of society, are desired to make immediate application for tickets."—N. Y. Misc., April 25, 1774.

The common council orders that the committee appointed to cause the Battery Pond to be filled up be a committee to "Complete the filling up of the White Hall Slip [see Nov. 13, 1774], which has become a very great nuisance, and to conduct it by the order of the Mayor, M. C. C., VIII: 27-28. Among accounts preserved in the comptroller's office is Brandon and Farley's bill of July 14, 1774, for 20 day's work at "the Whitehall," with four carts at ten shillings a day for each cart. The amount of the bill is £100, of which £50 was still due. On July 14, this balance was ordered paid by the common council.—M. C. C., VIII: 19.

"Shott Alley" is mentioned in an advertisement as the former place of business of one John Klein, whose successor is one Jacob Pozer, in "Bridge-street, (commonly called Wynkoop-street)."
A petition by about 1,600 inhabitants is presented to Lieut-Gov. Colden, protesting against the fire prevention act, which regulates the kind of materials to be used in building. This petition represents the obstruction to city development which complacently with the act involves, as well as the hardship to workers in the building trades, caused not only by the scarcity of required building materials but by their excessive cost. The act became effective Jan. 1 (see Oct. 14, 1775), and met with protest immediately. On Jan. 27, a petition urging the amendment or suspension of the act was referred by the assembly to a committee of the whole house (see Assem. Jour., 1774, 24). No further action was taken, and in March the assembly was prorogued to May 17. In this petition of May 2, the signers urge Colden to take special measures to convene the assembly, that relief may be sought. No action is recorded.—Cal. Hist. MSS., Eng., 836. A copy of the petition of May 2, with a list of the signers, appears in Man. Com. Coun. (1850), 427-42. See April 1, 1775, for a later amendment.

Continuing the discussion regarding the post-office (see March 24), the Boston committee of correspondence addresses the following letter to New York, Philadelphia, Newport, and Providence:

"On the first application to us by the Committee of Correspondence for New York for the establishment of a Post Office on the footing of a voluntary subscription, we communicated the proposal to several of the principal Merchants in this Town, and had the satisfaction to learn, that in case our Brethren to the Eastward discovered a forwardness to Join us in so important an undertaking, they were ready to give it every encouragement in their power." Boston reports success as regards the "Eastward Brethren," and adds: "We have already obtained a handsome subscription here, and have no reason to doubt that, we shall be ready to receive the Mails when they shall be extended from the Southern Colonies to the Borders of this Province."—From a copy of the letter in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

The "Preparative Meeting" of the Society of Friends reports to the Flushing "Monthly Meeting" (now N. Y.) the purchase of a piece of ground in Queen St. for about £4250. The New York Quaker meeting-house (for the first, see 1696) was built here, and completed in 1776. During the war, the new house was occupied by the British (see Nov. 13, 1776). It was taken down in 1824.—Onderdonk, Annals of Hempstead, 102.

A plan of the ground for the second meeting-house was made on Oct. 12, 1774 (p. s). See also 1755 and 1794.

Lieut-Gov. Colden, intending to go to the country, adjourns the legislative council to the "Brookland" ferry, on Long Island. Its meetings were held there from May 16 to Sept. 1.—Cal. Coun. Min., 504-2.

"Resolved and Ordered that a Lease be made out from this Corporation to Messrs Edward Light, Theophlet Batie and Charles Chase and the Vacant Ground on the Island of New York for the Term of Three years at the Annual Rent of one shilling with a Covenant in the said Lease that the Lessees shall from time to time Surrender up such part of the said Grounds as shall be requested by this Corporation and at the Expiration of the said Term shall deliver up the Possession of the whole, ..."—Trin. Min. (M.S.).

"A Proposal was made last Week by some Merchants of this City, to raise a Sum of Money to be employed in the Whale Fishery, and in a few Days £5000 was subscribed for that Purpose, and this is not doubted but double that Sum will be added this Week when 'tis expected several Vessels will be immediately dispatched on the Whaling Account."—N. Y. Merc., May 9, 1774.

Louis XV of France dies and is succeeded by his grandson, who becomes Louis XVI.

The ship "Samson" arrives "in 26 days from London."—Rivington's Gazetteer, May 19, 1774. The "Samson" weighed the Boston Port Bill (see May 15).

Gen. Gage arrives in Boston to succeed Hutchinson as governor of the province of Massachusetts Bay. He lands "at Castle William under a discharge of the cannon of that Fortress."—N. Y. Merc., May 1774.

A letter from the committee of correspondence in Boston, in conjunction with the committees of the towns of Charlestown, Cambridge, Brookline, Newton, Roxbury, Dorchester, Lexington, and Lynn, is sent to the committee of correspondence of New York. It is also intended for New Jersey, Rhode Island, Connecticut, and Portsmouth. The letter is as follows:

"We have just received the Copy of an Act of the British Parliament whereby the Town of Boston is treated in a Manner the most ignominious cruel and unjust. The Parliament have taken upon them, ... to try, condemn and by an Act to punish them, unheard; which would have been in Violation of natural Justice even if they had an acknowledg Jurisdiction. They have order'd our Port to be entirely shut up, leaving us barely so much of the Means of Subsistence as to keep us from perishing with Cold and Hunger; and it is said, that ... British Ship of War is to block up our Harbour, until we shall make Restitution to the East India Company, for the Loss of their Tea, ... obedience is paid to the Law and Authority of Great Britain, and the Revenue is duly collected. This Act fills the Inhabitants with Indignation. This Attack though made immediately upon us, is doubtless designed for every other Colony, who will not surrender their sacred Rights & Liberties into the Hands of an infamous Ministry. Now therefore is the Time, when all should be united in opposition to this Violation of the Liberties of all. Their grand Object is to divide the Colonies. ... The single Question then is, whether you consider Boston as now suffering in the Common Cause, & sensibly feel and resent the Injury and Afront offered to her? If you do (and we cannot believe otherwise) May we not from your Approbation of our former Conduct, and suspending the suspension of your suspending your Trade with Great Britain at least, which it is acknowledged, will be a great, but necessary Sacrifice, to the Cause of Liberty, and will effectually defeat the Design of this Act of Revenge. If this should be done, you will please to consider it will be, through a voluntary Suffering, greatly short of what we are called to endure under the immediate hand of Tyranny.

"We desire your Answer by the Bearer; and after assuring you, that, not in the least intimidated by this inhuman Treatment we are still determined to maintain to the utmost of our Abilities the Rights of America. ..."—From MS. in the N. Y. Pub. Library, endorsed "Copy of Letter sent to New York."

Capt. Jenkins, bearing the act of parliament for shutting up the port of Boston, arrived there, May 10. The following day summonses were sent to eight towns near Boston for their committees of correspondence to meet at Faneuil Hall on Thursday, May 12.—N. Y. Jour., May 19, 1774. The preceding letter, of May 15, was evidently the outcome of this meeting. For New York's answer, see May 23.

On Friday, May 15, the town of Boston had a legal meeting, at which it was voted: "That it is the opinion of this town, that if the said Colonies should resist the act of Parliament, it would be a virtue to suffer from Great Britain, and exportation to Great Britain, and every Part of the West Indies, till the Act for blocking up this harbour be repealed, the same will prove the salvation of North America, and her liberties. On the other hand, if they continue their exports and imports, there is no means to prevent it, but the impositions of the Contributions on the Island of New York for the Term of Three years at the Annual Rent of one shilling with a Covenant in the said Lease that the Lessees shall from time to time Surrender up such part of the said Grounds as shall be requested by the Corporation, and at the Expiration of the said Term shall deliver up the Possession of the whole, ..."—Trin. Min. (M.S.).

Copies of the Boston Port Act (see March 31), having on the back extracts from letters from London, dated April 7 and 8, are distributed about town. The authenticity of the letters being later questioned, Holt, of the New York Journal, advertised in Rivington's paper that he would refer anyone who claimed to apply to him of their truth—Rivington's Gazetteer, May 19, 1774. The act appears to have been printed twice; once alone, and again with the letters on the back.—Becker, The Hist. of Political Parties in the Province of N. Y., 112, footnote.

Edward Bardin, according to previous announcement, opens"the usual taverne the corner house in the fields, formerly kept by John Jones, a few doors above Mr. Abraham De La Montagne's. ...)—N. Y. Merc., May 9, 1774. Later he announced the "Pantry open'd every evening precisely at 7 o'clock, and cloth laid with the following dishes, viz. Gammon, Roast Beef, Roast Veal, Roast Mutton, Roast Lamb, Roast Guinea Hens, Chickens, Lobsters, Pickled Oysters, Custards, Tarts of different kinds, and Chicken Pies for ready Suppers every night. ..."—Ibid., Aug. 8, 1774.

Isaac Sears and Alexander McDougal write to the committee... of correspondence in Boston: "Last Thursday Captain Coopar May arrived from London in 27 Days. . . . By him we have received the shocking and detestable Act of Parliament, that shuts up your Port the first of June. . . . We want Language to express our own sentiments; we know, the proposal of this Act will be the ruin of America; we clearly see that she is to be attacked and enslaved by distressing and subduing you. . . . we are persuaded, that the sensible People of the Town of Boston anticipate the Object of the late Act, in all it's dire Extent; and therefore that a Compliance with the Provision of it will only be a Temporary Relief; from a particular Evil; which will and must end in a more general Calamity. Impressed with this, a great Number of our Citizens wish our Port to be in the same State with yours. And as the Ministry have put it out of your Power, to continue your Trade with Great Britain, we have stimulated the Merchants to appoint a Meeting to morrow Evening at 7 O’Clock [see May 16] to agree upon a general Non-importation, and Non-exportation Agreement of Goods, to, and from Great Britain, until the american Grievances are redressed; under such Regulations as may be agreed upon by Committees from the Principal Towns on the Continent, to meet in a general Congress to be held here for that Purpose and also to stop the Exportation of all Hoops, Staves, Heading and Lumber to the English Islands: and to suffer no more of the first Articles to be exported to the foreign Islands than will be sufficient to bring home the Sugar, Rum and Molasses for the Return of American Cargoes. . . . We can with great Truth assure you, that my City and selfish People in this City, who have interested themselves but very little in the Controversy with Great Britain, express the greatest Indignation and Resentment at the Conduct of the Ministry to your Town, and consider the Treatment to it, as if done immediately to this City. And this is the General Sense of our Inhabitants, which we judged necessary should be communicated to you; even in this hasty incoherent Manner. We have no Time to send this to the other Members of the Committee, for Reasons, which the Express, Mr. Cornelius Bradford, will inform you. He is a true Friend to the Liberties of this Country and will wait your Directions for his Return. . . .—From copy of the letter preserved in the N. Y. Pub. Library. Parts of the letter, with the erroneous date, May 14, appeared in the Boston Gaz. of May 23. The suggestion regarding a general congress is omitted in the printed report, as is the statement: “we have stimulated the Merchants” to appoint a meeting.

Gen. Haldimand writes from New York to the Earl of Dartmouth: “The accounts received before the arrival of the packet . . . had made known the plan of operation intended to bring Boston to a sense of order and decency, so that on the arrival of Lieutenant Governor, will inform you. He is a true Friend to the Liberties of this Country and will wait your Directions for his Return. . . .—From copy of the letter preserved in the N. Y. Pub. Library. Parts of the letter, with the erroneous date, May 14, appeared in the Boston Gaz. of May 23. The suggestion regarding a general congress is omitted in the printed report, as is the statement: “we have stimulated the Merchants” to appoint a meeting.

“At a meeting at the Exchange, 16th May, 1774, Isaac Low chosen Chairman—

1st. Question put. Whether it is necessary, for the present, to appoint a committee to correspond with the neighboring Colonies on the present important crisis?

"Carried in the affirmative by a great majority.

2d. Whether a committee be nominated this evening for the approbation of the public?

"Carried in the affirmative by a great majority.

3d. Whether of fifty be appointed, or twenty-five?

"Carried for fifty by a great majority.

The names of the fifty men nominated follow, and this sentence is appended: “The name of Francis Lewis was afterward added, making the number fifty-one.” This copy of the handbill was found in Thomas Jefferson’s correspondence, in the Flora’s and Tyrann’s Hist. City of N. Y., I: 769-70. The place of meeting was originally designated as the house of Samuel Francis, the Queen’s Head Tavern (see May 17), but the general opinion seems to be that an adjournment to May to the exchange was made necessary by the large attendance.—16 Becker, Hist. of Political Parties, in the Province of N. Y., 115, footnote. “Two parties appeared at this meeting with printed lists of candidates for a provincial Aristocracy, one seventy-five, was offered by Isaac Sears, the representative of the Sons of Liberty; [for this see Becker, op. cit., 141, footnote] the other, of fifty names, had been arranged by the merchants.”—Wilson, Mem. Hist. N. Y., II: 474. In his diary, under May 18, Smith says: “Two Motives gave Rise to so large a Committee (1) Many People of Property dread the Violences of the lower Sort & a small Number (2) the De Lanceys urged their Friends to attend & pushed them in, to mix with the Liberty Boys.”—Wm. Smith’s Diary (M.S.), IV. As announced in the preceding broadside, the committee’s nomination was announced.

The following account is given by Lieut.-Gov. Colles in a letter to the Earl of Dartmouth dated June 1, 1774: "The Men who at that time call’d themselves the Committee—who dictated, and acted in the name of the People, were many of them, of the lower Rank and all, the warmest realots of those call’d the Sons of Liberty. The more considerable Merchants & Citizens seldom of never appeared among them; but I believe were not displeased with the Clamour and Opposition that was shewn against internal Taxation by Parliament. The Principal Inhabitants being now afraid that these hot headed men might run the City into dangerous measuring, appeared in a considerable body, at the first Meeting of the People after the Boston Port Act was publish’d here. They dissolved the former Committee, and appointed a new one of 51 Persons, to which care was taken to have a number of the most prudent and considerate People of the Place, some of them have not before join’d in the Public proceedings of the Opposition, and were induced to appear in what they are sensible is an illegal character, from a Consideration that if they did not the Business would be left in the same rash Hands as before.”—N. Y. Col. Doc., VIII: 453. See May 19.

The provincial Congress resolves the act of parliament for closing the port of Boston.—Col. Coun. Min., 501.

At a town meeting held at Providence, R. I., the following resolution is passed: “That the Deputies of this town be requested to use their influence at the approaching session of the General Assembly of this Colony, for promoting a Congress as soon as may be, of the Representatives of the General Assemblies of the several Colonies and Provinces in North America, for establishing the firmest Union, and adopting such measures as to them shall appear the most effectual to answer that important purpose, and to agree upon proper methods for executing the same.”—4 Am. Arch., I: 352. Winsor calls the inhabitants of this place will not be at a loss what they are to expect if they will prove refractory. It is the opinion of many people here, that they will acknowledge their fault, pay for it, and endeavour to reinstate themselves into his Majesty’s favour by a proper submission.

The following notice is published in handbills:—To the Public: An Advertisement having appeared at the Coffee-House, in consequence of the late extraordinary and very alarming advices received from England, inviting the Merchants to meet at the house of Mr. Samuel Francis, on Monday evening May 16, in order to consult on measures proper to be pursued on the present critical and important occasion.

“A very respectable and large number of the Merchants and other inhabitants did accordingly appear at the time and place appointed, and then and there nominated for the approbation of the public, a Committee of fifty persons, of which fifteen to be a sufficient number to do business.

“That therefore, no formality may be wanting to constitute a Committee, duly Chosen, the inhabitants of this city and County, are requested to attend at the Coffee-House, on Thursday the 19th instant, at 1 o’clock, to approve of the Committee nominated as aforesaid, or to appoint such other persons, as in their discretion and wisdom may seem meet.

A numerous meeting of mechanics of the city is held in the evening at the house of Mr. Bardin.—N. Y. Jour., May 19, 1774; N. Y. Hist. Soc., ii, 1774; 1775, p. 98-99. See, however, Addenda, May 23, 1774, where the question of priority in suggesting the calling of a continental congress is discussed.

The last public commemence of King's College is held in Trinitiy Church.—Hist. of Columbia Univ. (1904), 50-51. The celebrity celebrated was honored by General Hiudian, the principal Officers of the Army, the Clergy, and a very brilliant Assembly. . . . The discourses delivered upon this occasion did great honour to the Orators, who justly merited and received universal approbation.—N. Y. Jour., May 19, 1774. After the war, the college was reorganized under legislative acts which named it Columbia College.—See May 1, 1784; April 13, 1785.

18. Smith writes in his diary: "A general Consternation and Disgust works among the People—The Letters & printed papers call us Rebels, & incite our Dissatisfaction & excite a Contempt of Government—I fear we shall lose all that Attaching we once had in so great a Degree for the Parent Country . . . A Company of Artillery—Cannon & Ammunition went this Day to Boston from this Place."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

John Thurman writes from New York to John Stark of London: "We are very uneasy & don't know but Parliament mean to drive us to measures which may prove destructive to Great Britain & her colonies, every good friend to both will wish for a lasting union & I am sure it is the desire of every good American to wish Great Britain may forever Remain our Head & Ruler the never to impress the American Taxation"—From the Letter Books of John Thurman, Jr., in Hist. Mag., 2nd ser., IV: 288. On the same day, he sends a letter to Messrs. Loss, Griffin, & Clay, in which he says: "Surely Great Britain can never mean to drive us into measures that may Lay the foundation to an eternal separation. Is it possible you can mean to RUin the Town of Boston by one single act of oppression & what is done to one may be done to all, & should this act be carried into execution then fairwell American Freedom & Happiness & I may say Englands glory."

United in Love & friendship to Great Britain we are a Happy people, but if a Civil War is carried on by an inordinate Expenditure, & distress Hurry the People into acts of violence, God only knows what will be the end. This is the most alarming affair I ever knew, we have had a meeting of the Inhabitants of this City, we have chosen a very respectable company of fifty of the Principal Citizens [see May 16] & every measure will be taken to keep Peace and good order. I should wish to see an end put to our Troubles & Peace and Harmony Restored. America never will submit to Internal Taxation—never can be Happy but under Great Britain. I am in hopes General Gage will set all matters Right. It is to be a good omen in this Country, he arrived at Boston Last Friday [see May 15] Expresses are sent to the different Provinces & you may depend they will all unite in one Cause & endeavour by all Possible means to maintain Peace & Good order."—Ibid., 2nd ser., IV: 288.

19. The preceding note and the following are taken in part on our concourse of the inhabitants "meets at the coffee house "to confirm or alter the nomination of a Committee to correspond with our sister colonies." Mr. Low addresses the meeting, urging the exercise of "calm reason" in its acts. "Zeal in a good cause is most laudable, but when it transports beyond the bounds of reason it often leaves room for bitter reflection. "We ought, therefore, gentlemen, to banish from our hearts all little party distinctions, feuds and animosities, for to our unanimity and virtue we must at last recur for safety; and that man will approve himself the best friend to his country whose highest eminent is to incultate those principles and habits by which a people can enjoy the blessings of a civilized state."

The meeting then confirms the nomination of the 50 men made at the "Exchange" on May 16, and the name of Mr. Francis Lewis is added to the list by unanimous consent.—Am. Arch., I: 294-97.

In a warning of the meeting, given in Bowring's Gazetteer, of May 19, the editor urges that "All partial attachments and private animosities . . . be laid aside . . . And the choice be confirmed without any sinister opposition from narrow and ungenerous sentiments."

The following account is from a New Yorker's letter to a correspondent in London: "The self-constituted Committee of the Sons of Liberty for the city of New York . . . bad taken upon them to write letters to Boston to their brethren there [see May 15]. assuming them, 'that the city of New-York would heartily join them against May the cruel and arbitrary proceedings of the British Parliament' &c. which as soon as the gentlemen of property in this city knew, they were very justly alarmed, and a meeting of the inhabitants was desired at the Coffee House, which, in spite of all, was called by the old Commissioners of his Excellency General Haldimand, the principal Officers of the Army, the Clergy, and a very brilliant Assembly . . . The discourses delivered upon this occasion did great honour to the Orators, who justly merited and received universal approbation."—N. Y. Jour., May 19, 1774.

June 13, 1774. The New York letter to Boston is reproduced as May Pl. 42, Vol. IV. See Addenda, where the significance of this letter is discussed.

Newspaper advertisement: "Servants Just arrived from Scotland. To be sold on board the ship Commerce... lying at the Ferry-Stairs; among which are a number of Weavers, Tailors, Blacksmiths, Sailors, Shoemakers, Butchers, Sawyers, Wheelwrights, Hatters and Spinners. From fourteen to thirty-five years of age."—N. Y. Merc., May 5, 1774. On August 28, a New Yorker, in writing to someone in Edinburgh, referred to this notice: "It is impossible to express the severe usage and hardship the poor people are exposed to, who migrate from your country, in hopes of finding their condition here. I think it may be of use to undeceive such misguided persons... If you will publish this advertisement in your paper, for the information of such who doubt the truth of so incredible a fact."—Upcott Coll., in N. Y. Hist. Soc., IV: 227.

24 Payment of $70,017 is ordered by the common council to Samuel "for Sundry Expenses attending the drawing of the Bridewell Lottery" (see April 25).—M. C. L., VIII: 32. The voucher, with items detailed in beautiful penmanship, is preserved in comptroller's office, box No. 1. One item was for a dinner on April 26, which, with "Wine 20/ punch & tody 11/6 porter 6/"; cost £1:86. A second dinner, on April 28, with a much larger expense for drinks, cost £7:12:6.

18 The second, and printer of the Maryland Journal, arrives in New York from Boston, "with important Dispatches for all the southern Colonies." He "set out on Monday Morning" (May 30); the purpose of his mission being described thus in a news report: "The Plan for establishing a constitutional American Post Office having met with the greatest Success in all the great commercial Towns in the northern Colonies, it is not doubted, from the Encouragement already given at the Southward, but the important Design will, in a few Weeks, be carried into complete Execution."—N. Y. Jour., June 2, 1774. See May 11, 1775. The plan for such a post-office was fully described, under date of July 2, in Am. Archives, 4th ser., I: 59. It provided, among other things, for the appointment of a postmaster-general "by the written votes of all the Provincial Committees, enclosed and sent to the Chairman of the New-York Committee, who, on receiving all the votes, and giving one month's public notice in all the New-York papers, of the time and place appointed for that purpose, shall open them in Committee, in presence of all such subscribers as shall choose to attend, and declare the choice, which shall be immediately communicated to all the other Provincial Committees by a certificate under the hand of the said Chairman."—7.

20 In Boston reply to the letter of May 23 [p. 64] from the New York committee of correspondence, the committee of Boston says: "A speedy, united and vigorous effort is certainly all that can possibly be depended upon to yield us any effectual Relief. This effort is on all hands acknowledged to be the suspension of Trade, so wisely defined by you. "We view a general Congress as a measure indispensable to a reasonable settlement of the politics of this Great Commonwealth, and shall engage our Representatives to forward it in the General Assembly: but supposing this important measure conducted with all the expedition possible, it must be many months before it can be brought about; whereas, a general restraint upon our exports to and imports from Great Britain must have a speedy and irresistible operation, upon parties who have hitherto paid little regard to petitions of Right, enforced by every argument that Justice, equity and the faith of solemn charters can afford."—Boston Public Library, in the N. Y. Pub. Library. See June 7.

The committee of correspondence meets at the exchange at six o'clock in the evening and adopts a set of rules. These provide, among other things, that the secretary shall not be a member of the committee; that the Committee shall meet upon their adjournment to the public; and a special meeting, printed notice shall be left at the residence of each member for the committee, whenever he shall be required to attend or to act. The members shall be allowed to take copies of the committee's letters or proceedings, and that outsiders shall have access to the proceedings only in the presence of some member; also that absences shall be fined. Joseph Allcock is appointed secretary and Thomas Pett mediator and a register to make a register of the transactions. Circular Letter to the Supervisors in the different counties, acquainting them of the appointment of this Committee, and submitting to the consideration of the inhabitants of the counties whether it could not be expeff for them, to appoint persons to correspond with this Committee, upon matters relative to the purposes for which they are appointed."—Am. Arch., I: 298-99.

Newspaper advertisement: "Notwithstanding the boasted resolutions of many of the principal people of this Colony to stand forth in defence of their rights and liberties, we are well assured that most of them are sorry for embarking in the cause so far, and that they only want an opportunity to withdraw the mask, to join with the friends of Government. If the Minister was wicked enough to load us with the heaviest imposition, I doubt not but he would be able to carry his designs into execution, by means of a few men-of-war; for the spirit of the inhabitants here died away as soon as it was known that the General Gage, with a fleet of ships, arrived at Boston, to shut up the ports and remove the courts of justice. I heartily wish that an end were put to all disputes between us and our mother country, that trade and commerce might flourish again, for whilst these contentions last, the merchants of your city must feel the effects of it as well as we."—Am. Arch., I: 309 (footnote). Hunter and Walsh "beg leave to inform the public, that they have erected (and [are] now carrying on) A Soap and Candle Manufactory, in Broad-Street, a few doors above the post-office, where they intend carrying on those branches very extensively."—N. T. Merc., May 30, 1774.

The committee of correspondence meets at the exchange to consider the circular letter prepared by the committee appointed to draft such letter (see May 30). It is approved and orders are given that 500 copies shall be printed and forwarded to the treasurer of each county, to be transmitted by him to the supervisors in their respective districts. This was done by June 1, 1774 (Am. Arch., I: 300).

The committee also took action regarding a letter from Philadelphia, addressed to their chairman, which stated: "That at a General Meeting of all Denominations of Christians in that City, it was agreed to keep the first Day of June as a public Fast; being the Day when the Boston Port Bill commenced." The committee could not fail to see the propriety of the resolution, and ordered that copies of the letter be delivered to the clergy of the different denominations in the city that they might conduct themselves as they saw fit.—N. T. Gaz., June 6, 1774; N. Y. Jour., June 2, 1774. The Journal offers the statement that there was by no means a general meeting of all denominations of Christians on the above occasions. Nearly all of the meetings of the committee are held in the evening, beginning usually as early as six o'clock.

The Boston Port Bill passed in the English parliament in June becomes effective. It provides for the transportation of goods from Boston to Salem, but gives power to the king to restore it, upon the return of order and the payment of compensation to the owners for the destroyed tea. This order aroused much sympathy for Boston among the other colonies, who manifested it by relief contributions when distress followed the loss of business. "The Boston Port Bill, designed as a measure for the destruction of the tea brought ruin to the commerce of Boston, and distress to all whose subsistence depended upon it; but its political effect was to draw the colonies together, and that so effectually promoted by the vigorous action of the committee of correspondence that the idea of a continental congress soon became general."—Winsor, Nat. & Crit. Hist. of Am., VI: 68. Gen. Gage landed in Boston, May 17, to be ready to put the bill in force June 1.—Ibld., VI: 95.

"Many of the Citizens of this Place conceiving that the general Sentiments of the inhabitants are very erroneously expressed in a Letter published in the Boston Gazette [see May 15]... think it necessary to inform the Public, That the said Letter is by no means to be considered as a Letter from the Committee of Correspondence, as the first Day of their acting was on Monday the 21st May."—N. Y. Jour., June 25; N. T. Gaz., June 6, 1774. See also June 16.

"Last Week was paid into the Hands of the Church Wardens of Trinity Church, by the Executors of the last Will and Testament of Mrs. Ann Chambers, a Legacy of £500, the Interest thereof, by her Will, is annually to be distributed as a Premium for encouragement to youth to enter the Charity School under the Care of the Rector and Vestry of Trinity Church: Which laudable Example it is to be hoped will be followed by others."—N. Y. Merc., June 6, 1774.
THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

Erasmus Williams announces that he has purchased "the large commodious House and Gardens, coach house, stables, &c., in the out-ward of this city, heretofore known by the name of Vaux-Hall, but changed, with great propriety, to that of Mount Pleasant." Beside the beauty of the view and the healthfulness of the situation, the feature of the advantage of being near the College and the Hospital now erecting, and so contiguous to the city that a moderate walker may, in 15 or 20 minutes, be in any part thereof." Williams offers board and lodging to "single gentlemen, or gentle- men with their families", especially travellers, and states that "some apartments are already fitted."—N. Y. Misc., June 6, 1774. This was the old pleasure garden on the North River, in earlier years known as the Old Bowling Green, for a history of which see March 29, 1778.

John Campbell, a potter, at the "upper end of the Broadway, opposite the Negroes Burying Ground," offers earthenware for sale, which he warrants "to be better than any imported from England or Holland."—N. Y. Misc., June 6, 1774. For the location of this burying-ground, see "Pottersfield" in Landscape Map Ref. Key, III: 927.

In conformity with orders adopted at a meeting of the committee of correspondence, June 6, a letter under date of June 7 is sent to the committee of correspondence in Boston. This letter is in response to Boston's communication of May 30 (q.v.). Extracts from the letter follow: You say, 'that a speedy, united and vigorous resistance be made; and that all that can be done to yield us any effectual Relief, and that this Effort is on all hands acknowl-edged to be the Suspension of Trade so wisely defined by us.' To the first we entirely concur with you in Sentiments; but in the last we apprehend you have made a mistake [see June 15]—for on revising our Letter to you, so far from finding a word mentioned of a 'Suspension of Trade' the idea is not even conceived. That, and every other Resolution we have thought it most prudent to leave for the Discussion of the proposed general Congress.' The letter continues by expressing readiness to join in such congress, and suggests that sufficient time be allowed the delegates from colonies to the southward, letters to which "we will forward with great Pleasure."

A request is made for the names of the men constituting the Boston committee, and "We beg also for the future that your Letters be sealed and directed to our Chairman."—From the original letter preserved in the N. Y. Pub. Library. See also 4 Am. Arch., I: 505-6.

John Hutt, "Engraver in general, from London, At Mr. Hewitt's directly opposite the Merchants Coffee-House, in Dock-Street, New-York," advertises that he engraves coats-of-arms, crests, seals and stained Banders, glass, card cases, door plates, dog collars, etc.—Rington's Gazetteer, June 9, 1774. On Sept. 5, he gave notice that he had recently erected a press for copper-plate printing, "by which Means he will be enabled to execute every Piece of Engraving he is favour'd with in a nearer, more elegant and reasonable Manor than heretofore could be done."—N. Y. Misc., Sept. 5, 1774. See also Staufier, "Am. Engravers on Copper and Steel," I: 137-8.

At a meeting of the committee of correspondence, it is ordered, "That a Committee be appointed to answer the Letter received from the Committee at Hartford, and enclose them a copy of a Letter wrote the 23d ultimo, by this Committee, to Boston: and also to answer a Letter received from Mr. Bernard Lentor, of Branford, and that they write a letter to the Committee of Correspondence of South Carolina, enclosing a copy of this Committee's first letter to Boston, and to acquaint them that this Committee have, in a subsequent letter to the Committee at Boston, desired them to appoint a time and place for a Congress, an answer to which they expect daily."—4 Am. Arch., I: 305.

The common council agrees upon certain fines to be imposed upon the members for tardiness at or absence from the meetings. —M. C. C., VIII: 35. Self-imposed penalties "near an early origin"—see June 9, 1697.

On this day, Gov. Tryon sends to the Earl of Dartmouth a report on the province of New York. In speaking of the port of New York, he adds: "The Map in the Appendix marked number 2, presents a full View of the Harbor, the Situation of Sandy Hook, and shews the Depth of Water from thence up to the Port." Tryon then goes on to give an account of the various kinds of courts and the extent of their jurisdiction; the trade of the province, its exports and imports; the strength of the neighbouring Indians and their attitude towards the English; and the salaries and mode of appointment of the civil officials. "Military Establishments," he continues, "have only taken place in Time of War. The Pro-ince during the late War, was raised, clothed and paid a large Body of Forces, which was disbanded at the Peace, and there is at present no Provincial Military Establishment unless the Militia may be regarded as such; The Officers of this Corps are . . . appointed by the Governor, and having no pay their offices must be rather expensive than lucrative." No census of the population has been taken since 1771 (q.v.), but, by using the figures then calculated and adding his estimate of the increase, the governor reports that there are about 182,557 inhabitants in the province. To a question concerning fortifications, Tryon answers: "The City of New York the Metropolis is protected by a Fort and a Range of Batteries at the Entrance of the East River or Harbour, in good order and capa- ble of mounting about one Hundred pieces of Ordnance."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 234-37.

In a report to the Earl of Dartmouth on the "present state of the Government of New York," Gov. Tryon writes: "A Third Branch of the Revenue is the Excise on Spirituous Liquor. . . . This Fund is appropriated as follows—The Sum of $6000 . . . is to be paid annually for Twenty years [see March 24, 1772] to the Governors of the Hospital now erecting in the City of New York [see Sept. 3, 1773] for the support of that Institution . . . ."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 234-37.

The committee of correspondence having answered the dis-patches from Boston (see June 7), "This Day they will assemble again, after which it is hoped, their Proceedings will be published, for the Information of their Constituents; The Times are critical, and big with interesting Events which has occasioned the Commit-tee of Correspondence at Philadelphia to promulgate their Letter to Boston, and such other Proceedings as were judged necessary for the Satisfaction of the Public."—N. Y. Misc., June 13, 1774. Smith notes that "it appears manifest that Colden fears nothing and does not know what he does, and that Watts De Lancey & Cruger are determined to go with him . . . These Men are Knaves or Fools—or both . . . the Liberty Boys here in the Committee of 51 drive those who came in to repress their Zeal before them, they having lately written Letters to all the supervisors intended to prepare the Way for a Non Importation and non exportation agree; and the Delanceys were at the first Committee with Design to abate the Liberty Interests, yet now swimming with the Current & taking the advantage of the Weakness of Colden, they venture to speak loud against the Measures of Adm even at Dinner in his Presence."—Wm. John Wedderburn, a potter, corrects "the length of all the Streets in the City of New York thro' which Mr. Colls proposed to lead the Water from his Works" (see April 22) as about 14 miles. The original report, undated, is among the miscellaneous papers in the city clerk's record-room and is reproduced at Pl. 194, col. IV. The plastered and whitewashed Wedderburn's Pottery was in the Soho, on the West side of the street in the Bowery, on the corner of Rivington & CoUes, published in the comptroller's office in Box 17, 1750-1815. The computation was made on the order of Recorder Watts, and Bancker's charge for it was one pound. His bill for this and other correspondence work from Aug. 28, 1775, to May 15, 1775, was ordered paid May 24, 1776 (q.v.).—M. C. C., VIII: 139. See further, July 21.

This being the day on which the harbour of Boston was "finally 15 and most unjustly deprived of its principal and advantageous" by act of parliament, a gallow's, "with the Figures of 3 Men suspended by the Neck," said to be intended to represent Lord North, Governor Hutchinson, and Solicitor Wedderburn, with another Figure representing the Devil, were carried thro' the principal Streets of the City, attended by several Thousand People, and at last burnt before the Coffee House Door." In Hutchinson's right hand were "the Boston and Plymouth Address- es, and Signers Names—In Lord North's left Hand, the Popu-lating Bill, and the Bill for the better administering of Justice in the Province of Massachusetts's Bay—and in Mr. Wedderburne's, the Letter of Hutchinson and Oliver to Mr. Whately—Near his infernal Majesty, on the Gallows, were these Words—Devil, do thy Office—With tartar and Sulphur kind."—N. Y. Jour., June 15 and 23, 1774; 6d. Postscript to Penn. Jour., July 6, 1774.

A contributor, signing himself "N. T.," sends this letter to the printer of the Journal: "Every one acquainted with this city must applaud the Corporation for the many new and useful improvements and regulations they have made, and are continually making. The city is become one of the cleanest, wholesome and beautiful. Among these improvements that of affixing the names of the streets at every corner, gave the people in general as well as myself, great satisfaction... But the good effect of their design is in a great measure defeated, or at least delayed, by the neglect and breach of agreement of the painters who undertook to paint the letter boards. Some few of them have indeed fulfilled their agreements, or parts of them; for I find, that in the street where Alderman Gautier lives, and in several of the streets adjacent, towards White-Hall and the east river, directions are put up, but the rest of the city, as far as I have seen, is hitherto wholly neglected. The reason of this delay I cannot account for, unless it be that the undertakers, think they can take greater liberty with the Corporation and the public, than with private persons, in not complying with their agreements. If this be the case, they may perhaps soon find their mistake, and that it is safer to offend one person than many."

On Sept. 29, the common council ordered the payment of $6,050 for making and painting 67 street signs.—From the original voucher in comptroller's office.

In a Boston letter to the New York committee of correspon- dance, the following, which is mentioned in the New York letter of June 7 (p. 4), is explained as follows: "The Clinton papers which you apprehend we made a mistake we must explain by observing that the Idea of suspension of Trade we took from a Letter written by you from your former Committee of Correspondence" (see May 15). The letter continues: "We note you are of opinion that it is most prudent to leave every resolution for the discussion of the general Congress and are pleased with your readiness to meet by your deputies either of the general Assembly (or other Deputies) in a general Congress at any time or place we shall think fit—we have to inform you that General Assembly are now setting at Salem. Two miles from this town they have appointed a committee to report on that Subject. From the wis- dom spirit & resolution of our Assembly we cannot have the least doubt they will do everything that will shew the world that they regard a union of the Colonies as of the utmost importance to the salvation of our Rights, we are in hopes to forward you their resolutions by next opp."

P S The Yeomanry of this Province have... a solemn Agreement to purchase & consume no Goods imported from Great Britain after the first of Oct? next which People eagerly subscribe a Copy of which was sent you y' last Week." A list of the names of the committee in correspondence for the town of Boston is appended.—From a MS. copy of the letter in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

A letter from Boston to Daniel Duncombe says: "We should sooner have answered your esteemed favor had we not waited to hear the fate of our memorial, the report in this and the neighbouring Colonies. This we have the pleasure to advise you is now in great forwardness throughout the New England Govern- ments even much beyond the most sanguine of our expectations. We hear that a similar agreement is coming into the northern part of your Province. Much has been done to defeat its operation here, but it has gained greatly by opposition. This effectual Plan has originated and been thus far carried thro' by the two venerable orders of men stiled mechanics and husbandmen, the strength of every community. Go on brethren, and convince the world that neither mercantile avarice nor court policy can defeat the united efforts of the good and faithful among you. We are satisfied you have your share of difficulties in the present struggle but we greatly depend upon your good sense and perseverance to ensure a favora- ble issue to our present unhappy disputes with a corrupt ministry in Great Britain."

"We sent correspondence with us upon every matter of importance, which may turn up with you will greatly bene- fit the common cause..."

"P. S. It is industriously propagated here that New York will not appoint members for the ensuing Congress. We can by no means understand the reason of this regime but esteem it more our duty to give you the earliest notice of it."—From a MS. copy of the letter in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

Isaac Sears and Alexander McDougall write thus to Samuel Adams: "Inclosed is a letter from our mutual friend Charles June Thompson of Philad. The sentiments it contains are so Salutary that we cannot but Cordially approve of them. You will by the insertion in it the propriety of not Publishing it. The sentiments may indeed be improved for the public advantage. As to the Time of the Meeting of the Congress we are happy to find it agrees with what we wrote you via of Rhode-Island. If you have appointed any other place than that mentioned in this Letter it may easily be altered. Considering the extent of Country to be consulted on your Case of the Constitution, the most Sanguine friends to the Liberties of America could not hope for greater Unanimity nor Sympathy for you than has been expressed by every Colony who has given their Sentiments on your distressed Condition. Lord North will find to his great Mertification that the Americans are not what he said they were 'a Rope of Sand.' Be firm & prudent & a little time will effect your Salvation & a glorious deliverance to America. The burden of your People deprived of Labour by the Port-Act will be taken off by the Contributions of the other Colonies which we are confident will be abundant."—From the original letter in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

Two broadsides are issued, printed on the same sheet of paper. One, addressed "To the Public" and signed "A Freeman," reads: "The late Destestation shewn by the Friends of Liberty in this City, to the vernal and arbitrary Conduct of Lord North, Governor Hutchinson and Solicitor Waldeburn... by hanging them in Effigy [see June 3], has given this City a warning, looking up to Government for Places of Profit and Honour. In order to apologize to the Minister for being unable to prevent the Execution of those Effigies and to court his Favour, these Mal- Contents are beating up for Volunteers to sign a Paper, under the specious Pretence of maintaining the Peace of the City, and dis- approving the Oath put on this detestable Triumvirate..."

"As it is well known the Peace of the City has not been broken by effigying the Enemies of our Country, and some Persons who wish well to its Liberties, may inadvertently he deluded to sign such Papers: This is far from what all the friends of Freedom, not to be made the Tools of those who are endeavouring to destroy, and ready to share the Plunder of our Country. Consider, that by signing the Association Paper, you countenance, if not approve the tyrannical Conduct towards America, of Lord North and his Ser- vants—You endanger a Division; and encourage a Swarm of Informers to ruin our Trade with Impunity."

The other broadside, addressed "To the People of New-York" and signed "A Citizen," says: "Though the Association latey set on Foot, was on Pretence of keeping the Peace of the City, yet it is evident that it has a direct Tendency to disturb that Peace and that the true Design of it was to discourage the sense and Respectful Opposition to the Ministerial Measures now vigorously pursued, with an openly avowed Intention of reducing America to Slavery, and dragging it, bound in Chains and humbled in the Dust, to the Feet of the British Parliament, or rather the haughty avaricious Ministers..."

"The Contrivers of this Association well know, that the Effigies of those Traitors were not carried about with any Design to dis- turb the Peace of the City, or give Offence to one Friend of his Country—The little Disturbance that happened, was wholly occasioned by those who attempted to interrupt the Procession, and thereby raise a Disturbance; but they failed in the Attempt, and the Disturbance was confined to themselves. But this Association... has a direct Tendency to irritate the People, and raise those very Tumults and Disturbances which it is pretended to prevent;—Therefore, it is hoped that none who subscribe but such as will be willing to be considered as openly avowing the Conduct of the British Ministry, and supporting their Claims and Pretensions against America."—From an original in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

The meeting in the Fields on July 6 (q. v.), preceded over by McDougall, seems to have forestalled the regularly called meeting at the city hall for July 7 (see July 4). The newspapers fail to report such a meeting, but the minutes of the committee of 51 record that many number of citizens attended and it was unanimously agreed that this committee appoint a Committee of their body to attend with the Committee from the Mechanics at Mr. Francis's... in order to appoint two or more persons in each Ward... to take with them a list of the five persons nominated by this Committee [see July 4], and also a list of the five persons nominated by the Committee of Mechanics [see July 5] as Delegates to the proposed Congress; and exhibit to the freemen, freemen and such of the inhabitants who pay taxes, both lists, leaving it to their election to sign either. In the evening, the committee of 51 complied with this decision of the inhabitants, and then, having heard of the handbills of July 5 (q.v.), and of the meeting on July 6 (q.v.), resolved, on the motion of John Thurman, "that this Committee disavow all such proceedings evidently calculated to throw an odium on this Committee, and to create groundless jealousies and suspicions of their conduct as well as disunion among our fellow-citizens." A committee is thereupon appointed "to draw and report... a set of Resolutions to be proposed to the city, expressing their sense of the Boston Port Act, and our concurrence with such of the neighbouring Colonies as have declared what may be proper to be done for the relief of the town of Boston, and the redress of America grievances." — Am. Arch., I: 308.

At a meeting of the "Committee of Mechanics," the nomination of the committee of 51 (see July 4) are taken into consideration. Isaac Lispenard and Alexander McDougall are chosen in the places of Duane and Aalop. As the "Committee of Merchants did refuse the Mechanics a representation in their Body, or to consult with their Committee, or offer the Names of the Persons nominated to them for their Concurrence," the mechanics of the city and county are urged to attend the general meeting on July 7, and to vote for Isaac Low, Philip Livingston, John Jay, Leonard Lispenard, and Alexander McDougall. — From a broadside, dated July 6, 1774, in the N. Y. Hist. Soc.

If we believe the mechanics, under the leadership of Alexander McDougall, issue the following notice: "The enemies of the liberties of America are endeavouring in misrepresenting the attachment of the inhabitants of this city, to the common cause of this country, to the neighbouring colonies, a number of citizens think it highly necessary to convene the good people of this metropolis in the fields on... the 6th instant... where every friend to the true interest of this distressed country, is earnestly requested to attend; when matters of the utmost importance to their reputation and security, as freemen, will be communicated." — N. Y. Jour., July 14, 1774; N. Y. Merc., July 11, 1774.

Lispenard to John Jay, July 10, 1774. — To the Hon. John Jay, Esq.: "The present political zeal and plurisy is almost entirely confined to the City of New-York, the people in the counties are no ways disposed to become active, or to bear any part in what is proposed by the citizens. I am told all the counties but one have declined an invitation to attend them from New-York, to appear in Committees of Correspondence. This Province is everywhere, my Lord, except in the City of New-York, perfectly quiet and in good order, and in New-York a much greater freedom of speech prevails now than has done heretofore. An opposition has been declared to the vile practice of exhibiting effigies, which I hope will prevent it for the future." — Am. Arch., I: 517.

In response to the handbills of July 5 (q. v.), a meeting of the inhabitants is held in the Fields. Alexander McDougall acts as chairman. Those present unanimously agree to resolutions declaring: (1) The Boston Port Bill is oppressive and unconstitutional; (2) An attack on one colony is an attack on all; (3) The shutting up of any port in America is "subversive of the commercial rights of the inhabitants of this Continent;" (4) Non-intercourse with Great Britain until the Port Bill is repealed will be "the salvation of North America and her liberties;" (5) The New York resolution of the 25th of January is constitutional, and accede to a non-importation agreement; (6) A subscription for the relief of the poor of Boston should be started at once. It is also ordered that these resolutions be printed in the newspapers of the city, and sent to the different counties in this colony and to the committees of correspondence of neighbouring colonies. — Am. Arch., I: 517.

report. The "resolve" is ordered to be printed and distributed in July 1774 having been for the consideration of the inhabitants, who are requested to meet at the Coffee House, on July 19, to decide upon them. At the same time the people are to vote upon the nominees for delegates.—4 Am. Arch., I: 315; N. T. Merc., July 18, 1774.

for this purpose; and the committee of correspondence caused considerable uneasiness in Boston is evidenced by the following letter from them, endorsed as "passed unanimously."

The continued Silence of the respectable Committee of New York from June 7 [p. 9] at this important time proves, to me, an unkindness—this is not unlike those which are experienced by a Man in Distress who (perhaps too jealously) thinks himself deserted by his Friend—these have been heightened by frequent whispering of some Paragraphs of Letters received from particular Gentlemen of your Committee. One of these Letters, which has not been published in our Papers containing Sentiments which have not appeared in y' former Letters to us, Copies of some of our Letters have been sent to be sent this Way &c. but not to enumberate these Matters Gentlemen he assured this Committee would at all times gratefully have received any Advice from your Committee or from any private gentleman of it.

But to turn our Views to a larger Sphere, We congratulate you Gentlemen on that General Union that spreads its benefits Influence thro' North America, May Heaven bless the intended Congress, may their Wise & righteous Determination persuade the King that North Americans are yet his loyal worthy & free Subjects, and in happy times return to us all the Glory of American Independence.

An "Inhabitant" writes to the printer of the Mercury: "The Difficulty in obtaining small Change in this City at present, is most sensibly felt by all Persons in Trade; and what every Inhabitant would wish to see removed. To effect which, a number of small Bills issued by the Corporation, might answer all the salutary Purposes required. Our Friends in Pennsylvania have adopted this Measure with Success, and many good Consequences have resulted from it.—"N. T. Merc., July 18, 1774.

A meeting of citizens is held at the Coffee House, for the purpose of auditing the resolutions which had been prepared by the Committee of Correspondence [see July 13]; and also respecting the nomination of Delegates to the Grand Congress."—Rivington's Gazetteer, July 21, 1774. Smith says of this meeting: "The Town met at the Call of the Committee of 81 to choose Delegates for the Congress, & approve certain poulardous Resolves. Scott made a Speech & to the Confussion of the Committee, their proposed Resolves were rejected—a new Committee appointed for the Purposes of Smith's Diary (where, of course, this Committee was composed of five conservatives and ten radicals. —N. T. Merc., July 25, 1774; cf. 4 Am. Arch., I: 317 (footnote). They were to draw up and report a "set of constitutional Resolves, declarative of the rights of the British subjects in America, and expressive of the that the differences of the party of the two Nations, and the said resolutions, in no manner affecting the Citizens of this City, or the owing to the differences of the party of the Town of Boston, and ways and means for their relief into consideration;" and also a committee to apply to the committee of mechanics, and "request them to appoint certain persons of their body to go round the Wards to take the sense of the inhabitants on the matters above mentioned."—N. T. Arch., I: 115-116; Corp. and Pub. Papers of John Jay, II: 15 (note). See July 20.

The committee appointed at the meeting at the Coffee House (see July 10) meets to draw up a set of resolutions. The conservative members, Isaac Love, Henry Remsen, John Moore, and John Jay, decline to serve on the committee, as they consider their election "too irregular to assume any authority in consequence of it to draw up Resolves for the town; especially as the nomination of this Committee seems to cast an invidious reflection on the Committee of Correspondence, and influence and control the minds of the citizens into factions and parties." However, the remaining members agree upon resolutions declaring, in general, (1) their allegiance to the king (2) their right to exemption from all taxes not imposed by themselves or their representatives; (3) the successive Congresses did not take any proper steps for the adoption of "universally and manifestly contrary to the Constitution of the state and the wanton assumptions of power;" (4) the Boston Post Bill, "subversive of every idea of Freedom," (5) the proposed congress, "highly expedient;" and (6) their approbation of the attempts to relieve the distress of the people of Boston. In addition to agreeing upon these resolutions, the committee calls for a meeting of the inhabitants on July 25 (q.v.).—N. T. Merc., July 25, 1774. A broadside in the N. Y. Pub. Library gives an account of this meeting.

In a letter to the Earl of Dartmouth, Geo. Ogle says: "The virulent party in New-York is roaring."

A public vendue is advertised for this day, at the Merchants' Coffee House, of the "House and lot of ground, lying near the old City-Hall in Wall-Street, late the property of George Gissing, deceased, formerly known by the name of Brock's tavern, and at present in possession of Mr. George Gumming, Hair-Dresser. The house is 3 stories high, the 3rd floor, and the upper part of the 2d floor, &c. are rented to Mr. N. T. Merc., June 30, 1774. Later, it was announced that the house would be sold at private sale on Aug. 9.—N. T. Merc., Aug. 8, 1774. For a history of Brock's Tavern, which had existed since 1758, and probably earlier, see 1758. In January, 1777, Alexander Dowse seems to have been temporarily in occupation of this old tavern who here offered "Fine Canteens" for sale (N. T. Merc., Jan. 6, 1777), but, by Oct. 17 (q.v.), as "Barrow's Tavern," it was being used as a meeting-place of loyalists. In February, 1778, the house was again offered for sale. The newspaper advertisement described it as "a large corner house at the upper end of Wall-street, opposite the Old Presbyterian Meeting, for many years past a noted tavern."—Ibid., Feb. 16, 1778.

"The Proposal of Christopher Colles heretofore referred to this Board [see Apr. 24], respecting the Building of a Reservoir and the Conveyance of Fresh Water thro' the several Streets, Lanes and Alleys of this City and the Expenditure that will attend the said Undertaking, being this Day taken into Consideration, it was moved that the same be Carried into Execution." After some debate, the motion was carried by a vote of eight to two. The board "then proceeded to consider the said proposal, and issued Notes of certain Denominations and to a certain Amount not exceeding £2500 to be received in all Payments at their Treasury, in order the better to enable them to prosecute the said Undertaking, which being unanimously agreed to . . . it was resolved at the latter a Number of Notes to the Amount of £2500 be printed accordingly." A committee of 25 was appointed to "draw the Form of the said Notes and to consider of a proper Device for the same." After this, Mr. Nugent informed the council that Augustus and Frederick van Cortlandt were "willing to convey to this Corporation so much of their Ground fronting Great George Street Kei as may be wanted to erect the Reservoir on, and for other Conveniences, at the Rate of six hundred Pounds per Acre." At this price it was considered "reasonable," it was ordered "that the same be purchased of them for the Purposes above mentioned" (see Aug. 5).—M. C. C., VIII: 40-41. "The troops arrive in New York from Boston and take on "Ordnance, and a Provision of Military Stores, among which are 500 Barrels of Gun-Powder." It is rumoured that "the Royal Welch Fusiliers [see March 1] now here, are to embark this week on board the said Transports [see July 21], with a Detachment of the TR [sic] Artillery [see July 16], and to sail directly for Boston, N. Y. Merc. and county of New-York.

The common council orders that a grant be made to Henry, John, Mary, and Rachel, Cruger for the water lot "situate in the East Ward of this City, opposite to their Lot of Ground fronting Counters Key Slip, they paying three Shillings per Foot extending the Pier, and making a good and sufficient Stairs the entrance thereof to be maintained and repaired by them their Heirs & Assigns for ever."-M. An advertisement reads: "A French Boarding-School. Mrs. Cossani, (Lately from London,) Purposes to open a Boarding-School, to educate, or to complete the education of young Ladiess; where will be taught the English, French, and Italian languages, geometry, astronomy, natural sciences also a wide range of language and a knowledge of history,-to draw and paint upon silk, embroidery, tambour, Dresden, plain work, blink lace, and several other genteel and fashionable works.-A particular attention will be paid to the morals and conduct of the ladies in every particular which may prove beneficial to themselves, and satisfactory to their parents. In particular, Ladies will be boarded and educated at forty pounds a year.

"Day scholars will be taken.-There will be masters for music, dancing and writing."

Wall-Street, New-York.—Rivington's Gazette, July 21, 1774. A similar school had been opened in New York the year before (see April 24, 1773).

"Democrates" criticises and ridicules, in a broadside, the resolutions drawn up by the new committee (see July 20). He is "determined to plant himself at a Corner, and laugh at every one that appears at the City-Hall on Monday next" (July 25).—From an original in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

"A Citizen" writes a caustic letter to "John M. S. — — - -" (Scott), assailing his character, denouncing him as an enemy to the cause of liberty, and criticising in the most adverse manner his speech at the House on July 19 (p. 5). The letter says in part, "To keep alive the Fire of Party Spirit (the Dazing Object of your constant Pursuit) which was nearly being extinguished, you attempted to lessen the Importance of the City Committee, by endeavouring to cast an Oudium on their Conduct. And how was it attempted? By asserting, that their Power extended not to the formation of a Committee, the proposed Congress, may then be thought conducive to the general interest of the Colonies; and, at present, that a general non-importation agreement, faithfully observed, would prove the most efficacious means to procure a redress of our grievances." Satisfied with this reply, the radical party indorsed all the nominees of the conservatives (see July 21) — Am. Arch. I: 237. In consequence of this agreement, only one person was submitted to the people on July 28 (p. 6) for their approval.

A detachment of the Royal Artillery (see July 21) embarks on the "Brigantine Transport," which is carrying "a Quantity of Ordnance, Stores, &c." to Boston. On this and the following days several detachments of "his Majesty's 47th Regiment" arrive in New York from their quarters at Amboy, Brunswick, and Elizabeth-Town.—N. Y. Merc., Aug. 1, 1774.

Ehrenzelle Snoffle issue fifteen resolutions purporting to have been drawn up at a meeting of the "True Sons of Liberty." These ridicule the calling of a general congress, the non-importation agreements, and the proceedings of the committee of correspondence in general.—From a broadside in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

The "Royal Regiment of Welch Fusiliers" embarks on board the three transports which arrived here on July 21 (p. 6). "The Harmony which, ever since their Arrival in New York, has subsisted between the Citizens and this very respectable Corps of his Majesty's Troops, cannot be exceeded in the Chronicles of any Garrison."—N. Y. Merc., Aug. 1, 1774.

Philip Livingston, Isaac Low, John Jay, John Alsop, and James Duane are unanimously elected delegates to the congress at Philadelphia.—Am. Arch. I: 136. They had been nominated by the committee of 21 on July 4 (p. 6).

Visiting New York at this time while on a tour through the northern colonies, Patrick M'Robert writes: "On both sides of the harbour, the woods, country houses, orchards, and fields of Indian corn, form at this season of the year a beautiful prospect. There is very good water up to New York, the harbour is spacious and large, with many convenient docks or quays, with storehouses upon them for vessels of any burden to lie always about along side them. Here are at present in harbours twenty-eight ships. They carry on an extensive trade from this port to Britain, Ireland, Holland, France, Spain, Portugal, up the Mediterranean, the West Indies, Spanish Main, as well as to the other colonies. Their exports are chiefly wheat, flour, Indian corn, indigo, flaxseed, pease, pearl ashes, fish, oil, pork, iron, timber, sugar, and live cattle to the West Indies. Their imports from Britain all kinds of cloth, linen and woolen, wrought iron, shoes, stockings, &c. From Holland, they have European and East India goods; from France, Spain and Portugal, wines, spirits, fruits, silks, and other articles of luxury; from the Spanish Main, they have blood, mahogany, some indigo and dollars; from the West Indies, they have sugar, rum and molasses. Another considerable article of their export is built vessels, a good many of which are now on the stocks at this port, which they generally load with their own produce and carry to some market where they sell both ship and cargo. They have great choice of wood in their ship-yards. Their upper timbers they make all of cedar, which they prefer to oak. They are very nice in the workmanship of ship-building here, and use a great deal of ornament and painting about the vessels.

The city is large, and contains a great many neat buildings. The publick buildings, and places of worship, are generally very neat, and well finished, if not elegant. The college, tho' only one third of the plan is complete, makes a fine appearance, on one of the finest situations perhaps of any college in the world. Here are taught divinity, mathematics, the practice and theory of medicine, chymistry, surgery, and materia medica. One circumstance I think is a little unlucky, the entrance to this college is thro' one of the streets where the most noted prostitutes live. This is certainly a temptation to the youth that have occasion to pass so often the way.

"The new hospital (This building was burnt in February 1774, [error for Feb. 18, 1775, p. 4, when almost finished; however, the inhabitants set about repairing it again directly] th'o' not quite finished is another fine building upon the same plan as the Royal Infirmary at Edinburgh.

They have three English churches, three Presbyterian, two Dutch, Luthehran, two Dutch Calvinists, all neat and well finished buildings, besides a French church, an Arabapust, a Metho-odist, a Quaker meeting, a Moravian church, and a Jews syna-gogue. There are many other fine buildings belonging to private gentlemen and merchants; but the streets are in general ill paved, irregular, and too narrow. There are four market places, all well supplied.

They are pretty well supplied with fresh water from pumps sunk at convenient distances in the streets. Their tea water through the streets is fetched from cisterns in the environs of the city; but they are now erecting a fire engine for raising the spring into a reservoir, from whence, by pipes, they can convey it to any part of the city. They are pretty well guarded against accidents from fire, by obliging every citizen to register their house, and for one shilling a very yearly, to have them swept once a month. They have also a number of engines kept at convenient distances: to each of these is appointed a captain, and a certain number of men. And when a fire happens, a premium is always allowed to the captain and his men who can first make their cisterns, or pumps, to operate. By this provision and by the proper disposition of the engines, when it does happen, it is seldom allowed to spread farther than the house it brakes out in.

"Near the fort is an equestrian statue of King George the III. upon an elegant pedestal in the middle of a fine green rail'd in with iron. At the crossing of two public streets there is a marble statue of Lord Chatham erected by the citizens in gratitude for his strenuous opposition to the stamp act in 1766. They have several large rowers, distilleries, brewhouses, and a large iron work carried on here. They have plenty of mechanics of all kinds, by whom almost every thing is made that is made with you in Britain is made to as great perfection here. The inhabitants are in general brisk and lively, kind to strangers, dress very gay; the fair sex are in general handsome, and said to be very oblige. Above 500 ladies of pleasure keep lodgings contiguous within the consecrated liberties of St. Paul's. This part of the city belongs to the church, and has thence obtained the name of the Holy Ground. Here all the prostitutes reside, among whom are many fine well dressed women, and it is remarkable that they live in much greater cordiality one with another than any nests of that kind do in Britain or Ireland. It is rather astonishing, that in a city of over 300,000 inhabitants, tho' they are said to diminish yearly here. The city is governed by a mayor, and divided into seven different wards, over each of which an alderman and an assistant presides. They have generally the same laws and regulations as is in England. There are imported into this city thirtysix thousand inhabitants in the city; in this number are, I believe, included the slaves, who make at least a fifth part of the number.

There are many fine country seats upon this island, where nature has done so much, art has had very little share in making them very agreeable. The soil is generally light and sandy, and in some parts rocky; but mostly well cultivated, and produces fine crops of wheat, Indian corn, and barley; but oats do not thrive well here. They have their wheat and barley cut, and they are now (July 20) cutting some oats near the town. They are hoeing the Indian corn, the ears of the most forward of which are just appearing: I am told it will not be ripe till October, this grain is a very strong grower some of the heads, I believe, you have seen. It grows upon a strong hollow jointed stalk, like a reed, which rises to the height of seven or eight feet, the blades are a deep green, and grow very broad, and make at this time a very luxuriant appearance. They plant this grain in little hillocks, about five feet distant one way, and three feet the other, having first laid a little dung, they plant two or three grains in a hill, and afterwards keep them clean by horse and hand hoeing. The time of planting is about the first of May. They often sow some melon, cucumber, or squash seed along with the Indian corn, which soon grows to perfection in the open fields. They generally have from 120 to 200 fold increase of this grain; but then a small quantity, one fourth of a bushel, plants an acre. They grind this grain into meal for feeding their negroes with. It is also very good, other ground or whole, for bread, horses, or fatting cattle. If that is plentiful there is plenty of every thing. Their horses here are not very large, about fourteen hands high, of a sharp boned make, but very hardy. A good one will sell from L. 10, to 20 sterling. The cows are of a middle size, of the long horned kind, bare hair, not very neat, but good milkers. A good one will cost from L. 5, to 10 sterling. I have seen no polled cows here. Their sheep are a kind of half mags, too langleged, though their wool and mutton are both pretty good. A sheep sells from 6, to 10s. sterling. Their hogs are much of the same kind, that you have in Britain, but make exceeding sweet pork. Their poultry are very fat, large, and fat."

In another letter, dated Aug. 18, he says, in part: "Labourers have their three and four shillings a day about New York; but at present they seem rather overstocked, owing to the arrival of so many adventurers from Britain and Ireland; they tell me that no less than twenty two vessels have arrived at New York with passengers in the streets from the New England to the metropolis of this country filled with American adventurers; they are in general room and employ for them in the back countries, where many of them are gone.

"All necessaries of life are plenty, and reasonable; For example, beef at four and five pence the pound; good mutton the same; a good hen at a shilling, and pork and veal in proportion; butter sixteen pence the pound; the best flower, seventeen shillings the hundred weight; West India rum from three shillings and six pence, and three and nine pence the gallon. Rum distilled here, at two and six pence the gallon; beer, and all sorts of wines, about the same prices; at thirty shillings a hogs head; the dear is twenty four pence the bottle. The only dear drink is London porter, which is two shillings the bottle. Observe, that in all the above rates and prices, I speak of the currency of the country, which is in proportion as seven pence sterling to a shilling."

The most common coins here in gold, are the Johannesse half and quarter; the moidore, with some guineas; in silver, the Spanish dollar, the half, quarter, and eighth of a dollar, which last is their shilling. They have also some British shillings circulating. Their market of meat and butter must this season of the year be over filled; and they are kept at a premium, as they will be supplied with fresh fish, such as cod, sturgeon, black fish and breamers, at two pence per pound; lobsters, and other shell fish in great plenty."—Mr. Roberts. A letter of this date to the "Committee of Correspondence in Boston," which is "Signed by Order and in Behalf of the Committee of Mechanics. Daniel Duncomb Chairman," is as follows:

"We received your Favour of the 19th Ultimo [June 18 (q.q.),] and take the Information which you give us, of the invidious Refusals here to send us, not only to the Congress, but very kindly; and also think ourselves happy in your Determination not to credit such Reports, without better Proof than the Declaration of our mutual Enemies, who are endeavouring to raise Jealousies, and sow Discord between the neighbouring Colonies.

It now appears to me, that the Committee of Correspondence, for this City, have nominated, sometime since, five Gentlemen, out of their Body, for the Purpose of meeting the Congress [see July 4]; these were held up to the City for their Appointment, two of whom were objected to by the Committee of Mechanics, and two others nominated in their Room [see July 5]. The Matter remained in Suspense for some time; at length the twenty-seventh of last Month was appointed to decide the Dispute by an Election: but, on the Morning of the same Day, a Congress being had with the Gentlemen nominated by the abovementioned Committee, and their political Principles being understood to be such as were displeasing to the Congress, all Disputes immediately subsided; and the People assembled in the different Wards, to give their united Voices for the five Gentlemen first nominated, viz. Messrs. Philip Livingston, Isaac Low, James Duane, John Jay, and John Allop Esquires, who were accordingly appointed for the City and County, without any Manner of Opposition [see July 28].

... The Committee of Correspondence here, have taken the Poor of Your Town under Consideration, and nominated several Members of their Body, to make Report of Ways and Means for their Relief: and, as the Gentlemen of New York have never been wanting in the Principles of Humanity and Benevolence we doubt not, but such Contributions will be raised, from all Banks and Orders of Men among us; as will, when join'd with the generous Donations of the neighbouring Colonies, greatly alleviate the Distresses of the Families of every worthy Mechanick, honest Tar, and industrious Labourer, among you, who are now, like Men, sacrificing their all to the common Cause of American Liberty.

"We are pleased to hear of the Firmness of the Mechanics and Husbandmen among you; but notwithstanding this, we are sorry to find that their Characters should in any Degree be raised by the Backwardness and Avarice of your Merchants. Happily for that, is not the Case in New York, we have indeed had Divisions and Disputes; but these have not arisen from a Supposition that our Liberties were not worth contending for, or that you should be left to fall Victims to the merciless Hand of arbitrary Power—no, by no Means; but rather that should take the Lead in such a worthy, and useful, and laudable Enterprise. However, we now seem to be convinced of the honest Intentions of each others Hearts, our Divisions have subsided, and we are cemented, in one firm Body, and expect that the Province of New York will be second to none, in this noble, generous and manly Struggle for American Liberty. — From original in N. A prospectus of the forthcoming publication of important state papers appears in the Journals: "When the conduct of individuals in a community is such, as to attract public attention, others are very naturally led to many inquiries about them; so when civil states rise into importance, even their earliest history becomes the object of speculation ... many who have but little or no connection with the British colonies in America, are now prying into the story of their rise and progress, while others wish for a farther acquaintance with them. ... The means of obtaining information, are now increased by the press, and will include every important paper relating to America, of which either the original, or authentic copies can be procured, down to the present time."

"To remove this obstruction ... and at the same time to lay the foundation of a good American history by preserving from oblivion valuable materials for that purpose, it is proposed to form a complete collection of what may be with propriety styled, American State Papers. This collection will begin with the grant from Henry 1st to John Cabot, and his Countreymen; and will include every important paper relating to America, of which either the original, or authentic copies can be procured, down to the present time."

"It is supposed that the whole may be comprised in five volumes, each volume, well bound and lettered, will not exceed one dollar and an half."

The New York agents designated to receive subscriptions or material which might be incorporated in the work are Messrs. Aug. Noel and Hazard and John Holt.—N. Y. Jour., Sept. 1, 1774.

For the publication of the Hazard State Papers, see 1792.

In a letter to Dartmouth, Colben expresses his satisfaction in the nomination of "moderate Men" to attend the general congress at Philadelphia. He advises the Delegates, I am of opinion, cannot be prevented. If they pursue only such prudent measures as are calculated to remove the distuctive Dissentions which subsist between Great Britain and her Colonies, the meetings, tho' illegal, it may be hoped, will produce some good."

"We have viewed with the utmost concern the late order to lay aside the right of raising money on the Subjects in America; and in lieu thereof, that the several American Assemblies, should grant and secure to the Crown, a sufficient and permanent supply to pay all the Taxes, which have been or shall be levied there are of Opinion this would be a good work upon which a happy reconciliation might be effected."—N. William Cunningham arrives in New York in the ship "Needham," from Newry, England. With him are some "indentured hand-served servants," whom he accompanied for the City and County, without any Manner of Opposition [see July 28].

Peter Curtemius, a member of the committee appointed on July 19 (p.9) to take into consideration ways and means of helping the poor in Boston, submits the following: "Inclosed is a letter Directed to your Committee which please to let such members read as you can trust." The enclose is as follows:

"By a paragraph in Rivington's paper which you have inclosed, it appears that you intend to pay your subjects with the money arising from the Cargo of Rice recd from S. Carolina. If so it does not answer the Intention for which it was given, & if not publicly contradicted it will put an entire stop to the subscription here as well as elsewhere . . . It behoves you therefore publicly to disclose & let your disapproval be seen, & I am persuaded so that it may convince all your payers, for you well know that your town has many Enemies in this City who Improve on every report that is spread to your disadvantage—"

"If your Streets are to be paved, & it is resolved on by your committee to pay the whole expense out of the charity or out of such a fund as you may raise by subscription, you are to put a stop to it at all events, for the reasons mentioned above, & in order to set things right I would beg leave to suggest a few hints to you which if put into execution I dare say would be of service & Encourage many to subscribe freely—As to paving streets, I suppose these matters are regulated in your town much in the same way they are here, which is that every man by law is obliged to pave the breadth of his house or Lot as far as the gutter or middle of the street, supposing this to be the case I would have you employ a number of men at the usual days, wages, & contract with every owner of a house at a Certain price the square yard, & it should be 10 or 12 20 yard under the common price, & whatever the loss is let it come out of the charity, If you think this would be too great a sinking fund employ your ship Carpenters to build ships & sell them, & with that money go on Again. If your house carpenters & masons are out of Employ, & you have any public or private buildings going on contract for them or 6 1/2pc under price, employ as many hands as you can to keep them in a good humour

If your blacksmiths want work purchase Rod Iron, & set them at work to make nails, this is an article which will be much wanting if we should come into a nonimportation agreement, & will sell a credit. If you the home of Madison & this house, a sensation may be amply ratified & spread through Philadelphia or here by our chairman M't Low, who is concerned in a sitting mill, & I think it would be no bad policy to order a few hundred pounds worth of that article to be purchased of him out of the money raised for your town in this city. If many of your poor women are Idle it would be good to purchase flax & Wool & set them in Spinning, & either sell the yarn & thread or get it wove, & sell the Cloth. In short I would have you be undertakers for you will have a considerable stock in hand when all the subscriptions come in to go on with, which if well managed may keep your mechanics & some poor years employed before the Capital is sunk; & as to a second subscription I would not have you make much dependance on.

For I know by experience how these matters go the Iron must be struck whilst it is hot, therefore bushead the money you may receive,

& let it be put into the hands of men of property, & as possible let them be persons with whom you are acquainted or business in this & the other provinces & let their names appear in the public prints which will be an inducement for people to subscribe freely. I should be glad if [il] you would write to our Committee &

Inform them what method you propose to employ [for] your poor, which I think would be of service to your cause, provided it is in some such method as I have here suggested & you would not have me hint however, that you got any Information from me because I do not want my name brought in question—Rivington's Tory paper is Information sufficient for you—"

"I should be glad if you write to our committee on this head to have a Copy or ascert the whole & should be suprised if it should come into the hands of some of our committee who are no friends to Extract of a Letter From Philadelphia,

To a Gentleman in this City, dated the 6th inst.

YESTERDAY evening Dr. Franklin arrived here from London in six weeks, which he left the 23d of March, which has given great joy in this town, he says, we have no favour to expect from the Ministry, nothing but submission will satisfy them, they expect little or no opposition will be made to their troops, those that are now coming are for New-York, where it is expected they will be received with cordiality. As near as we can learn there are about four thousand troops coming in this fleet, the men of war and transports are in a great measure loaded with dry goods, to supply New-York, and the country round it, agents are coming over with them. Dr. Franklin is highly pleased to find us arming and preparing for the worst events, he thinks nothing else can save us from the most abject slavery and destruction, at the same time encourages us to believe a spirited opposition, will be the means of our salvation. The Ministry are alarmed at every opposition, and lift up again at every thing which appears the least in their favour, every letter and every paper from hence, are read by them.

In accord with orders of the common council of Aug. 29 (see M. C. C., VIII: 49), the law for the "better sweeping and cleaning the streets . . . , and for the good government of the scavenger," is inserted in subsequent issues of the newspapers.

Whereas an object of the highest importance, and greatly conducive to the health and comfort of the inhabitants of the city, that the streets and lanes thereof be frequently swept and cleaned. . . . And whereas the laws hitherto . . . have been found ineffectual for the want of a scavenger, whose particular business is to attend to the same; and whereas, in pursuance of the charter Robert McGlinchey hath been . . . appointed the scavenger thereof, and hath made application . . . for certain laws . . . relating to the sweeping of said streets, and the execution of his office as scavenger," the following regulations are ordained: On definite days in each week in the different wards (season and weather permitting), the scavenger shall, in the morning rake and sweep together into heaps . . . before their respective dwelling houses or lots of ground" all the "dirt, filth, and soil." Neglect is punishable by a fine of three shillings. On the days above noted, the scavenger "shall take and carry away to some place, out of the city, all the dirt, dung, ashes, and filth of whatsoever sort, that shall be found lying in the streets . . . other than such dung or ashes as shall have been brought out of the houses, yards, or inclosures of any of the inhabitants, and which shall not have lain in the streets upwards of twenty four hours." The penalty for neglect shall be 40 shillings. Provided any such dung or ashes shall be brought and left in the public streets" for 24 hours, the scavenger may dispose of it for his own use. If any rubbish, dirt, etc., unifit for manure, shall be left in the streets, the person where such rubbish is shall pay the scavenger one shilling for each one horse cart load to be carried off by him. Robert McGlinchey is granted exclusive right to such dirt, ashes, etc. . . . as "shall under the restrictions aforesaid be found in any of the streets. . . . No other person than the above shall take away any of the debris which the scavenger is authorized to have under penalty of three shillings for each one horse cart load." —N. Y. Jour., Sept. 8, 1774.

The common council appoints a committee to inquire what "Reparations are Wanting to the Ferry House Barn etc; at St. George's Ferry." —M. C. C., VIII: 49. On Sept. 14, a warrant was issued to Andrew Gauthier for $40 to be "applied towards Building a New Ferry." On Sept. 14, £100 was ordered paid for repairing the ferry-house at this ferry. —Ibid., VIII: 59. These repairs probably are to be associated with the execution of the order of the board (Sept. 22) that the ferry-house be raised four feet. —Ibid., VIII: 54. Again, on Nov. 15, £50 was appropriated for the buildings at this ferry. —Ibid., VIII: 60.

The common council appoints a committee of eight "to Superintend the Water Works now carrying on by Christopher Colles [see Aug. 23], to assist in making Contracts, purchasing Materials auditing Accounts &c." —M. C. C., VIII: 49. See Sept. 5.

An advertisement reads: "William Birchall Tailor, From London, begs leave to acquaint the public, that he has taken a commodious house the corner of Beaver-Street, and facing General Halifin's, where he purposes painting portraits in oil, or in miniature for the bracelet, or so small as to be set in a ring." —N. Y. Merc., Sept. 8, 1774.

An account rendered by Eldia Gallaudet to the corporation reads: "To Engraving Eight plates & Eight Head peaces [pieces] for the Water Works notes and Blocking the Same £7 0s. 0d." From original preserved in comptroller's office, box of vouchers, No. 1.

Payments ordered by the common council on Oct. 10 — M. C. C, VIII: 59-60.

The New York delegates set out for the general congress at Philadelphia. Isaac Low, "being under the Necessity of going by Way of Powes-Hood," is escorted to the ferry stairs by "a considerable Number of respectable Inhabitants, with Colours Fying, Music playing, and loud Hurraez at the End of each Street."

5 total interruption of the West India trade. "Can they live without rum, sugar, and molasses? Will not this impiety and vexation defeat the measure. This would cut up the revenue by the roots, if wine, fruit, molasses, and sugar were discarded as well as tea.
But a prohibition of the West Indies will accomplish this illustrious but that cannot afford to lose the West India market, and this would throw a multitude of families in our fishing towns into the arms of famine."—Works of John Adams, II. 593-94.

On Oct. 8, the following resolution was adopted: "That this Congress approve of the opposition by the Inhabitants of the Massachusetts-bay to the execution of the late acts of Parliament; and if the same shall be attempted to be carried into execution by force, in such case, all America ought to support them in their opposition." Duane wished to have entered on the minutes his position against this, but he was refused.—*Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford

On Oct. 13, Adams remarked: "Mr. Duane has had his heart set upon insisting in our bill of rights the authority of Parliament to regulate the trade of the Colonies. He is for grounding it on compacts, acquiescence, necessity, convention, not merely on our consent."—Works of John Adams, II. 707. On this point, Duane

On Oct. 14, the congress decided upon the resolutions declaring the rights and grievances of the colonies.—*Jour. Cont. Cong.
(Ford ed.), I.* 65-73.

On Oct. 22, the members resolved that another congress be held at Philadelphia on May 10, 1775 (p. 56), "unless the redress of grievances . . . be obtained before that time."—Ibid., I. 102.

The work of the congress was completed on Oct. 26, when it dissolved.—Ibid., I. 114.

This congress drew up: 1. An Association prohibiting importation from Great Britain after Dec. 1, 1774, and exportation to that country after Sept. 15, 1775 (ibid., I. 75-81); 2. An address, drafted by John Jay, to the people of Great Britain (ibid., I. 82-90); 3. A memorial to the inhabitants of the British colonies (ibid., I.
90-101); 4. An address to the king (ibid., I. 115-21); and 5. An address to the inhabitants of Quebec (ibid., I. 105-11).

An advertisement informs the public that "A Merchant Broker's Office, is opened by William Tongue, At the corner house of Mr. Richard Winkron, near the Exchange, New-York; where all kinds of business will be transacted on commissions, either in buying, selling, or bartering West-India, American, or European goods; also slaves, vessels, or any merchantize, sold in a brokerage way, in the manner practised in London."—N. Y. Merc., Sept. 5, 1774.

is hereby given, that a large quantity of pitch pine logs will be wanting for the New-York water works: Such persons as are willing to engage in such a service, are desired to send their proposals, in writing, before the 20th of October next, to Christopher Colles, conveyer of the New-York Water Works; and the said logs were secured from Stillwater, in Albany County (see Nov. 8).

The Earl of Dartmouth writes to Colden: "The King has seen with concern that His Subjects in the different Colonies in North America have been induced upon the ground stated in their different Resolutions to nominate Deputies to meet in general Congress at Philadelphia.

"If the object of this Congress be humbly to represent to the King any Grievances they may have to complain of, or any propositions they may have to make on the present state of America, such Representations would certainly have come from each Colony with its separate Rights, in its separate Character, as a Branch of the Propriety and Legality of which there may be much doubt." Dartmouth also informs Colden that large quantities of gunpowder are being shipped from Holland to New York, and instructs him to find a means of putting a stop so dangeours a Correspondence.—N. Y. Coll. Docs., VIII. 249. On Oct. 10, the king issued an order in council stopping the exportation of gunpowder from Great Britain, and its importation into the colonies, except by licence of the king or privy council.—Ibid., VIII. 509. On Nov.
2, nevertheless, Colden reported that "Americans" are "purchasing large Quanta of Arms & Ammunition in the different parts of Europe."—Ibid., VIII. 510.

Smith says: "The Affairs of this Country grow very serious—Nothing so fully discovered the Spirit of the lower Classes as their Contrivances and Speeches, upon a false Alarm which arrived yesterday, of Gen'l Gage firing upon Boston. Persuading that we are in the most imminent Danger of a Civil War I wrote this Day & last evening to Gov't Boon, Mr Sargent & Colpo Fanning to the Intent that they may know the Truth on the other side of the Water . . .
It is authorized to observe to what a Pass the Populace are arrived head of that Respect they formerly had for the King, you now bear the very lowest Orders call him a Knave or a Fool, & reproach-up for him of his & his Grandfather's Conduct."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV. In a letter to Dartmouth, of the same date, Colden expresses quite a different view, declaring that the populace is now directed by men who have much at stake, not by demagogues opposed to the government. Men now speak and publish sentiments in favour of the government and argue upon the political subjects of the times. There are "no more burning of Effigies, or putting cut-out paper figures under People's Doors.
The delegates to the general Congress" went to Philadelphia last week (see Sept. 1). "Seven Counties of this Province, neither appointed Deligates for themselves nor concurred in the choice made by the City; and two Counties sent Deligates of their own . . . the City Deligates were embarrassed by this Dissention of the People."—
N. Y. Col. Dist., VIII. 488.

In a letter to his nephew, Capt. Maturin, who is secretary to Gen. Gage, Smith declares that "the first Act of Indiscretion on the Part of the Army or the People marked with Blood, would light up a Civil War."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

John Thurman writes a long letter to "Sargent Chambers & Co.,"

The following handbill is distributed about the city:

"To the Publick. As the merchants of this city have nobly refused letting their vessels to the tools of Government for the base purpose of transporting troops and military stores to Boston; for enforcing the cruel and arbitrary elicits of a corrupt ministry, on that virtuous people, now suffering in the glorious cause of American freedom; it is therefore hoped that no pilot will be found so lost to all Sense of duty to his country, as to assist in this detestable work. Mr. Francis Post inadvertently engaged to make some cheats for the transportation of arms; and Mr. Jonathan Gage, in like manner, undertook to contract with house carpenters, for the purpose (as is supposed) of building barracks at Boston; but when their fellow-citizens represented to them the tendency of their conduct, they immediately declined the abominable Service. After these laudable examples of the merchants and tradesmen of this city, there is no doubt but their patriotic conduct will be followed by all their fellow-citizens. But, notwithstanding, should any surrid miscreant be found amongst us, who will aid the enemies of this country to subvert her liberties, he must not be surprised if that vengeance overtake him, which is the reward justly due to patriots. [Signed] The Free Citizens."—N. Y.

put the troops under cover here [Boston] without erecting some temporary lodgements; and on the supposition that workmen could not be procured here, it was thought expedient to send to

A broadside, addressed "To the Inhabitants of New York," and given "Humamus," offers the following arguments against withholding provisions and clothing from the troops at Boston:
1. It is a matter that should be decided by the continental congress.
2. "To attempt to starve and perish the Soldiery, will make Every Man of them our Enemy, at a Time we should use every Means to conciliate their Friendship."
3. These measures may lead the soldiers "to salary out against the Inhabitants and seize the Supports of Nature." The resulting riots would injure the American cause in the eyes of English supporters.

4. "Starring an Enemy is an Act that would be proper in Time of open and avowed War," but it is not proper while the colonists are trying to open redress of grievances "in a calm and rational Manner."

5. The plan will not succeed, for "Supplies will be found sufficient to prevent the Soldiers from starving or perishing."—From

The "Association" passed on this day by the continental congress (see Sept. 5) contains the following paragraph: "We will, in our several stations, encourage frugality, economy, and industry, and promote agriculture, arts and the manufactures of this country, especially that of wool; and will discontinue and discourage every species of extravagance and dissipation, especially all horse-racing, and all kinds of gaming, cock-fighting, exhibitions of shows, plays, and other expensive diversions and entertainments ..."—Jour. Cont. Cong. (Port. ed.), I: 78. This probably explains the fact that the John Street Theatre was re- mains closed during 1775 and 1776. It was reopened by British officers in 1777 (see Jan. 6, 1777).

The house is now "under cover" and preparations are being made for "the speedy reception of patients, which it is hoped will excite a generous and liberal disposition in the public, to render it extensively useful by their beneficent contributions."—Riverton's Gazetteer, Oct. 27, 1774. Haldimand; and "About four score Artificers went from hence with the General, to work on the Barracks there [see Oct. 15]; and last week some Iron Potts and Stores were ship'd for the use of the Troops at Boston, without any attempt being made to prevent it."

22. Regarding contraband trade, Colden says: "The Vessels from Holland, or S' Eustatia, do not come into this Port, but anchor at some Distance in the numerous Bays and Creeks that our Coasts and Rivers furnish, from whence their goods and contraband Goods are sent up in small Boats. I believe it would be very proper to make some Regulations that might discourage the owners of these small Boats from engaging in this Business. When they are now seized, their Boats are sold at so low a price that the Owners recover them With a Loss that perhaps costs them the possession of the said goods. The risk being small, they engage with the illicit Traders at low Wages. This increases the Profits of that Trade."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 543, 544.

25. Joseph Reed writes from Philadelphia to Josiah Quincy: "there is no danger of the enemy being let in through this City; there is a bank of staunch, chosen Sons of Liberty among some of our best families, who are backed by the body of people in such a manner that no discontented spirit dares oppose the measures that are necessary for the public safety. I am told that there has been a strong delinquency and backwardness during the whole Summer. If you have any correspondence that I wish you would endeavour to animate them. While they are attending to the little paltry disputes which their own parties have produced, the great cause is suffering in their hands."—A M. Art. 19, 1774.

26. Because the exportation of sheep is contrary to a resolution of the continental congress, several citizens wait upon the captain of a schoon in the harbour and request the return of the 18 sheep on board, which are destined for the West Indies. In the evening, the unfounded promise of the captain to do this, together with a rumour that the ship is to sail that night, causes quite an excitement. Two hundred people assemble on the wharf and appoint a committee to consult with the committee of correspondence. The latter advises that the merchant to whom the vessel came signified be sent for and desired to cause the landing of the sheep. These are then to be delivered to one of the committee for safe keeping until the boat shall sail. Upon the enactment of these conditions, the people peaceably disperse.—N. Y. Merc., Nov. 14, 1774.

Isaac Low issues a call to the "freeholders and freemen" of this city "to assemble together at the usual places of election, in their several wards, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, on the 5th day of this instant November, then and there to elect, and appoint eight fit persons in each respective ward to be a Committee of Inspection."—N. A broadside, addressed "To the Public" and signed "Citizens of New-York," announces: "We have had frequent intimations from England, both by private letters and newly imported papers, that there would be attempts made to bribe the printers of the public papers in America. . . . Whether or not Mr. Rivington is really a pensioner from the ministry, or has been influenced by hopes of their future favours, every one is at liberty to judge from the conduct of his press. . . . It is the opinion of a great number here, of the friends to the rights and liberties of British America, that the general scope and tendency of the news papers published by Mr. Rivington, have been to promote the designs of the British ministry—unto countenance and support their unconstitutional claims and arbitrary measures, to subject the British colonies to tyrannical power, reduce them to slavery, and finally to destroy the English constitution. From this opinion of the aforesaid paper, and not from eminence to Mr. Rivington on any other account, we have thought proper to publish the following letters, in some measure to prevent the mischievous design of his papers, by showing that the friends to liberty, tho' in distant parts and unconnected, agree in sentiments, and have the same opinion of it as ourselves." The letters are from a number of citizens in Baltimore to Rivington announcing the withdrawal of their subscriptions to his paper because of his "most notorious partiality" to Great Britain's side of the struggle.—From an original in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

"The King's Speech on the Opening the Session" begins thus: "It gives me much comfort that I am obliged, at the opening of the present parliament, to inform you that a more auspicious season for the observance of gratitude and obedience to the law still unhappily prevails in the province of Massachusetts's Bay, and has in divers parts of it broke forth in fresh violations of a very criminal nature. 30 Ceedings have been countenanced and encouraged in either of my colonies, and unwarrantable attempts have been made to obstruct the commerce of this kingdom by unlawful combinations. I have taken such measures, and given such orders, as I judged most proper and effectual for carrying into execution the laws which were passed in the last session of the late parliament, for the protection and security of the commerce of my subjects, and for the restoration and maintenance of the government, in the province of the Massachusetts Bay. And you may depend upon my firm and steadfast resolution to withstand every attempt to weaken or impair the supreme authority of this legislature over all the dominions of my crown, the maintenance of which I consider as essential to the public safety, the defence of the British empire, assuring myself that, while I act upon these principles, I shall never fail to receive your assistance and support."

Mr. Johnson, an Indian of the Mohican Tribe, is to preach this Evening in the Old Presbyterian Church, in this City, when a Collection is to be raised for him, to defray a considerable Expense he has been at, in preparing the Way for the Removal of his Tribe, and the Remains of six other Tribes in that Vicinity, who are chiefly Christians, unto the Oneida Country. An Event that promises the most salutary Effects to this Province.—N. Y. Jour, Dec. 22, 1774.

A number of people styling themselves “the Mohawks and River Indians” write to Andrew Elliot, collector of the port (see Dec. 15): “A number of fire-arms of British manufacture, legally imported, having been lately seized by your orders and conveyed on Long Island, Nicholas Hoffman, Peter T. Curtensm, Lindley Murray, Roderphus Ritema, Lancaster Burling, Jacob van Vorhis, Francis Lewis, and Capt. Fleming.” — N. Y. Merc, Dec. 19, 1774.

Mr. Elliot calls upon the person to appear, that he may answer for the damage he has caused him of having acted either arbitrarily or illegally in his office, that he may have an opportunity of answering him properly.

“If the letter is wrote with a view to deter an officer from his duty, Mr. Elliot assures the writer, that as long as he has the honour to act as Collector . . . he will exert the same attention and firmness, that has for ten years past, enabled him to give satisfaction to his superiors in office; and to live happily among the inhabitants of this city.” — Rivington’s Gazetteer, Jan. 5, 1775.

A handbiff appears addressed “To The Inhabitants of New York,” and signed by “Plain English,” which states, in part: “your clothes are already changed by the large number of arms, which were legally exported from Great-Britain, and imported here, in the ship Lady Gage, and therefore not liable to a seizure, upon any pretence whatsoever, as they are actually the manufacture of England.—Those arms (I am credibly informed) are now on board the man of war, and are in a few days to be sent to General Gage, and of consequence are to be used for your destruction . . . In the name of Heaven, throw off your superstitious, assemble together immediately, and go in a body to the Collector, insist upon the arms being relanded, and he must see them forth-coming, or abide the consequences; delays are dangerous; there is no time to be lost.” In spite of this, most of the prominent people of the city were in sympathy with the collector’s action, and declared themselves ready to support him. — Rivington’s Gazetteer, Jan. 5, 1775. Prof. Johnston estimates that the population of New York City and County, given as 21,861 in the last official census, of 1771 (p.c.), “must have risen to full 25,000. Philadelphia’s population was somewhat larger; Boston’s less.” — Johnston, The Campaign of 1776 around N. Y., 36 to notes.

In 1774, Blue Book and various series of almanacs, or hand-books (see Dec. 12, 1774), this one having the title Gaine’s Universal Register, or, American and British Kalendar, bears this date. In his introductory statement in this volume (a 16mo.), he says that this work is “the first of its Kind that ever appear’d in this Province, . . .” He adds: “At this Time, when all America is united in one great political Compact, for their common Safety, it is certainly necessary that we should be furnish’d with such as give an accurate Knowledge as can be obtain’d of every Province . . .” His work has the merit, he states, “of containing more useful Matter than the Court Kalendar.” It contains also “as much as either of the American Registers already publish’d in two Provinces.” He has “selected every Thing from the British and Irish Lists worthy of Notice, and, besides the General Establishment of America, the Public Matter has been added, with an Account of every Province from West Florida to Quebec inclusive.” Among the features relating to New York Province, mentioned or described, is “New-York College.” Of this it states, among various facts: “The Building (which is only one Third of the intended Structure) consists of an elegant Stone Edifice, three complete Stories high, with four Stair-cases, twelve Apartments in each, a Chapel, Hall, Library, Museum, Anatomical Theatre and a School for experimental Philosophy.

All Students, but those in Medicine, are obliged to lodge and diet in the College, unless they are particularly excepted by the Governors or President; The Edifice is surrounded by a high Fence, which also encloses a large Court and Garden; and a Porter constantly attends at the front Gate, which is lock’d at 12 O’clock each Evening in Summer, and at 9 in Winter; after which Hours, the Names of all that come in, are delivered weekly to the President. The College is situate on a dry gravelly Soil, about 150 Yards from the Bank of Hudson’s River, which it overlooks; commanding a most extensive and beautiful Prospect.” From pp. iii, and 193-2 of the above-mentioned Calendar. The work also contains “The American Bill of Rights” and the articles of “Association,” taken from “The Proceedings of the Continental Congress assembled at Philadelphia.” See Sept. 5, 1775.

Colden writes to the Earl of Dartmouth: “I have received your Lord’s Commands of the 19th of October, with his Majesty’s order in Council of the 25th December, which I shall endeavour by every means in my power, to execute in the most effectual manner. I immediately communicated to Mr. Elliot the Collector of this Port, the orders which I had received, and gave him the necessary directions for the conduct of the officers of the Customs [see Dec. 15, 1774]. I am well assured he will be very attentive to this important duty. A day or two after this order was received one of the Custom House officers discovered ten chests of Arms, three Boxes of Lead and one Barrell of Gun-Powder on Board a Vessel bound to Rhode Island. It has been found on enquiry that these arms were lately imported on board the ship Lady Gage, and it is said, were shipped at London as Hardware; but there was no Cockett for them under any Denomination. Mr. Elliot secured them all, and for greater safety sent them on Board the Man of War in the Harbour where they remain.

That set of people Nastily waiting for every opportunity to raise a Mob and throw the City into confusion, made an infamous attempt to frighten Mr. Elliot into a surrender of the Arms, which they insisted were legally supported [see Dec. 27 and 28, 1774]. The principal Gentlemen and Merchants, to prevent mischief waited upon Mr. Elliot in a body, assured him they were perfectly satisfied with his behavior, and declared with every assurance they should attempt to insult him on account of what had happened which silenced the others who were working in the dark and endeavouring to raise the populace . . .” — N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 528; Of N. Y. Merc, Jan. 2, 1775, and N. Y. Jour, Jan. 5, 1775.

On Feb. 1, Dartmouth replied: “Thos. Carlyle & Gun-Powder imported in the ship Lady Gage is a proof how necessary our precautions were, and Mr. Elliot’s spirited and proper conduct is very much approved, as well as that of the gentlemen who assured him of their protection on the occasion. A few instances of such a determined resolution not to submit to the tyranny of Meha would soon I am persuaded overcome their violence and render your exertions unnecessary. —N. Y. Col. Doc., VIII: 550-51.

The Earl of Dartmouth writes to the governors in North America. "It must be acknowledged by the king to "signify" to them the king's "pleasure" that they use their utmost endeavors to prevent the appointment of delegates to the Congress which will be held at Philadelphia on May 10. —N. At a meeting of the merchants and others, concerned in American commerce, held at King's Arms Tavern, Cornhill, London, it is "unanimously Resolved, that it is the opinion of this meeting, that the alarming state of the Trade to North America makes it expedient to petition Parliament for redress." It is also resolved, "That a Committee be appointed to prepare a Petition to the House of Commons, and lay the same before a general meeting, to be held at this place this day se'night." —Am. The idea of union upon some general plan, is in my opinion this, I have no doubt of its being yet attainable through some channel of mutual consideration and discussion." —Am. Arch., I: 1101; N. Y. Col. Doc., VIII: 530.

An extract of a letter from London states: "Every reasonable expectation of the Colonists will be complied with; but no claims for exemption from parliamentary jurisdiction, can deserve that title. Such an exemption would be a dissolution of the British empire. The outrages of the Bostonians will not pass with impunity, if vigour and firmness in Great Britain can effect it. "—Am. Arch., I: 1110.

If New York would be handed down to posterity as the truest Friend to America let its legislature assert and exercise those powers which have been wrested from it by the Congress, and petition [see March 25] with decency and moderation to Parliament, and their wishes will be fully gratified." —Rivington's Gazetteer, March 16, 1775.

At a meeting of the Union Library Society (see July 25, 1774) it is ordered that "The Librarian permit the Members of the General Assembly, during their sitting, to have the free use of their Library, as though they were Members thereof; and that the Librarian deliver to the Speaker with a Catalogue of the Books, and a Copy of the Orders."—Am. In the British parliament, Lord Chatham proposes an address to the king: "for recalling the troops from Boston. This motion was seconded and supported by a long speech in which he represented this measure as a matter of immediate necessity . . . the present situation of the troops rendered them and the Americans continually liable to events, which would cut off the possibility of a reconciliation . . . this mark of affront and good-will on our side, will remove all jealousy and apprehension on the other and instantaneously produce the happiest effects to both." In addition, Lord Chatham condemns all the recent laws and measures relating to America, and warns the ministers "of the humiliating disgrace, of repeating those proceedings on necessity, which they refused to do from other motives." He is said to have concluded his speech with these words: "If the ministers thus persevere in misleading and misleading the king, I will not say that they can alienate the affections of his subjects from his crown, but I will say that they will make his weariness— I will not say that the king is betrayed, but I will pronounce that—the kingdom is undone!" —Am. Reg., (1775), 47-48.

In an address to Colden, the members of the assembly say: "We are informed by the lowest people of the seven States of the Colonies, and impressed with a due Sense of the fatal Consequences attending the unhappy Dispute between Great Britain and his Majesty's American Dominions, we feel the most affecting Anxiety at this alarming Crisis. Fully convinced that the Happiness of our present Measures, we shall exercise the important Trust they have reposed in us, with Firmness and Fidelity; and with Calmness and Deliberation, pursue the most probable Means to obtain a Redress of our Grievances . . . Anxious for the Interest and Happiness of our respective States: and for the Re-establishment of Harmony with Great-Britain, we shall Dis- countenance every Measure which may tend to increase our Distress; and, by our Conduct, shew ourselves truly desirous of a cordial and permanent Reconciliation with our Parent Kingdom." —Assemb., Jan. 25.

"The public is informed "That the Town Clerk's Office is removed to the House lately occupied by John Jay, Esq.; in the Broad-Way, next Door to the one in which the late Mr. Chambers lived." —N. Y. Merc., Jan. 21, 1775.

Colden informs Dartmouth that the assembly's address (see Jan. 20) has given him so much satisfaction that he is sending it to England immediately. He adds: "It was some days before a sufficient number of the members of Assembly got to town . . . and there are still twelve of them absent; which has occasioned the House to put off the farther consideration of voluntary impressing the business to the seventh of next month . . . It is thought, my Lord, that there [are] at least as many friends to Government among the absent members, as advocates for the late congress and that the House will therefore when they are all together, be able to act up to the sentiments of their address—Every Madication that rests upon this plan can very justly be looked upon as an appropiation to the Proceedings of the Congress which is the grand point [they] aim to carry" (see Jan 26). —N. Y. Col. Doc., VIII: 530.

A gentleman in Philadelphia, in a letter to a New Yorker says: "I am not without hopes that a Petition will be sent to our Assembly, at their meeting next month, to rescind their approbation of the Proceedings of Congress. Nothing but a shameful fear of popular resentment ever could have extorted from them such a Resolve. Your Assembly is revered by all sensible men in this City, for their great prudence and undaunted resolution in first making a stand against lawless usurpers of power, and violators of liberty; from that period I date the fall of anarchy, and the commencement of good order."—Am. Arch., I: 1180; cf. Feb. 6.

"Samuel Baldwin petitions for "Leave to Surrender to this board his Lease of Peck's Slip's a ferry on the 3rd of February or May next on his paying his rent to the day of his surrendering up the same." The common council gives him permission to do so on May 1, and orders that the ferry be advertised to be sold on March 20 (q.v.).—M. C. G. VIII: 75. The advertisement appeared in the N. Y. Merc., Feb. 6, 1775 and in Rivington's Gazetteer, Feb. 9, 1775.

A New Yorker, in a letter to Bonton, says: "The present Assembly has existed since 1769, and most of the Members who were against an inquiry into the measures of the Congress [see Jan. 20] as preparatory to the approbation of them, have long since forfeited the esteem of the virtuous citizens, and are before looking for favours from the Crown for themselves and families. Others of them were imposed on from mere ignorance, and some from fear . . . In short, sir, no virtuous or spirited act could be expected from a House which had, by its votes, violated the right of Elections—suspended the Habeas Corpus Act, deprived the subject of his right to a trial by a jury, and pronounced for six years for Troops kept here for the express purpose of enslaving America; but although these miscreants are the legal Representatives of the people, yet I can assure you they are not their true Representatives, and therefore you have no cause to fear that this City will depart from the Association." —Am. Arch., I: 1180; cf. Feb. 17.

He has on hand for sale, "The most elegant furniture, made of mahogany of the very best quality, such as chest of drawers, chest upon chest, closet presses, desks, desks [sic] and book cases of different sorts, chairs of many different and new patterns, beaux tables, dining tables, card tables, breakfast tables, tea tables and many other sorts of cabinet work."—*N. The lieutenant-governor, with great satisfaction, reports to Dartmouth the action of the assembly on Jan. 26 (p. v.). He then goes on to say: "When your Lordship considers that every American Assembly which has met since the Congress was held at Philadelphia, have approved of and adopted the Proceedings of the Congress ... the loyalty and firmness of the Assembly of this Province, and of the People in general, will appear in a very striking light ... I have strong expectations, my Lord, that the conduct of this Province will every day more evidently shew the loyalty and affection of the People for their gracious Sovereign, and their general desire for a Reconciliation with great Britain."—*N. T. Col. Docr., VIII: 531-32.

The house of commons debates "upon the Disturbances in North America." Previous to the debate, "the avenues leading to the House were so extremely crowded, that there was not room for the most modest orders and chamber called to be cleared. "Lord North recapitulated the information contained in the papers; discriminated the temper of the colonies; pointed out those where moderation prevailed, and where violence was concealed under the appearance of duty and submission ... He spoke of acts which he asserted were employed on both sides the Atlantic to raise this seditionist spirit. He drew a comparison between the burdens borne by the people of Great Britain and those of America. The annual taxes of Great Britain, he said, amounted to ten millions sterling, exclusive of the expenses of collection; and the number of inhabitants of Great Britain, he supposed to be eight millions, therefore every inhabitant paid at least 25 shillings annually. The total taxes of the continent of America amount to no more than 75,000 £; the number of inhabitants of America were three millions, therefore an inhabitant of America paid no more than sixpence annually. He then proceeded to lay down the legislative supremacy of parliament; stated the measures adopted by America to resist it, and the almost universal confederacy of the colonies in that resistance. Here, he said, he laid his foot on the great barrier, which separated, and for the present disunited both countries; and on this ground alone of resistance they were rated every argument leading to the motion he intended to make."

The measures which he suggested to punish the colonies were "to send more force; [and] to bring a temporary Act to put a stop to all the foreign trade of New England, particularly to their fisheries at New-Bedford; to seal all the foreign ships that come into New England. Whenever any of the colonies shall make a proper application to us, we shall be ready to afford them every just and reasonable indulgence; but that, at the same time, we consider it our indispensable duty, humbly to beseech His Majesty, that his Majesty will take the most effectual measures to enforce due obedience to the laws and authority of the supreme legislature; and that we beg leave to assure his Majesty, that it is our fixed resolution, at the hazard of our lives and properties, to stand by his Majesty, against all rebellious attempts, in the maintenance of the just rights of his Majesty and the two Houses of Parliament."

Mr. Danning answered as follows (in part): "You passed Acts in the last session, which instead of governing America, carried tyranny into the bowels of America. ... You executed those acts by force of arms; the people of the colonies thinking themselves tyrannically used, ... convened a general congress; the deputies met in that congress, came to resolutions declaratory of their ideas of their submission unto Britain, full of duty and allegiance to the King, and respect towards parliament. ... A people ... professing the utmost loyalty and obedience to the King, and using no violence against his troops, nor being any where in arms, cannot, but by the utmost perversion of sense and expression be denounced rebels. ... I insist that every appearance of riot, disorder, tumult, and sedition which the noble lords has so faithfully noticed in these papers, arises not from disobedience, treason, or rebellion, but is created by the conduct of those, who are anxious to establish despotism."* * * * *

Attorney General Thurlow then called attention to the fact that "the several provincial meetings have ordered an arrangement of the militia ... and the inhabitants of the colonies are so alert in obeying these orders, that they go beyond the bounds of the legislature, and seek to lay upon the King's artillery and stores; the whole continent joining in one universal voice of disobedience to the legislature of this country. ... By every principle of policy we ought to render ourselves as secure as possible; and if we heard that such menacing circumstances as I have mentioned were breaking out in Scotland, in Ireland, or Cornwall, would not the ministry deserve impeachment. Should they wait till all parties had joined, and were on one march to London?"

"Among the other speakers was Charles Fox, who pointed out "the injustices, the inexpediency, and folly of the motion; prophesiš defeat on one side of the water, and ruin and punishment on the other. He further said "that the measures taken by his Majesty's servants tend rather to widen than to heal the unhappy differences ... between Great Britain and America."

"Mr. Gruger "strongly recommended to all parties to go into an examination of the questions free from their present prejudice. ... He then attempted to vindicate the Americans both in courage and gallantry."

Captain Luttrell pointed out the necessity of keeping at home all of the already depleted fleet. "Can we believe," he said, "that the French and Spanish Courts would have ever been so forward in any of these disputes ... or that they have not at this very hour, priests and emissaries in America ... to blow the coals of contention between America and this country? Do we not know, Sir, that the Spaniards have never abandoned the claim they set up to Jamaica ...? Or can we believe that the French will ever forget the manner in which you made reprisals, previous to the commencement of the late war?"

The solicitor-general concluded the day's debate. He said "that descriptions of the immense consequences of American trade were arguments rather against the opening members than for them; for the greater the consequences of the commerce, the greater the care ought to be, and the firmer the policy that was to preserve it; that the question was not now the importance of the American colonies, but the possession of the colonies at all."—*Parl. Hist. of Eng., XVIII: 211-33.

"The ship "James" arrives from Glasgow with a cargo of coal and dry goods, but as importation is no longer permitted, a strict watch is kept "to prevent the landing of any Goods in a clandestine manner. Some 'Ministerial tools' assemble a few vagrants with a view to landing the goods, but these 'banditti' are soon suppressed by the inhabitants. Thinking that the captain has her stationed "four miles below the City." On Feb. 9, she was again brought into the harbour by an officer and some of the men belonging to the 'King-Fisher.'" As soon as it was known that the Ship was coming up again, the people were greatly excited together in accordance with the captain's landing, and instantly went to the Captain's lodgings, seized him, and after conducting him through many of the principal streets, attended by a

A Philadelphia writer to his correspondent in New York:

"It is much to be lamented that your Province has not yet adopted the Proceedings of the Congress; but a faithful adherence to the Association will go far to remove the infamy which must certainly fall upon that Province, whose defection may tend to defeat the virtuous struggles in which we are engaged. We observe a number of publications in Rivington's Paper from your City, to which there is not the least spark of credit due. They dare not offer them to our Printers, because their notorious falsehood would ruin the credit of the Paper." —Am. Arch., I: 1215. Cf. Jan. 35.

The Vestry of the City of New-York, Acquaint the Public, That in and by an order of the Court General Quarter Sessions of the Peace, now holding for the city and county of New York, they were appointed overseers of the several public wells and pumps within the said city, for the purpose of preventing any destruction of, or injury to, the same. The persons who are desirous of contracting for the work attend a meeting at the tavern of John Simmons, near the City-Hall" (see Oct. 8, 1770) on Feb. 14. —N. Y. Merc., Feb. 15, 1775. For the creation of the first vestry in the city and for the responsibilities of that body, see Sept. 22, 1664. These vestrymen were civil, not ecclesiastical, officials elected among the voters. —Col. Lacon, I: 518, 51: 35; 53: 86. After 1745, they numbered fourteen, two each ward, with two wardens elected by the city at large. The city vestry being dissenters, at times clashed with Trinity's vestry.

—Hist. of Trin. Church, I: 245. For the vestry as organized under the British military regime, see Dec. 27, 1777.

Col. Coode writes to Capt. Montagu of the "King Fisher": "Albo' No Complaint or Information has been laid before Me by any Person, relative to the ship from Glasgow which arrived last Week in this Port [see Feb. 21, at the act of Outrage and Violence by which she was carried from the wharf & detain'd near the Watering Place is so notorious, that I thought it was my Duty to take the Opinion and advice of his Majesty's Council upon it, who have advised Me to apply to you to go down to the ship and to order the master your Assistance." On Feb. 22, Col. Coode wrote to the captain again: "The Letter of this Day which I had the favour to receive from you informing me that . . . the ship with arm'd Men on board, close to the Glasgow Ship, to prevent her from coming up to Town, I have laid before his Majesty's Council; and by their advice I do request that you will take care that no Injury be done or any restraint laid by the said Sloop, on the Glasgow Ship; and that if the Master of the Ship do apply to you, you do assist him in bringing his Vessell up to Town, or give him every other necessary aid he may ask for." —Golden Papers in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1871), 384-87.

On Feb. 20, in a letter to General Gage, Colden said: "I was much shagre'd that a ship which arrived here from Glasgow should be sent away with her Cargo in compliance to the orders of the Congress. The Capt. was a stupid Body who would neither make a complaint nor ask for assistance. None of the Conspirators of the Association, the Goods, Wares, or Merchandise which should be imported after the first Day of February, should be sent back in the same Vessel in which they were imported." The author then publishes the names of those present at the meeting.

On Feb. 2 (p. v.), he continues, the committee decided that the ship "James" could not land her cargo, and at a meeting on Feb. 3, reiterated its decision of Jan. 30. The writer concludes: "What we must now think of the Impudence and Wickedness of those Men who committed last Saturday morning the Ship "James" to the Wharf, in order to land her Cargo, and thereby plunge this City into Confusion. Are three or four Men of no Consideration, Tools to the Enemies of our Country—to be suffered with Impunity, to attempt a Violation of the Engagements entered into by our Delegates, in our behalf? Are they, and not the Committee [if] to speak the Sense of the City. Forbid it Heaven! Such Men must incur your Indignation. For your Duty, your Honour, your Liberty, is highly concerned, to support your Engagements to the other Colonies, which can only be done by supporting the Determination of your Committee, which has been sufficiently stated to you." —From an original broadside in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

Mr. Bayard, deputy-secretary, brings to the assembly from Colden "sundry accounts of monies expended in repairs Fort George and the Battery . . . amounting to £64 16s." —Assemb. Jour. (1775), 36. On March 22, this account was ordered paid. —Ibid. 84.

Col. Schuyler moves that certain letters from the committee of correspondence of Connecticut, the answer of the New York committee, and a letter from the assembly to Edmund Burke, all written in 1774, "be forthwith entered on the journals of this house, and that the clerk of this house be ordered to deliver copies of the same to the printer of this colony, that they may be by him inserted in the public newspapers." The motion is lost by a vote of 16 to 9. —Assemb. Jour. (1775), 37.

The ship "Sedna" arrives at the Watering Place, about three leagues from this City [New York], in nine weeks from London. The Pilots, we are informed, were ordered not to bring her up, lest her being in the Harbour should give uneasiness to the City. The same night, a Sloop with some members of the Sub-Committee of Observation [see Jan. 30], and other citizens on board, went down and anchored near the said ship, in order to observe her conduct, and they will continue there till she departs. The Ship wants a new bowsprit; when she is furnished with this, and other necessities for her voyage, she will be despatched without delay." —Am. Arch., I: 1257.

By a vote of fifteen to none, the assembly refuses to thank Philip Livingston, Isaac Low, John Jay, John Alsop, James Duane, Simon Boornum, William Floyd, and Henry Wiser, "for their faithful and judicious discharge of the trust reposed in them by the good people of this colony, at the continental congress, held at Phila-"

18 In a letter to Meurig. Remington & Briggs, of London, John Thumman writes: "Politics Runs so high here that we do not know any Property is safe amongst us. The neighborhood of the Provinces so depend on the Submission & have done Little towards an accommodation that should as Little be done by Parliament all will be confusion...we begin to think what Property we have in New England very precarious as the most of the Inhabitants in this Place are averse to any Violence & wish to support Law & order we are abused by our neighbors because we do not run into the same violent measures with them yet I dare be bold to say this province would be as firm in any constitutional opposition as any of them."—From "Extracts from the Letter Books of John Thumman, Jr.," in Hist. Mag. and see, IV., 291.

Mr. John Schoonmaker, of Ulster County, overhares two negroes planting to set fire to a number of houses in the vicinity. This being reported to the magistrates, the negroes were imprisoned. "The Motive for this Conspiracy, was the Recovery of their Freedom from the Compulsion of Powder and Ball was found with several Negroes and there are said to be Advices in Town, that...seventeen or eighteen more have been committed to Goal." A report has been current that the negroes were to have been joined by five or six hundred Indians, but there seems to be no foundation for this. Ibid., VIII, 224. The negroes were to be divided into parties, "to fire the houses, cry fire, and kill the people as they came out."—N. Y. Merc., March 6, 1775. "From Jamaica, on Long-Island, we are also informed, that several of the Negroes at that Place, were last week committed to Goal there, on account of a Conspiracy said to have been discovered in them to destroy the White People; and we are told most of the Slaves for many Miles round are concerned in this Plot."—Ibid., March 6, 1775. On April 27, the Journal reported: "We can inform the public from good authority, that sundry negroes have lately been committed to the goal at the White Plains in Westchester county, upon suspicion of conspiring the death of the whites."—N. Y. Jour., April 27, 1775.

The ferry to be established "from the Dock belonging to this Corporation, at the Bear Market at the North River to Hobock," is leased for two years to Hermanus Talman at an annual rent of £100. Ibid., VIII, 226. On May 8, the power of mayor & order was suspended by the Interim, and ordered to be delivered to Talman.—Ibid., VIII: 97. Talman must have made some private arrangement with Cornelius Haring, for, on May 11, the latter opened the ferry (see May 11). As late as May 24, 1776, Talman was considered the lessee.—M. C., VIII, 140. For more about this ferry, see Landmark Map Ref. 64.3, 614.

By a vote of 15 to 10, the general assembly refuses to thank the merchants and inhabitants of the city for "their repeated, disinterested, public spirited, and patriotic conduct, in declining the importation, or receiving of goods from Great Britain, and for their firm adherence to the association entered into and recommended by the Grand Continental Congress, held at Philadelphia."—Assemb. Jour. (1775), 40.

The provincial assembly of New York meets with censure from the Pennsylvania Journal for having "refused even to consider the Petition of the Continental Congress" (see Dec. 2). In a way suggesting modern journalism, the members of the government's council and the New York City representatives in the assembly are listed, with occasional caustic comment against the name of an individual.—Penn. Jour., Feb. 22, 1775. For an expression of opinion, see N. Y. Jour., March 25.

35 A motion "that the sense of this house be taken, on the necessity of appointing delegates for this colony, to meet the delegates for the other colonies on this continent, in General congress," is lost by a vote of 17 to 9.—Assemb. Jour. (1775), 44–45. See April 5.

36 Samuel Seabury, on leave from the New-Jersey Westnharners, arrives and states that he "Hath opened a School in that Town, and offers his Service to prepare young Gentlemen for the College, the Comping-House, or any genteel Business for which Parents or Guardians may design them. Children who know their Letters, will be admitted into his School, and taught to read English with propriety, and to write it with a fair Hand, and with grammatical accuracy. They will be instructed in Arithmetic, if required, in its utmost extent; and in the Elements of Geometry; in Trigo-ometry, Navigation, Astro.—The Latin and Greek Languages will be taught those who are intended for a learned Education.

There are already eleven Students under Mr. Seabury's Care, and as soon as the Number of Scholars shall require it, a good University will be provided. And no Care or Diligence shall be wanting to give Satisfaction to those Gentlemen, who shall favor him with the Education of their Children.

Proper attention will be paid to the young Gentlemen, that they be kept clean and decent, and that they behave with propriety; and as the most attention is to be paid to the discharge the Duties and Offices of Life with Integrity and Virtue, particular Care will be taken to explain them the Principles of Morality, and the Christian Religion, by frequent short Lectures, adapted to their Capacity.

Board, (Washing included) may be had, in unexceptionable Families, at about twenty Pounds per Ann., and the Tuition will be six Pounds, New-York Currency, and eight Shillings for Firewood.

Westchester is about nineteen Miles from New-York, by Land, and about fifteen by Water; and a Water-passage may be had almost every Day, when the Weather will permit, in good safe Boats;—see Rivington's Gazetteer, 1775. In the N. Y. Jour., April 11, four young gentlemen from the island of Jamaica, one from Montreal, four children of gentlemen now in England and others from New York and the country.—Dawson, Westchester County in the Rev., 139. For the said on Seabury, see Nov. 22.

The Gazetteer reports a meeting of the "committee of observation" (see Nov. 22, 1774). It is proposed that they "nominate delegates, to the continental congress, for the approbation of the city and county," but being opposed, the final resolution of the committee is deferred to the next meeting.—Rivington's Gazetteer, March 1, 1775. See May 15.

At a meeting of the New York committee of correspondence, it is ordered "That as the Non-Importation of India Tea is to take place in a few days, the third article of the Association be printed in all the publick Papers of this City, in order that the inhabitants be apprized thereof."—Am. Arch., 1: 1299. This order, together with the third article of the "Association," appeared in Rivington's Gazetteer, March 1, 1775. The third article reads: "As a non-consumption agreement, strictly adhered to, will be an effectual security for the observation of the non-importation, we, as above, solemnly agree and associate, that, from this day, we will not pur- chase or use any goods, wares or merchandise, of East-India Com- pany, or any on which a duty hath been, or shall be paid; and from and after the first day of March next, we will not purchase or use any East-India Tea whatever; nor will we, nor shall any person for or under us, purchase or use any of those goods, wares or mercha- ntest, which we have agreed not to import, which we shall have cause to suspect, were imported after the first day of December, except such as come under the rules and directions of the tenth article hereafter mentioned."

"By private Sale, All that valuable house, many years known by the name of the Queen's Head Tavern, near the Exchange, is three stories high, with a tile and lead roof, has fourteen fire places, a most excellent large Kitchen, fine dry Cellars, with good and convenient offices, sufficient for a large family, the business above-mentioned, a merchant, or any other trader, is a corner house, very open and airy, and in the most complete repair, near to the new Ferry. Further particulars and a good title will be given by Samuel Francis, who, so far from declining his present business, is deter- mined to use every utmost endeavour, to carry on the same to the pleasure and satisfaction of his friends, and the public in general."—N. Y. Merc., Feb. 27, and April 17, 1775. Francis did not sell the house until ten years later, and continued to keep tavern here until the Revolution, and again after 1785 until its sale, on Apr. 13, 1785 (q. v.).

The New York Hospital (see Sept. 3, 1773), "at Randelgh, a large pile of buildings lately erected and nearly finished," is almost totally destroyed by "Rebels, Composters, and Westnharners." The Latri, and the Rooms lathered with combustible Materials, the Flames spread so fast, that before any Help could be called, they were got to too great a Height to be suppressed, and the whole wooden Part of the Building, the erection of which had been the Work of many Months, was, in about one Hour, reduced to Ashes.—It is unknown by what Means the Accident happened, but it is supposed that the Feb. shavings might have been left too near the Fire.—It is hoped, how- ever, that Charity, which reared this Structure, will cause the Washington to resettle the Field of the Distressed Poor.”—N. Y. Jour., March 2, 1775. The legislature responded to the appeal for aid on April 1 (p. 96).

Mar. The committee of correspondence summons the freeholders and freemen to meet at the exchange on March 6 (p. 96), to “signify their sense of the best method of choosing . . . Delegates to the second continental congress, and whether they will appoint a certain number of persons, to meet such Deputies as the Counties may elect for that purpose, and join with them in appointing out of their body, Delegates for the next Congress.”—Am. Arch., II, 244. A protest objected to this action of the committee of 60. For their protest, see March 4.

The general committee of Charleston, S. C., writes to the New York committee: “It was with equal surprise and concern that we read in the public prints what passed in your House of Assembly on the 26th of January ibid., with respect to the proceedings of the General Congress. It is impossible for us, at this distance, to conjecture the reasons which induced the Assembly to refuse their formal assent to the Solemn Agreement of all these Colonies. . . . We are not insensible of the consequence of your proceeding, and whether you do or do not insert in the Ministry insensible of it? We are well aware of your unhappy situation, and of the many artful measures that have been, and now are, taking, if possible, to throw you into confusion . . . We are not ignorant of that crowd of placemen, of contractors, of officers, and needy dependents upon the town, who are constantly employed in their Search. We know the dangerous tendency of being the headquarters of America for many years. All these things, though they necessarily tend to clog the wheels of public spirit, yet do not cause us to doubt of publick virtue, as a Colony: nay, we assure ourselves, that your love to Constitutional Liberty, to justice, and your posterity, however depressed for a little while, will at last surmount all obstacles, and do honour to New York.”—Am. Arch., II: 12.

Colden writes to Dartmouth that “the non-importation association of the Congress is ever rigidly maintained in this Place. The enemies of Government do all they can to propagate an opinion that the Ministry will yet draw back and quiet the Colonies by a Repeal.” He sends him “a Pamphlet lately published in this Place,” saying: “We have had several good political pieces published here this winter this is esteemed one of the best, it is wrote by MP Galloway of Philadelphia.”—N. J. Col. Doc., VIII: 544-45.

The pamphlet was a cordial Examination of the Mutual Claims of Great Britain and the Colonies, etc. (ibid., 544, foot-note).

The Whigs of Newport, R. I., draw up the following resolution: “Whereas, a certain James Rivington, a Printer and Stationer in this Place, has been recently harried by the haughty dignifying spirit, hath, for a long time, in the dirty Gazetteer, and in pamphlets, if possible still more dirty, uniformly persists [sic] in publishing every falsehood which his own wicked imagination, or the imaginations of others of the same stamp, as ignominious perhaps in mischief as himself, could suggest or fabricate, that had a tendency to spread jealousies, fear, discord, and disunion through this country; and by partial and false representations of facts, hath endeavoured to pervert truth and to deceive and mislead the innocents into wrong conceptions of facts reported, and wrong sentiments respecting the measures now carrying on for the recovery and establishment of our rights, and the supporters of those measures . . . Removed, therefore . . . that no further dealings or correspondence ought to be had with the said James Rivington; and we recommend it to every person who takes his Paper . . . immediately to drop the same.”—Am. Arch., II, 164. Similar resolutions were adopted at Freehold, N. J., on March 6 (4 Am. Arch., II: 56-57) and at Ulster County, N. Y., on March 16 (ibid.: 152). See March 29.

This City, after being one of the most refractory on the continent, has become the most submissive and obedient in all America, for they have not only built excellent barracks for the army, but also supply the troops with every necessary of life; and lastly the Assembly voted 2000l. for the current year, and notwithstanding the passing the Stamp Act, and duties on paper, glass, printers' ink, and tea, and their Assembly annihilated by tyranny, yet that very Assembly, when afterwards suffered to meet, immediately granted fifteen hundred pounds to be invested in an equinquire state of his Majesty, on the arrival of which it was spent in a Square near the Head of the distressed Poor.”—ibid., 152. See Mar. 4, in a rescript on the 2nd of the 1st month, the Governor Colden, with his wretched council and assembly, the Mayor, Aldermen, with the military, went in procession on the Spot, where, after surrounding the leaden horse and his rider, the common cryer made proclamation for the whole country to be recovered, and which was made by the Mayor, Mr. Coke, in which he recited the many blessings they enjoy under this pious reign; after which they drank his majesty’s health, and returned to their respective homes, amidst the Hisses of the people.

The wretches above mentioned met in Council and Assembly, have by a majority voted, not to obey the General Congress resolution, but to protest against and oppose all the Continent of America, who are making so noble a stand in defence of their liberty, whilst the people of this Province wish to do the same; but they are unhappily in the hands of dependant Placemen, Contractors, Informers, a refugee Roman Catholic Family, and other, the veriest reptiles on earth. This therefore is the only Colomy, on which the British junto must rely to enslave America.”—From newspaper clipping in the Upcott Coll., IV: 299.

A Londoner writes: “The friends of America, on the arrival of the Packet, were greatly alarmed at a report, that New York was disaffected to the common cause, and determined to break the Resolves of the Congress, especially that of non-importation; however we had the pleasure, from the best accounts, to find it otherwise, and that we had little reason to fear the late Resolutions of your Assembly would produce any change in your proceedings.”—Am. Arch., II: 24-25; cf. March 4.

The notice of March 1 (p. 96) meets with the disapproval of the conservative element in the city. John Thurmans, as chairman of a meeting of a “very respectable number of . . . friends to constitutional liberty,” issues an address to the Freeholders of the City and County of New York. These “Friends” oppose the meeting of March 6 (p. 96) because “the sense of the city concerning the choice of delegates ought to be taken in a most satisfactory manner, for which, next Monday is a day much too early.” They think that, if the meeting is postponed until April 20, “it is highly probable that we shall have such advices from England as will enable us then effectually to determine on the most expedient mode of acting, whereas in the present situation of things, we may resolve on that which we may soon have reason to repent of.” For this reason, they ask the people to vote (on March 6) “for postponing the said Meeting until Thursday 20th of April next, as you will thereby prevent the many ill consequences, which will probably ensue, on so hasty a determination, and give yourselves time to deliberate on the most expedient mode of benefiting your Country, and securing your invaluable liberties.”

A firm form of protest from the radicals, who, on the same day, issue several answers to it. “A Tory” tells John Thurmans “That the sense of this city on the question now before them, may as well be taken on Monday next, as at any time: For although it may take much time to make him understand it, his fellow-citizens labour under no such incapacity . . . That advices from England have nothing to do with our appointing Delegates for the next Congress, and therefore that we may as well wait till the convulsion of the Pope, as the arrival of the Packet . . . that between the 20th of April, and the 26th of May ibid., there is not sufficient time to write to, and receive an answer from all the counties.”

Another writer, signing himself Americanus,” addressing the “Freeholders and Freemen,” declares: “Their [the Conservatives] intimation that the day is too short, for your consideration, is an insult upon your understandings: All of our sister colonies, have hardly chosen their Delegates and shall we delay concurring in a measure, that has been the subject of consideration, ever since the last Congress? You cannot be ignorant that if we do not appoint Delegates, all the Colonies will, and must withhold their trade and connection with us; whereby . . . we shall not only act a disabled part, but our interests made from abroad, yearly we shall be destitute of many necessaries which we now receive from them, and the next Congress may be induced to enter any Measures against us, for our perfidy. . . . We have already chosen a respectable and approved Committee; as such, let us strenuously support them in the measures they have adopted and frustrate the wicked attempts of our enemies.”
CHRONOLOGY : THE REVOLUTIONARY PERIOD : 1763-1776

1775 There is also an address "To the Inhabitants of the City and County of New-York." By "A Citizen." He pleads: "consider what you are about—take care that you don't become a bye word, and a reproach throughout the world, and through out all ages—You have raised your patriot stock, and preserved it still—you have listed to be free, be so still... Go then, on Monday, to the Exchange, and delay not to pursuant the advice of the Congress, by forthwith declaring, that Deputies shall be chosen to meet those from the other Counties, and in conjunction with them, appoint Delegates for the next Congress."—From the broadside in the N. Y. Pub. Library. The one signed by John Thurman is, by misprint, dated 1774.

A letter from London contains the following: "The news which the Packet brought us of the conduct of the people of New-York, has filled every heart with joy, and employed every tongue in your praise. Even faction itself admires in solemn silence. Pursue the same line of mild and prudent counsel and conduct, and you will secure the liberties of your Country, and obtain immortal gratitude from the posterity of even your rivals."—4 Am. Arch., III: 29; Cf. March 2.

6 The meeting previously announced (see March 1) takes place at the exchange. In preparation for this meeting, a "Union Flag, with a red field, was hoisted on the Liberty-pole, where, at nine o'clock, the friends of Freedom assembled." They marched to the exchange, "attended by music." Later (see March 4), members of the City were "addressed" by some of the Army and Navy, some of the Mayor's Council, and those Members of the House of Representatives, who had refused taking into consideration the proceedings of the Congress [see Jan. 26], together with Officers of the Customs, and other delegates to the state. Two Tories, William Cunningham (see Aug. 4, 1774) and John Hill, are handled roughly by "a mob of above two hundred men" near the liberty pole. The former is called upon to "go down on his knees and damn bl. Popish King George," but he explains instead "God bless King George." This enraged the people that they "dragged him through the green, tore the cloaths off his back, and robbed him of his watch." Hill was treated in a like manner.—Rivington's Gazetteer, March 9, 1775. Cunningham became later the British provost-martial (see Sept. 16, 1776).

7 The President of the Continental Congress, May 1774, 4 (p. 9), "to fix on a suitable place for building a government house, and to prepare a plan or plans, and an estimate of the expense," report that they think "the most proper place... is in Fort George, either in the front towards the broad way, or in the rear near the back curtain, provided the front curtain be pulled down." They present plans for the building and an estimate of the expense, which are referred to a committee of the whole house.—Assemb. Jour. (1775), 59-60.

8 By a vote of 14 to 12, the assembly adopts the following resolution:

1. That the people of New York "owe the same faith and allegiance to his most gracious Majesty King George the third, that are due to him from his subjects in Great Britain."

2. That they owe obedience "to all acts of parliament calculated for the general weal of the whole empire, and the due regulation of the commerce, and to the authority thereof and not inconsistent with the essential rights and liberties of Englishmen."

3. That "it is essential to freedom, and the undoubted right of Englishmen, that no taxes be imposed on them with their consent, given personally, or by their representatives in general assemblies."

4. That the parliamentary acts for raising revenue, for extending the jurisdiction of the admiralty courts, and for depriving the colonists of trial by jury "are destructive to freedom, and subversive of the rights and liberties of the colonists."

5. That the practice of seizing inhabitants of the colony suspected of being in favor of other orders and sending them out of the colony to be tried "is dangerous to the lives and liberties of his Majesty's American subjects."—Assemb. Jour. (1775), 65-66.

9 The general assembly resolves to grant $40,000 towards rebuilding the hospital.—Assemb. Jour. (1775), 67. On March 16, the governors of the hospital thanked the assembly for the resolution.

10 On or about this date, a broadside, addressed "To the Freeholders and freemen of the City and County of New-York," and signed "A Freeman," was publicly published. This attacked the city committee for suggesting that the delegates to the second continental congress be chosen by a provincial convention instead of by the inhabitants at large. It urged the inhabitants to resist the holding of such a convention because many of the counties would refuse to send representatives and because the members should probably assume powers not delegated to them. In conclusion, "A Freeman" called upon the people of the city to re-elect the five men who had attended the first congress and to allow the other counties to choose their representatives separately.—From an original in the N. Y. Pub Library. For an answer to this, see March 14.

11 A letter from London contains this news: "The plan of this accursed Ministry is, to divide and govern, in hopes of completing their principle of slavery, by the base advantages and preferences now held out to New-York, North-Carolina, and Georgia... with what contempt ought the base majority of the New-York Assembly to be held! Have they not been honoured with that disapprobation, to wit: Tarring and Feathering? It ought to be administered as a deterrant to others. For if that detection had not happened, we had the utmost reason to expect other measures would have been adopted than those villainous Acts passed and passing."—4 Am. Arch., III: 148; Cf. March 4.

63. William Colton, in a message to the assembly, says: "The very insufficient state of the public office of the Secretary of the province [see Ill. 957] is obvious. The records and papers, which are of the greatest importance to the whole province, are, from the ruinous state of the house, daily exposed to the worst effects of the weather.—Assemb. Jour. (1775), 71. On March 22, Gerard Bancker was allowed a sum, not to exceed $500, "to be laid out by him in repairing the Secretary's office of this colony."—Ibid, (1775), 84.

James Rivering, having printed in his paper (see Feb. 27) a paragraph which the New- York committee of correspondence called "entirely false and groundless," two members of the committee report on their interview with him. When asked what authority he had for the statement, Rivington told them "he published it from common report, but would be more careful in the future, and was willing to contradict it." The committee thereupon resolves, "that common report is not sufficient authority for any Printer in this City to publish any matters as facts relative to this Committee, and tending to expose them to the resentment of their Constituents, and the odium of the Colonies; for that the transactions of this Committee are kept secret, and must remain so, and that the publishing of such reports, by applying to any of the Members." In the Gazetteer of March 16, Rivington objected to the committee members' report, and claimed that he actually said: "what was related in my Paper was credit; yet if they would furnish me with accounts of their Proceedings, I might be able to print them without error."—4 Am. Arch., III: 92-93.

"Philaleuthers," in an address "To the Freemen and Freeholders of the City and County of New-York," headed "No Place, Pensioners, Ministerial Hires, Papery, or Arbitrary Power," advises the people to resist British tyranny and uphold the candidates of the city committee. He assails the "Monums and Tools of Power," who, he says, assembled at the Exchange on March 6 (p. 3), "with a View of opposing the Nomination of Deputies to serve in Provincial Congress." He adds: "There are Letters in Town, received per the Packet, which mention that Lord North declared he had received Letters from some of the principal Men in the City of New-York, urging him to pursue his Measures against the Colonies, and promising him their aid, to carry the same into Execution."—Can there be the least Doubt of the Existence of such Materials among us, after the Proceedings on Monday last" (March 6).—From an original in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

"A Tinker" issues a notice "To the Free and Respectable Mechanics, And other Inhabitants of the City and County of New-York," in which he praises the plan of a provincial convention. He says: "This is the only way to get a proper representation of the Colony as the Assembly has not taken the matter. Let your suffrages be given freely. Mark the men who oppose this equitable mode, as foes to your liberty... Bebold them, as those who are doing all in their power to disturb your

"It is confidently asserted that 63,000 pounds sterling have been remitted from the treasury in England, to be distributed among some hungry d—gs at New York."—N. Y. Jour., March 30, 1775.

He was the day appointed for the sale of the ferry from Pecks Slip (see Jan. 16), it is "Struck off to Thomas Ivory for one year from the first of May next for Sixty two pounds, and Subject to the Conditions of Sale by him Signed."—M. C. C., VIII: 83.

Edmund Burke delivers in parliament his celebrated speech on American colonies (see Jan. 16). He commences with a fervid description of the situation, which he considers the very start that which he which he observes is peace. "Not peace through the medium of war. Not peace to be hunted through the labyrinth of intricate and endless negotiations. Not peace to arise out of universal discord, borrowed from principle in all parts of the empire. . . . It is simply peace sought in a natural course and its ordinary haunts. It is peace sought in the spirit of peace, and laid in principles purely pacific. . . ."

"Peace implies reconciliation; and where there has been a material dispute, reconciliation does in a manner imply concession on both parts of the question. In the case of council it is not difficult in affirming that the proposal ought to originate from us. Great and acknowledged force is not impaired, either in effect or in opinion, by an unwillingness to exert itself. The superior power may offer peace with honor and with safety. Such an offer, from such a power, will be attributed to magnanimity. But the concessions of the weak are the concessions of fear." He observes that the questions which must be decided are whether parliament ought to concede and what the concession ought to be. He then examines, with minuteness and accuracy, the internal and external the natural and accidental circumstances of the colonies; he considers them with respect to situation, resources, extent, numbers, growing in population, rapid increase in commerce, fisheries, and agriculture; and that from these he points out their great strength and importance. England's export trade had increased tenfold between 1704 and 1772, and the exports in 1772 to the colonies alone were almost equal to the entire export trade of Great Britain in 1704.

After giving these statistics, Burke continues: "America, gentlemen, I say, is a noble object. It is an object well worth fighting for. Certainly it is, if fighting a people be the best way of gaining them . . . But I contest . . . my opinion is much more in favor of prudent management than of force; considering force not as an odious but a feeble instrument, for preserving a people so numerous, so active, so growing, so spirited as this, in a profitable and subordinate connection with us."

The Journal gives the list of nominees for deputies (see March 8) who were chosen by the freemen and freeholders to attend the provincial convention (see April 26). It adds: "From the time of the nomination, every article was used (by the same party who have constantly exerted their utmost abilities, to obstruct and discourage every measure of opposition to the tyrannical acts of the British ministry) in order to prevent the election of the Deputies nominated by the Committee, and to frustrate the design of a Provincial Congress [see May 21], and of sending Delegates . . . to the next General Congress [see May 10]. Before the day of election, a great number of pieces were published on both sides; full of artifice on the ministerial part, and of sound weighty argument on the other. Between the two, the argument, and the views of each party, were pretty well understood at the day of decision, when the voters of the Freemen and Freeholders were fairly taken off by the Minions, resulting in a great representation in favour of the committee's nominees.—N. Y. Jour., March 16, 1775.

Gilbert Forbes, a gun-maker, advertises his shop, opposite Hull's Tavern in Broadway.—N. Y. Jour., March 16, 1775.

The common council unanimously approves and adopts a "Plan of the Effects of Specie, Bridewell (see Nov. 22, 1775) drawn by Theophilus Hardenbrook."—M. C. C., VIII: 82.

The news from Newport states: "We are well informed that Gen. Gage has 500 of Rivington's papers regularly sent him every week, before the post marches, and that such and such others are thought most proper to promote the infamous plan of enslaving this country. These papers are doubtless paid for out of the American revenue. Thus, Americans, you already 1775 judgments, increase your animosities, and finally, if possible, to take and destroy you; and though they may possibly come to you with oil on their lips, the poison of asp is under their tongues . . . Are not the men, who now oppose the Deputies the very same who appeared at the Exchange, in company with a train of ministerial tools, such as officers of the navy and army, with their secret run about, house officers; rounders of the King, and their dependents, &c. Men, whose immediate interest it is to support administration; men who would gladly see you enslaved, that they might rob of the fruits of your honest industry . . . Does not their proceedings discover intentions to the same end, with a discrimination sure that you can destroy your peace and safety? They undoubtedly do. I beseech you then, as you regard your own safety, as you are desirous of keeping off that despicable stroke of despotism that is intended for you. Watch the motions of these incendiaries, follow the councils of your virtuous Committee, and a delightful field of freedom lays here you."—From an original in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

The provincial council receives a letter from Gov. Tryon recommending moderate treatment of the people; and one from Lord Dartmouth stating that no delegates ought to be sent to the general congress at Philadelphia. This appears to be a fine declaration against this effect.—Col. Coun. Min., 509.

"Another Freeman" issues an address "To the Freeholders and Freeman of the City of New-York." This contains a justification of the actions of the committee, a plea for sending delegates to the continental congress and for allowing the provincial convention to choose them, and a refutation of the charges made by "A Freeman" on March 10 (a. u.).

On the same day, "A Friend to the Congress" publishes a broadside, addressed "To The Freeholders & Freeman of the City and County of New-York," in favour of the provincial convention. He shows that the five men who represented the city and county in the first congress will not be excluded from the second, for their names are on the list of eleven nominated by the committee.—From originals in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

The "Stall[s] & Standings of the several Markets of this City and Borough—of Bridewell and Slips" are set to be let by public outcry, for two years to the highest bidder at the common council chamber on April 3 (a. u.), at three o'clock. The clerk is ordered to insert in the weekly newspapers an advertisement to this effect.—M. C. C., VIII: 82. The notice appeared in the N. Y. Jour., March 16, 1775, and in Rivington's Gazette, March 23, 1775.

Isaac Low, in an address "To the respectable Public," makes known his decision not to be a delegate to the continental congress, even if chosen, because he has "long been weary of Politics, which appear . . . to be too much influenced by Melevolence and Faction, and do not in a true sense, answer the ends of our..."—From the Librar AN.

The news from Newport states: "We are well informed that Gen. Gage has 500 of Rivington's papers regularly sent him every week, before the post marches, and that such and such others are thought most proper to promote the infamous plan of enslaving this country. These papers are doubtless paid for out of the American revenue: Thus, Americans, you already and your Majesty's American dominions, give us the deepest and most unfounded concern.

"Your Majesty's American subjects have hitherto been in a state of infancy . . . they have now reached the period of maturity, and are entitled, in the equal participation of freedom with their fellow subjects in Britain. It is with this view we now address your Majesty. We mean not to become independent of the British Parliament; we wish only to enjoy the rights of Englishmen, and to have that share of liberty and those privileges secured to us which we are entitled to. . . ."

"Your Majesty's subjects in this colony, think it essential to freedom, and the undoubted right of Englishmen, that no taxes should be imposed on them without their consent given personally, or by their representatives. . . . We likewise beg leave to declare to your Majesty, that we consider the acts of Parliament raising a revenue in America, but more especially those to provide for the support of civil government, and the administration of justice [see June 29, 1766] . . . and extending the courts of admiralty beyond their ancient limits as grievous and destructive of our rights and privileges.

"That the imposition of duties upon articles of commerce imported from Great Britain, is oppressive and impolitic, as it gives the greatest encouragement to illicit trade. . . . We likewise think, the act prohibiting the legislature of this colony from passing any law for the emission of paper currency to be a legal tender therein [see April 18, 1764], is disadvantageous to the growth and commerce thereof. . . . The late acts for shutting up the port of Boston, and altering the charter of the Massachusetts Bay, we presume not to mention to your Majesty, without first assuring you that we, in many instances, disapprove of the conduct of that province, and becalming your gracious interposition in their favor; we cannot however help observing that those acts . . . establish a dangerous precedent, by inflicting punishment without the formality of a trial."

"Adresses similar to that last quoted were forwarded to the two houses of parliament.———Assemb. Jour. (1775), 109-17. These were all forwarded on the 30th March (q.v.)."

John Thurban writes another letter to Rutgers Bleeker of Albany: "I think we are all in the Wroog both Parties in the House & out. Committees Congresses & Conventions a Spirit of Opposition so frequently excludes Reason & Moderation that Matters are Now got to such a pass as to require more than Human Wisdom to set them right . . . We are told by all the Governors on the Continent if we ask a Redress of our Grievances tiro [sic] our Assemblies we shall be heard & if Our Grievances are real they shall be heard. Am I for taking them at their Word & would follow Peace in any way & so far agree with our assembly in their mode—"I think it was very Wrong to Hurry the House in the Consideration of the Congress [see Jan. 26] this would have come well at the last Session of Congress. . . . It it were possible for Great Britain to make peace with America without Degrading herself below the Dignity of a Superior & lead to new Balois I should be easier than I am. But as I think she cannot grant all that asked I fear the Breach will not be healed."—From "Extracts from the Letter Books of John Thurban, Jr." in Hist. Mag., 2nd ser., IV: 291

"The Corporation of this City have laid out a Lot of Ground between the Work-House and the Liberty Pole, for erecting the Bridewell, so much, and so long wanted in this City; and we hear the said Building will be set about immediately" (see April 6).———N. Y. Merc., March 27, 1775. The building erected was of dark grey stone, two stories high, besides the basement. For complete descriptions and pictures of it, see Man. Com. Coun. (1835), 356-92; Booth, Hist. of City of N. Y., 3:52-25; Smith, N. Y. City in 1789, 13-14; Richmond, N. Y. and its Institutions 1609-1871, 69, 514-15; Am. Arch., II: 101; N. Y. Hist. Soc. Hist. Mag., III: 972. It was hardly finished by the time the war started, but the British, in spite of this, used it as a prison (see Dec. 15, 1776).

A newspaper advertisement reads: "To be Let, (And entered on the 24th June next) all the large and convenient storie-houses at the North-River, which have been for many years past occupied by the crown as provision stores."———N. Y. Merc., March 27, 1775. This seems to be the "Arsenal" shown on Pl. 42, Vol. I. It faced the North River between Cortlandt and Dey Sts. To-day, the boundaries of the plot would be Cortlandt, Dey, Greenwich, and Washington Sts.

At a meeting of the committee of 60, in the committee chamber, an advertisement is drawn addressed "To the respectable inhabit-ants of the City of New-York, I desire that the committee views with concern and uneasiness the unusual exportation of rails, and fears the distress which a monopoly of this or any other article may occasion, and recommends avoiding "drawing the people of this City into any difficulties or discontinuities, by expostulating or encouraging the monopoly of such great quantities of Nails as may leave a provision for our own consumption precarious, especially as it is not certain whether these Nails, so hastily bought up and exported, are designed to be used or to be stored." The committee also warns the citizens against the "proprietty of supplying the Troops at Boston with implements of war, and articles essential to hostilities."———4 Am. Arch., III: 242-43. These recommendations were considered at a meeting of the inhabitants on April 6 (q.v.).

A gentlemen in Connecticut writes to John Holt: "Mr. James Rivington has often been animadverted on in a publick manner, and sundry Resolves have been passed in the different Colonies, respecting his conduct as a Printer [see March 15] not only as being partial, but as publishing falsehoods tending to disunite them in their great struggle to support constitutional liberty, destroy their mutual confidence, and render abortive that system of conduct recommended by the Congress as the most certain and advisable expedient for obtaining a redress of our grievances. Mr. Rivington, or his partisans, have represented this as an attempt to destroy the liberty of the press. But shall a press disgorge calumny and falsehood with impunity? Shall the most innocent actions of a community be traversed, and the most reputable characters, even Legislative bodies, be traduced with passive tameness? This would be a tacit acknowledgement of the charge. Is it not otorious, that, while America is anxiously striving to preserve her constitutional liberties, like an invidious spy, watches every motion towards the grand point, and strives to frustrate every design, by disseminating distrust and falsehood among the people, in order to intimidate or divide them, thereby rendering his press an engine of tyranny, as well as a sink of the most impure productions."———4 Am. Arch., III: 111. See May 4.

The sloop "Charming Peggy" sails for Bristol. The general assembly of New York sends by it "an humble, firm, dutiful and loyal petition to his Majesty; as also a memorial to the Lords, and a representation and remonstrance to the commons of Great-Britain [see March 25] requesting their mutual endeavours for a settlement of the present disputes between the mother country and the colonies."———Rutger’s Nat. Hist., April 8, 1775.

A Londoner writes to a correspondent in Philadelphia: "The Apr. behaviour of the New-Yorkers has raised the drooping spirits of the Ministry, and has been the cause of their pursuing their tyrannous measures towards America with tenfold vigour."———4 Am. Arch., III: 252.

In response to the petition of Jan. 27 (q.v.), the assembly passes "An Act for an indulgence to Persons of Scrupulous Consciences in the manner of Administering Oaths."———Col. Laws N. Y., VI: 783-84. Acts are also passed "to regulate the Pilots and establish their Pilotage between Sandy Hook and the Port of New York" and for the revival of "An Act for the better and more effectual collecting of Taxes in the City of New York."———Ibid., IV: 745-52, 766.

The law of Dec. 31, 1761 (q.v.), "for the more effectual prevention of fire, etc., is amended so as to permit the erection of wooden buildings, with roofs of shingles or boards, north of a certain irregular line drawn across the city (as described in the act); but such buildings shall not exceed fourteen feet in height from the street level to the eaves, or have a roof whose elevation exceeds its breadth. The act also makes it lawful south of the line above mentioned to "cover the Flat of a sloop or Lander, and a Boat or a Flat at the same time does not exceed two equal fifth Parts of the span of such Roof and there be erected upon the same Flat a substantial Balcony or Balustrade and a Platform and Steps to the top of every Chimney."———Col. Laws N. Y., VII: 743-46. See May 2, 1774.

The last Militia Act of this Assembly was passed. "It follows the general plan, and, in the main, the provisions of the act of March 24, 1772 (q.v.), with few amendments. It introduces the new provision that the blue coats of the troopers of Albany shall have "White metal Buttons;" and it provides for a uniform for the troopers of Kings County which shall be "blue Coats and red Jackers and their Horses laced with Silver Lace." Persons free from enlistment now include "all Firemen within this Colony, . . . All Supervisors, One Founder and six Men to every Furazack and six Men to every Forge, all Colliers and their necessary Servants employed in burning of Coal and all bought Servants during their Servitude," in addition to those persons previously exempted (see Dec. 17, 1753). Every Quaker producing a certificate from one of the monthly meetings of his denomination, that he has been deemed a Quaker for a year or more, shall be exempted "from the ordinary Duties of Training or Mustering unless upon an Alarm, Invasion, Insurrection or Rebellion" (c.f. act of Feb. 17, 1753). The Act it is to be in force, until May 1, 1758.—Col. Laws N.Y., V: 722–45. It then expired.

The treasurer of the colony is ordered to pay "unto the Govern- nors of the Society of the Hospital of the City of New York in America [see June 17, 1771] the Sum of Four Thousand Pounds for rebuilding the said Hospital lately consumed by Fire" (see Feb. 28)—Col. Laws N.Y., V: 729. Before the building was finished, the war between Great Britain and the colonies broke out, and the New York "Committee of Safety," on April 1, 1776 (q.v.), ordered that it be used as a barracks for the soldiers.

The treasurer of the colony is ordered to pay 535:8s to John van Dalsam "for Repairs done to the Battery."—Col. Laws N.Y., V: 728.

The legislature passes an act "to confirm the Proceedings of the Commissioners heretofore appointed by a Law of this Colony [see N.Y. Laws, 1750] to settle the Line or Lines of Division between the City of New York and the Township of Haarlem, and for establishing the Boundary between the said City and Township."—Col. Laws N.Y., V: 814–44.

The stalls and standings in the public markets (see March 14) are ordered to be abolished; those persons who have wharves and slips to John Bingham at the yearly rent of £500, "subject to the Covenants Contained in the Conditions of Sale."—M. C. G., VIII: 88. For prior lessees, see ibid., VIII: 349.

Colten writes that as the assembly has refused to appoint delegates to the second continental congress (see Feb. 25) the "disaffected party are . . . exerting their utmost influence to obtain an appointment of Delegates by the people. It is not in the power of Government to prevent such measures; they are supported by individuals in their private characters and do not come within the mercy of our Laws."—N.Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 566.

The king grants to Dr. Cooper and Chandler allowances of 5000 per annum in consideration of their "merit & Services."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 569.

A royal commission is sent to James Rivington (see March 13) "to be His Majesty Printer within the Province of N York," and an allowance of 1000 per annum is made to him, to be paid out of such fund as the lords commissioners of the treasury shall think proper.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 568.

The address of the committee of 60 to the inhabitants of New York concerning the exportation of nails (see March 29) is read at a public meeting and unanimously approved. The question whether the troops at Boston ought to be supplied with "implement- ments of war, and other necessaries, for carrying on their operations against the people of the Massachusetts Bay" is decided in the negative. Because William and Henry Ustick have purchased "spades, shovels and other interesting tools, for the use of the army now at Boston," and have thus helped Gen. Gage, they are voted "invertebrate foes to American freedom," and the people agree "to break off all connection, and dealing with them for the future." After this, a committee of seven is "appointed to wait on the importers of Nails, and request them, not to dispose of those, which they now have on hand, to purchase them with a design to export them out of the province."—N. T. Jour., April 17, 1775. See also April 15.

The common council appoints a committee "to superintend the Building of the Brickell, to make Contracts, purchase Materials, Audits, etc."—M. C. G., III: 702.

A ship arrives from England with the latest news. Smith says: "Lord Chatham's Speech of 20 Jan.[p. v] gave the utmost animation to the Populace, and there were conventions immediately in order to obstruct the Exportation of Provisions & Straw & Tobacco. The Transports for Boston now began with intimidating Ralph Thurman and Robert Harding" (see April 15). At a council held on April 13, the chief business was "to approve a Proclamation Designated on Representations of Briggs & Robertson to the L' Govt."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV, in N. Y. Pub. Library. Gen. Robertson's report seems to have concerned "a riot in which two transports were cast off from the wharf, and threats of destroying the magazine at Turtle Bay made."—Col. Coun. Min., 505. At Smith's suggestion, the council decided "that the magistrates be directed to inquire, take Deposi- tions & lay them before us, that we might know the Truth & have solid Grounds to act upon." The mayor and Gen. Robertson were immediately informed of this decision.—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV. For the mayor's action in regard to the matter, see April 15.

The "King Fisher" (see Jan. 12) slop-of-war weighs anchor and proceeds to the North River, "in Order to protect two Trans- ports [see April 21] which lately arrived here from Boston, to take in necessaries for carrying on the Siege of that Place."—N. Y. Jour., April 11, 1775.

A broadside, addressed "To the Inhabitants of the City and Colony of New York," states that "a number of the Freemen, Freeholders, Merchants, and others, met at the house of the Widow Van de Water" and appointed a committee to disuade Messrs. Ustick and others from supplying the British army under General Gage with implements of war. This broadside, which is signed "Col. Delany, Friday of the Order of the Meeting," adds that, "to our inexpressable grief, they were found to be so infatuated with the hopes of gain, that no impression could be made on their minds, of the cruelty, or injustice of their conduct." It is therefore thought by "the Meeting" to be absolutely necessary "once more, in the present posture of affairs, to collect the sense of the city and county, on the propriety of furnishing the troops with hay, straw, &c, as well as boards and planks; the former of which will enable the General . . . more effectually to take the field, and the latter to make platforms for the artillery, &c." Ralph Thurman and Robert Harding have been employed to furnish these articles, for which transports have been sent to New York. It is "earnestly requested that the Freemen, Freeholders, and other inhabitants of the city and county will meet at VI o'clock on next Saturday evening [April 15], at the Liberty-Pole, in order to signify their sense on the present occasion. . . ."—From one of the original broadsides in N. Y. P. Lib., to be paid.

An effigy is hung up "by some of the lower class of inhabitants, at New-Brswick, . . . representing the person of Mr. Riving- ton, the printer at New-York, merely for acting consistent with his profession as a free printer."—Rivington's Gazette, April 20, 1775. In executing the council's orders (see April 12), Mayor Hewson makes a blunder. He "mistook our Intention merely of gaining Information," Smith says, and on this day "Sears & one Willet" were brought before him on warrants. "Willlet gave Bail—Sears refused & was carried to the New Jail & there rescued at the Door, & rescued thro' the Town at 4 in the Afternoon & then carried to the Liberty Pole where tryable to previous notices by printed Billets the Populace convened to punish Thurman & Harding—Sears took this opportunity to ask them, whether he should give Bail & the majority were for it—Hardings House was search'd but he escaped—Thurman's was not attacked . . . the magistrates & others pressed the Jury of the Multitude—The poor Mayor was in the Fields, while these Councils were held with all his Bailiffs, as meagh Cypers. . . . Thus every Day produces fresh Fuel to the General opposition. . . . De Lancey was in the Crowd in the Fields, help'd to save Will Bayard who by Speeches exposed himself to Insult See July 15 in the mob & Thurman's in Oswego Street."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV, 6p. cit. On April 21 (q.v.), Mayor Hicks explained to Smith his reasons for issuing the warrants against Sears and Willet. The battle of Lexington occurs, and the Revolutionary War begins. About 1600 British troops under the command of Lieut. Col. Smith, having been ordered by Gen. Gage to destroy the Colonial stores at Concord, crossed the Charles River on the night of the 18th and started toward Lexington. The people, however, had been aroused by patriots express, and the troops found a company of Minute-men drawn up on Lexington green. A skirmish ensued, in which several provincials were killed, and then the British proceeded to Concord. Here they destroyed cannon and ammunition, and set fire to the court-house. One party left to guard Concord bridge was opposed by a body of provincials. Shots were fired from both sides until finally the detachment had to retreat to the main body at Concord. By this time the militia had begun to assemble from all parts of the country in such large numbers that Col. Smith found it imperative to retreat from Concord. He had sent to Gage for re-inforcements, but the 1,500 men despatched by the general under Earl Percy did not meet the retiring troops until they had reached Lexington. With the aid of two field pieces brought by Percy, the British made a stand at Lexington for about an hour. When they again proceeded on their march, they were closely pursued by a large force of colonial militia under the command of Maj.-Gen. Heath. Firing continued all the way to Charlestown Neck, and then the British, under the protection of the "Somerset" man-of-war, got safely into the city.

American sources claim that the regulars fired first at both Lexington green and Concord bridge, and British accounts put the blame on the provincials. For a good bibliographical list of sources, see Justin Winsor’s The Reader’s Hand Book of American History. Reprint of the 1890 edition.

Newspaper published on New York writing on May 6 to Thomas Brown of London, said that “... or 400 [colonials] beat 1200 [regulars] & Really put them in Confusion Several Times & had been 10 miles farther from Boston by all accounts they never would have got back.” From “Extracts from the Letter Books of John Thurman, Jr.,” in Hist. Mag., and ser. IV, 222. For the arrival of the news in New York, see April 23. See also Addenda.

Rev. Samuel Auchmuty, in a letter to Capt. Montresor, says: “We have lately been plagued with a rascally Whig mob here, but they have effected nothing, only Sears, the King, was rescued at the Jail door. He was accosted by the Irish Magistrates upon his refusing to give bail for being guilty of misdemeanors, &c. [see April 15]. Our Magistrates have not the spirit of a house; however, I prognosticate it will not be long before he is handled by authority.”—4 Am. Arch., II: 359.

The provincial convention summoned for the purpose of appointing delegates to represent the colony of New York in the second continental congress meets at the exchange. Deputies from the counties of New York, Albany, Ulster, Orange, Westchester, Dutchess, Kings, Suffolk, and Queens are present. Philip Livingston is unanimously elected president. On April 21, the convention chose John Thorne, John Dow of New York writing on New York, John Philip Livingston, William Floyd, Henry Wissen, Philip Schuyler, George Clinton, Lewis Morris, Francis Lewis, and Robert R. Livingston as the delegates to the congress. Their credentials as such were read and approved on April 22.—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 1-5.

A broadside called "To the Inhabitants of New-York, and all the British Colonies," containing extracts from London letters, is published. One of March 2, reads: “Part of the troops now ordered for embarkation here and in Ireland, are to rendezvous in New-York, to make it a place of arms, securing the defection of that Province, from the general alliance in the cause of Freedom... and to prevent the communication, between Virginia, Maryland, and the other southern Colonies, with New-England, where General Gage, with such assistance as he may get from New-York, is to subdue those Colonies first, and then all America; in which, if he succeed, New-York is to be a garrison town and place of arms, and with the assistance of Quebec, to rule with a rod of iron all the States of America; for without New-York, every Gentleman and man of knowledge in this kingdom is fully convinced the schemes is impracticable.”

Another letter, dated March 1, states: “The measures of Ministers do more towards uniting the colonies, than any efforts of America itself... They have high hopes of success from the last accounts from New-York—I trust the people of that province, will soon disperse those treacherous stories, in your assembly, who dare thus negatively to encourage the system of desertion, which the Colonial Government have for some time past been made use of here, as authorities to warrant the defection of America... in New-York—the Delaney's—J. Watts, &c. &c. &c. They most assuredly correspond with some ministere people here... Pray print this short hint for the observations of the honest men among you.”—From an original in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

A Loyalist correspondent (“Anti-Licentiousness”) discusses in Rivington’s paper the disturbances created in the city by the Sons of Liberty, which he likens to the buzzing of “harmless insects” which “have at length made a feeble essay to sting as well as make a noise.” After a published notice regarding non-importation of nails, a “certain set,” assembled “first at Philips’ storehouse [the Horace plain], next at Biddle [Hammen Hall, then at the Liberty Pole, and last at Van Der Water’s [Nassau St.].” A later meeting, he records, was held, on April 15, at the “Liberty Pole,” at which Capt. Sears was apprehended and carried before the mayor. Bail was refused him and he was carried toward the jail, but was “set at liberty from the officers of justice, and led in triumph through the town.” After describing these events, the writer continues: “For fear of being too prolix, I shall omit the exploit to Turtle Bay, the march to the Transport in the North-River, in consequence of which she was cut off from the wharf, and the busting through the town, and cry of No Boardal at the Albany Pier; which being on the evening of Captain Lawrence’s arrival, doubtless proceeded from their joy on the good tidings he brought [see April 16], and is a mark of gratitude and a proof that they are actuated by nothing but the purest reasonings of liberty.”

“The Wind-Mill in the Bowery Lane, with the six valuable lots of ground on which it is built,” is advertised to be sold on this day at the Merchant’s Coffee House.—N. Y. Merc., March 20, 1775.

In relation to the events of April 15 (q.v.), Smith writes: “I saw the Mayor at my own House—ask’d him why he did not take my Hint & bring in his Depositions for the Council to act upon them that the Saddle might be put upon the right horse. Out came the Secret, that some of the Council had urged him on to save themselves... That within 5 or 6 hours after he left us there was a man who told him that the Council had ordered Sears to be taken up—He remembered well he said that I told him in Council that he was to inquire & bring in his affidavits—That he so intended if he had not been urged by Reports as before—That he finds he was made a Cautus Paw of by Fellows who had not the Courage to support him after the Rezume in preventing the Search of Harling’s House—That Sears & Mc Dougal were useful in preventing Thumans’s—He said he suspected some wanted Matter of Accusation ag’d him—that he called all the Magistrates together on Saturday morning [April 15] & they all agreed to his issuing the Warrant that day against Sears & Willett.”

Mr. Smith, in his diary, notes: “24 April—The news of the battle of Lexington (see April 19) reaches the city at about noon on this day (Sunday) by an ‘express,’ who left while the conflict was still in progress. His story was substantiated by documents signed by the principal men of the New England towns through which he passed. In the afternoon these ‘interesting advices’ were issued as a broadside without the printer’s name. One of these preserves the N. Y. Hist. Soc. and is here reproduced as P-54, Vol. IV. Although this broadside is mentioned by Evans (No. 14357), that of April 25 (p. v.), printed by John Holt, is often erroneously spoken of by collectors as “the Lexington broadside.”

On April 24 this account of the battle was published in the N.Y. Merc.

Col. Mariners Willet relates that the receipt of this news in New York “occasioned an Impulse in the Inhabitants which produced a general Insurrection of the Populace who assembled and not being able to procure the Key of an armory where a number of arms belonging to the Colonial Government were deposited, forced open the door and took possession of those arms consisting of about 600 Muskets and Bayonets & Cartridge boxes to each filled with ball Cartridges. These arms were distributed among the most active of the Citizens.
who formed themselves into a Voluntary Corps and assumed the Government of the City. They possessed themselves of the keys of the Custom-house and took possession of all the public stores. There was a great stagnation of business. The armed Citizens were Constantly parading about the City Without any Definite object."—From "Colonel Marinus Willett's Narrative," in N. Y. City during the Rev. War, pp. 55-57. Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV, under date of April 24.

In a signed certificate dated Sept. 6, 1775, Jacobus Stoutenburgh stated that when the account of the battle of Lexington arrived there were 322 muskets under his care in the city hall, and that "sundry persons, who had there their Accoutrements," that 28 muskets and their "Accoutrements," which had been given to Isaac Stoutenburgh to clean, were also taken, and six iron bullet-moulds. He estimated each musket and its accoutrements to be worth £3.5. On Sept. 26, 1784, the common council ordered an investigation, with the intention of applying to the legislature for reimbursement.—M. L. C. (MS.), VIII: 171.

Judge Thomas Jones gives this account of the happenings in New York: "On Sunday morning the 23d of April, a confused account arrived from Boston, of a skirmish at Lexington between a detachment of the King's troops, and the provincials. The provincials instantly took the alarm; they had wished for it for a long time, they received the news with avidity. Isaac Sears, John Lamb and Donald Campbell (a half pay officer) paraded the town with drums beating and colours flying, (attended by a mob of negroes, boys, sailors, and pick-pockets) hurrying all mankind to witness the "Accoutrements" of the troops, and to be sure that the spirit then prevailing in the town (which he represented as universal) would subside as soon as the grievances of the people were redressed, and advised to let the populace act as they pleased. Nobody replied, the times were critical, a declaration of one's sentiments might be dangerous, the Council broke up and nothing was done."—Jones, Hist. of N. Y. during the Rev. War, I: 30-31.

A letter from New York, printed in the Penn. Journal, states: "I do not doubt but the interesting news from Boston [see April 19] must give every good and virtuous man much concern, that from present appearances a reconciliation between us and Great-Britain, is at a farther distance than we dare think. What the following import, surely this proceeding on the part of General Gage, is not the olive branch held up by government. Yesterday this whole city was in a state of alarm, every face appeared animated with resentment, soon after the news arrived by express, many citizens went to two transports loaded with bread, flour, &c. for the troops, and they were speedily unloaded."

Another letter of this date, written from New York, reports: "When the accounts from Massachusetts-Bay came to town yesterday, the inhabitants went immediately down to two sloops that were loaded with provisions for the parliamentary army at Boston, unloaded them, and were lodged in the City Hall, for we can but perish, and that we are determined upon, or be free."—Am. Arch., II: 367.

Lieut.-Gov. Colden informs the council "that last night a Number of Persons violently Seized five hundred and thirty and ten shares of stock, which belonged to the City and were Lodged in the City Hall, that they also Seized the public powder House, and have put a Guard of fifty Men to maintain it; that they have been Parading thro' the Town this Day, and have Proclaimed a meeting of the Inhabitants this Afternoon, in order as it is said to cause Military Officers, when they declare their Intention is to oblige his Majesty's Ministers in the line of the 'Accoutrements' they lay down their Arms." The advice of the council is desired "in this Alarming Exigency of Affairs."—Count. Min. (MS.), XXVI: April 24. Smith reports that, in order "to know our Strength," the council decided to hold another meeting at half past four and ordered the Judges in Town the Field officers of the Militia the Mayor & Recorder to attend. At that time they could give Gov't no Aid from the Militia for they were all Liberty Boys who would keep the Peace of the City in other respects—The Mayor said that the Magistrate Authority was gone—Judge Livingston that all was quiet in Dutchess, & Jones said the same of Orange. They withdrew. Livingston saying that he did not believe there was any Design upon the Soldiers—we were then unanimously of Opinion that we had no Power to do any Thing & the best mode of proceeding for private Safety and general Peace was to use Disavow from Violence."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), II: 151.
particulars of the battle of Lexington. The account is attested by committee and in the towns through which the express passed. One of these handbills is owned by Miss A. B. Jennings, New York; sold also by Mr. Revere, Boston.

A Virginia delegate to the Congress (see April 20) writes: "The storm thickens very fast. The New-Yorkers have received intelligence that their Town is to be fortified, and fourteen Regiments to be sent there to cut off the communication between the Southern and Eastern Colonies: this has united them to a man in the American cause. They are forming themselves, and beg assistance from the Southland."—Am. Arch., II: 587

An address from Philadelphia is directed "To Messieurs Delancy, White, Colden, Watts, and Cooper, of New-York." This paper, signed "Three Mills," declares: "It appears, from a number of authentic letters from London, that the present hostile preparations against the American Colonies were occasioned by nothing but assurances from you of the defection and submission of the Colony of New-York. It is impossible to unfold the extensive and complicated nature of your crimes. You have defeated the attempts of the Congress to bring about a constitutional reconciliation with Great Britain. You have involved your fellow-subjects in Britain, Ireland, and the West-Indies, in all the distresses which must speedily fall upon them from an interruption of their Trade with America. But you have done more; You have unseated the Council of Britain, and Instead of your unfortunate Country. You have held up a signal for a civil war; and all the calamities of Towns in flames, a desolated Country, butchered fathers, and weeping widows and children now lay entirely at your doors. Go, ye partisans, to the Fries of your associate, James Rivington, and there satiate yourselves with your triumph. But do not presume too much upon the impunity of Bernard, Hutchinson, and other traitors to America. Repeated insults and unparalleled oppressions have reduced the Americans to a state of desperation. Executions of villains in effigy will now no longer gratify their thirst of vengeance. They have lost the sympathy of your unfortunate British and American fellow-subjects, who have already fallen in Massachusetts-Bay, calls to Heaven for vengeance against you. The injury you have done to your Country cannot admit of a reparation. Fly for your lives, or anticipate your doom by becoming your own executioners."—Am. Arch., II: 589.

The committee of 60 in its following notice: "The Committee having taken into consideration the commotions occasioned by the sanguinary measures pursued by the British ministry [see April 10]... are unanimously of opinion, that a new Committee be elected by the freeholders and freemen of this city and county, and composed of 120 persons. And this Committee is further unanimously of opinion, that at the present alarming juncture, it is highly advisable that a Provincial Congress be immediately summoned; and that it be recommended to the freeholders and freemen... to choose their delegates on the said Committee... to meet at New-York on... the 2d of May next."—Rivington's Gazetteer, May 4, 1775. The same notice, as a broadside, is in the collection of the N. Y. Hist. Soc. See May 1.

Judge Robert R. Livingston writes to his wife that "the town has been in a continual bustle enquiring into the Boston News of which we have not yet a clear account. People here are perfectly fearful, I mean the Whigs and the Tories turn Whigs so fast that they will soon be as much united as they are in the Massachusetts Colony."—Biographical Sketches of Francis Lewis and Morgan Lewis, by John T. Delafield (N. Y., 1877), II: 224.

"The ill Success of the Troops at Boston concerning which we know nothing certain but that they had the worst of it, has induced all Parleys here to cry out for committees & Congresses... A broadside now circulates for the Inlargement of the Committees, & for a peace also Evans, No. 14138. This is a great Meeting to form Companies this Day in the Fields."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

A broadside is published announcing the names of 100 men "recommended to the Public, as proper to be elected for a General Committee of the County of New-York, in the present alarming Exigency," and the names of 20 men recommended as deputies to the provincial congress. One of these is preserved in the N. Y. Hist. Soc. and is reproduced as Pl. 43, Vol. IV.

A letter of this date from the New-York committee to the counties, requesting them to elect delegates to the provincial congress, and signed by Isaac Low, chairman, states: "Most of the Deputies who composed the late Provincial Congress, held in this city, on the 29d, were at that time armed with powers to choose Delegates to represent the Province at the next Continental Congress; and the Convention having executed that trust, dissolved themselves. It is therefore thought advisable by this committee, that a Provincial Congress be immediately summoned to deliberate upon, and from time to time, to direct such measures as may be expedient for our common safety. We therefore entreat your county heartily to unite in the choice of proper persons to represent them at a Provincial Congress, to be held in this city, on the 2f of May next. Twenty deputies are proposed for this city..."—Jour. Prov., Cong., (1814), 5. See May 22.

Wm. Smith records in his diary: "It is impossible fully to describe the agitated state of the Town since last Sunday [April 25] when the News first arrived of the skirmish between Concord & Boston,—At all Corners People inquisitive for News—Tales of all kinds invested believed, denied, discredited—Sunday in the afternoon... 2 Sloops laden by Watts for Boston with Provisions unladen. On that Night the City Armory broken open & Powder taken out of the Powder House—Friday Morning, by order of the N. Y. Congress. The next evening done in the Day—few Jurors & Witnesses attend the Courts. armed Parties summon the Town publicly to come and take arms & learn the Manual Exercise—They are publicly delivered out and armed Individuals show themselves all Hours in the Streets—Concentration in the Faces of the Principal Inhabitants. Sears yesterday afternoon with 350 armed men waited on Elliot the Collector and got the Keys of the Custom House to shut up the Port—The Merchants are amazed & yet so humbled as to only sigh or complain in whispers. They now dread Sears' Train of armed Men—Friday Morgen [April 28] he went with the Pride of a Dictator & forbid the Polls objecting to the List proposed by the Committee—The better Sort Whigs & Tories were astonished and cry out for a Committee. In the afternoon the Post arrives from Philb,—a Paragraph in Bradford's Paper charging as in a Letter from England De Lancey Watts Cooper & White with sending for Troops—The Populace rage—De Lancy went among the Crowd & offered his Oath of Denial—The Ummot Painst taken to assuage the Multitude who meant to proceed to execute them immediately... Saturday White called upon me & drew up a Denial upon oath Watts & De Lancey having published affidavits—a meeting in the Fields at 2 P.M. I did not attend the' meetings of the Council of De Lancy & De Lancy. Particular All Parties ran this Morning to sign an Association at the Coffee House—This seemed to give Peace and moderated the Field Business which evaporated in approving the Association—Thanking Sears for removing Cannon from the Docks to Kings Bridge which he had began upon yesterday. News that Remonstrance was read to the Council for setting Cannon & Merchant Ships at Marble Head & Salem—Whigs & Tories formed this Day's convention at the Liberty Pole in earnest for establishing the Power of the Committee as a general Provincial Congress..."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV, cf. Sherwood's diary, in The Campaign of 1776, part 2, 1777.

"A General Association," bearing this date, is agreed to, and subscribed by the freeholders, freemen, and inhabitants of the city and county of New York. It is as follows:

"Persuaded that the salvation of the rights and liberties of America depends, under God, on the firm union of its inhabitants, in a vigorous prosecution of the measures necessary for its safety; and convinced of the necessity of preventing the anarchy and confusion on which attend a dissolution of the powers of government: We, the freeholders, freeholders of the city and county of New-York, being greatly alarmed at the avowed design of the Ministry to raise a revenue in America; and shocked by the bloody scene now acting in the Massachusetts Bay, do, in the most solemn manner resolve, never to become slaves; and do associate under all the ties of religion, honour and love to our country, to adopt and endeavour to carry into execution whatever measures may be recommended by the Continental Congress, or resolved upon by our Provincial Convention for the purpose of preserving our Constitution, and opposing the execution of the several arbitrary and oppressive acts of the British Parliament, 1775 until a reconciliation between Great Britain and America, on constitutional principles, (which we most ardently desire,) can be obtained: And that we will, in all things, follow the advice of our General Committee, respecting the purposes aforesaid, the preservation of peace, and good order, and the safety of individual and private property. Dated at New-York, April 29, 1775. "—New-York Gaz., Cong., (1812,) 1: 5; N. Y. Jour., May 4, 1775; The Remembrancer (1775,) 90.

A New Yorker writes to the committee of correspondence in Boston: "... At this time of general confusion through the Colonies, nothing can give greater pleasure to every well-wisher to his Country, than the unanimity that takes place through the Continent, more especially at this City; as it is evident . . . that Administration have put the greatest dependence on the Yorkers breaking with the other Colonies [see April 25] ... Yesterday about six or seven thousand men were out on the plain, among whom were some families who have been in the opposition; one and all unanimously voted to defend their liberties, &c., at all hazards [see April 29]. They have stopped clearing to the Custom-House, have taken all the city arms and ammunition from the Hall and Magazine [see April 19]; every preparation is making to completely arm the inhabitants; great numbers of people are employed hauling the cannon from the City to King's bridge, about fourteen miles, where they will immediately intrench. All denominations, under arms, and in high spirits. It is the opinion of almost every one in this place that the Acts of Parliament would have been repealed, had it not been for the encouragement given Administration by this place, that the Colonies would break their union. No people can be more despised, nor more frightened than those here who have been faithful to their Country, particularly the eleven Members of the House [see Jan. 26. Mr. Rivington has made a recantation; President Cooper has decamped; and it was with much difficulty the people were prevented from taking the lives of those who they have considered as traitors to their Country. All Government seems to be laid aside. The City is now to be regulated by a Committee of Safety, consisting of one hundred worthy men" (see May 1)—4 Am. Arch., II: 448-49.

May 1 A New Yorker writes to a friend in England: "The News of the Attack at Boston reached New-York on Sunday the 25th, and that very Day the Populace seized the City Arms, and unloaded two Provision Vessels bound for the Troops at Boston. In the Course of the Week they formed themselves into Companies under Officers of their own chusing, distributed the Arms, called a Provincial Congress, Keys of all the Buildings, and shut up the Port, trained their Men publicly, convened the Citizens by Beat of Drum, drew the Cannon into the Interior Country, and formed an Association of Defence in perfect League with the Rest of the Continent, which is signing by all Rank, Professions, and Orders. "The Congress sits in ten Days: If General Gage does not irritate us again, perhaps, they may propose Terms for a Re-Union; but I almost despair of it." —St. James's Chronicle, June 15-17, 1775.

One hundred men [see April 26] are chosen a "General Committee for the City and County of New-York, in the present alarming Exigency." At the same time, twenty-one delegates to the provincial congress (see May 21) are elected.—Rivington's Gazetteer, May 4, 1775. N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 600-1. For the list of names, see Pl, 43, Vol. IV. The committee of 100, thus chosen, did, so far as membership is concerned, represent the city. "Fifty-five of the old Sixty were members of the One Hundred. Of these fifty-five, seven at least became loyalists, fifteen at least were prominent radicals, the rest were men who were likely to follow the lead of Jay, Duane, and Philip Livingston... Of the forty-five new members, seven had been members of the Fifty-One; of these seven, two became loyalists, and the other four cannot be very definitely placed. Thirty-eight members of the One Hundred had never been members of either the Fifty-One or the Sixty. Of these at least nine became loyalists; there were among the most conspicuous radicals in the city, John M. Smith, called "the King," and Daniel Dungloe, the last, who received all degrees of loyalty, and were included doubtless precisely for that reason."—Bccker, Hist. Political Parties in the Prov. of N.Y., 1760-1776, 197-98.

The committee of 100 receives an address from Samuel Broome, in behalf of the "Military Association" of 100 inhabitants which he has been chosen to command. It is an expression of the desire of the company "to support your resolutions respecting the preservation of American liberty, of the peace and good order of the safety of individuals, and of this property; upon every occasion we will cheerfully take our tour of duty."—Am. Arch., II: 467; Selleck, Life of John Lambs, 122-3. This is undoubtedly the company or "Military Association" referred to in the undated document reproduced as Pl. 45, Vol. IV. Sec. 4.

The public is informed that the treasury office is "removed to the House where Mr. Justice Livingston formerly lived, nearly opposite to Chapel-Street."—N.Y. Merc., May 1, 1775.

In a voluminous letter, addressed to "Dear Vardill," and signed "A Real Churchman," the recent events and present political conditions in New York and the country generally are cursorily described, and advice is given how the situation should be met by Great Britain. The original of this pro-British, anti-Republican, letter is among the Egerton MSS. in the British Museum (cited 215 15), and there is a copy of it in the Library of Congress.

The committee of 100 (see May 1) send forth a "Committee-Chamber" this resolution: "Resolved unanimously, that it be recommended to every inhabitant, to perfect himself in Military Discipline, and be provided with Arms, Accoutrements, and Ammunition, as by law directed. Ordered, That the above resolve be immediately made public. By Order of the Committee, Isaac Low, Chairman."—Rivington's Gazetteer, May 11, 1775.

Colden informs Dartmouth that "the first accounts of an action between the Kings Troops and People, near Boston [Lexington], was published [see April 25] with horrid and aggravating circumstances. The moment of consternation and anxiety was seized. The people were assembled, and that sense of disorder and distress begun, which has entirely prostrated the Powers of Government, and produced an association by which this Province has solemnly united with the others in resisting the Acts of Parliament. The committee has caused the custom-house to be closed. The military force at New York consists of a slop of war ("King Fisher")—see April 12—and 100 men of the Royal Irish Regiment, commanded by General Clinton. "This small Body of Troops are quartered in the City Barracks without any kind of Protection but in their arms. Lord Dunmore when in this Government converted the Fort Barracks-House, and in May the 1st, which Barracks, by what time that thing was a sufficient security against the attempts of a Mob. . . . The Posts between this place and Boston are stopped."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 571-72.

The committee of 100 has learned that the post master has discharged the "Eastern Post-riders." A sub-committee appointed to discover the reason reports that the post master said "that the four last mails between New-York and Boston have been stopped, the mails broken open, many of the letters taken out and publicly read . . . and that the riders informed him that it was not sale for them to travel with the mail in consequence of which, they were dismissed by him until they could carry the mail with safety as heretofore." The sub-committee issues a notice stating as its opinion of the best way to continue a correspondence with the eastern colonies that "the present Eastern Post-riders be employed to depart from this City on the usual days, and to go to the usual stage, and the public demands that Mr. Ebenezer Hazard has undertaken to receive and forward Letters from this City . . . it will be necessary (in order to prevent Letters from being opened by the Committees on the road) that they be inspected here by some well known member of the General Committee," and was a radical for a year and a half.

A letter from New York says: "The late unhappy affair at Boston [see April 10] has had most amazing effects through every part of America; in this city it is astonishing to find the most violent proposals meeting with universal approbation!—The whole city is in a commotion all day long, and orders are given to stop all boats at the Narrows; that no mail may pass about 18 miles off; where a camp will be formed . . . Many families are retreating into the country, all business declining fast, and in a few weeks we expect will totally cease. The post here was stopped in a tumultuous manner a few days ago, and is not yet opened; but that will be done this day... The Governor and Council have their opinion that no propositions of reconciliation are likely to Instructions are given to Gov. Tryon at Whitehall to return to New York. He is informed that "The rebuilding the Governors House, Secretaries office, and the Hospital, are considered by the King as very commendable services, and his Majesty is graciously pleased to allow you to assent to any Bills that either have been, or shall be preferred, for making provision for defraying the expense of those services, either by Lottery or in any other mode the Assembly shall think fit to adopt." The subject of granting charters to the Dutch and Presbyterian Churches, and to King's College, was also considered.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 572–74.

An advertisement of this date reads: "Those Gentlemen who incline to inlist in a Company of Foot, are requested to send their names to the house of Mr. Jasper Drake, where may be seen the articles of the Company. No Place is too remote, or too near, that is about 8 inches high."—N. Y. Jour., May 4, 1775.

In the Harriet Paquet, which will this day sail for England, goes [as] passenger Lieutenant-Colonel John Mauessell [see May 15, 1775], (who has resided in this province 12 years, and is well acquainted with it) in order to lay before administration a true state of the colony: It must be supposed, as this gentleman has long served his Majesty, and being still a servant of the Crown, that his report will be favourably received."—Rivington's Gazetteer, May 4, 1775. The ship carries a letter from Lieut-Gov. Colden to Lord North which says: . . . So many gentlemen have since James Rivington addresses the public in these words: "As many Publications have appeared from my Press which have given great Offence to the Colonies, and particularly to many of my Fellow Citizens; I am therefore led by a most sincere Regard for their favourable Opinion, to declare that which I have ever done, has proceeded from some Seminitisms in the least unfriendly to the Liberties of this Continent, but altogether from the Ideas I entreated of the Liberty of the Press, and of my duty as a Printer. I am led to make this free and public Declaration to my Fellow Citizens which I hope they will consider, as a proof of my Resolution; and to conduct my Press upon such Principles as shall not give Offence to the Inhabitants of the Colonies in general, and of this City in particular, to which I am connected by the tenderest of all human Ties, and in the Welfare of which I shall consider my own as inseparably involved."—Rivington's Gazetteer, May 4, 1775. See May 10.

The "General Committee of Association" (committee of 100) draws up a letter to the lord mayor and magistrates of London on the "Subject of American Wrongs." Among Great Britain's officials, Thomas Froest and others are listed as "the Nothing oppressive Restraints on the Commerce of the Colonies,—the Blockade of the Port of Boston,—the Change of Internal Police in the Massachusetts and Quebec,—the Establishment of Popery in the latter,—the Extension of its bounds,—the Ruin of our Indian Commerce by Regulations calculated to aggravate that arbitrary Government, and their admiralty Jurisdictions towards us out the Colonies,—the Invasion of our Right to a Trial in the most capital Cases by a Jury of the Vicinage,—the horrid Contrivance to screen from Punishment the bloody Executions of ministerial Vengeance,—and, not to mention the Rest of the black Catalogue of our misfortunes, the hostile operations of an Army who have already shed the Blood of our Countrymen." The committee has been induced to send this address by "A sincere Regard to the public Weal and the Cause of Humanity, an hearty desire to spare the further Evisceration of human Blood, our Loyalty to our Prince ... and a full Conviction of the warmest Attachment in the Capital of the Empire to the Cause of Justice and Liberty," and it is confident that "the same cogent Motives will induce the most willing and utmost Efforts of the City and Countiy to maintain Peace, and Confidence, to the whole Empire." The letter is signed with 91 names.—N. Y. Merc., May 15, 1775; 4 Am. Arch., II: 510–12. Among miscellaneous N. Y. City MSS. (in box CE.—EL) in MSS. Div., N. Y. Pub. Library, is a pamphlet containing a facsimile of this letter. The original is probably in the Guildhall, London.

Lieut. Gov. Colden informs the provincial council of his intention to go to his county seat at Flushing, L. I. On June 3, the council meeting was held in "Brookland," but on June 28 (p. 92), when Gov. Tryon returned, meetings were resumed in New York.

The Massachusetts and Connecticut delegates to the continental congress arrive in New York on their way to Philadelphia.
They were met a few Miles out of Town by a great Number of the principal Gentlemen of the Place, in Carriages and on Horseback, and escorted into the City by near a Thousand Men under Arms; The Roads were lined with greater Numbers of People than were ever known on any Occasion before. Their Arrival was anounced by the ringing of Bells and other Demonstrations of Joy;
They have double Committee at the Door of their Lodging.

with them, among whom few were young. I hope their ships

A broadside, entitled "Extract of a Letter From Philadelphia, To a Gentleman in this City, dated the 6th inst.," published on this day, reads: "Yesterday evening Dr. Franklin arrived here from London in six weeks... which has given great joy to this town, he says we have no favours to expect from the Ministry, nothing but submission will satisfy them, they expect little or no opposition will be made, I hope that Nothing ever comes for New-York, where it is expected they will be received with cordiality. As near as we can learn there are about four thousand troops coming in this fleet, the men of war and transports are in a great measure loaded with dry goods, to supply New-York, and the country round it, agents are coming over with them. Dr. Franklin has been highly pleased to find abundance of coffee and provisions. For the worst events, he thinks nothing else can save us from the most abject slavery and destruction, at the same time encourages us to believe a spirited opposition, will be the means of our salvation. The Ministry are alarmed at every opposition, and lifted up again at every thing which appears the least in their favour, every letter and every paper from hence, are read by them."—From an original in

Edmund Burke, in the house of commons, moves "That the Representation and Remonstrance of the General Assembly of the colony of New York [see Mar. 25] be brought up." In presenting the motion, Mr. Burke said that the paper was a "complaint in the form of a Remonstrance, of several acts of parliament, some of which as they affirmed, had established principles, and others had made regulations subversive of the rights of English subjects. This Remonstrance was delivered to the House of Commons, with the opinion contained in that paper; but as nothing could be more decent and respectful than the whole tenor and language of the Remonstrance, a mere mistake in opinion upon any point, ought not to hinder them from receiving it, and granting redress on such other points as are well founded with truth, which was necessarily connected with that erroneous opinion. They never had before them so fair an opportunity of putting an end to the unhapy disputes with the colonies as at present; and he conjured them, in the most earnest manner, not to let escape, as possibly the like might never return. He thought the application from America so very reasonable to the House, that he could have made no sort of doubt of their entering heartily into his ideas, if the noble lord (North) some days before, in opening the budget, had not gone out of his way, to pass a panegyric on the last parliament; and in particular to commend as acts of justice and mercy, those very laws, which the Remonstrance considers as intolerable grievances. This circumstance, indeed, did somewhat abate the sanguine hopes of success which he had entertained from this dutiful procedure of the colony of New York. That he was so ill as not to be able to trouble them, if he were willing with a long speech. He had several times in the session expressed his sentiments very fully upon every thing contained in that Remonstrance; as for the rest it spoke so strongly for itself, that he did not see how people in their senses could refuse at least the consideration of so reasonable and decent an Address." Mr. Burke went on to express his "almost total appreciation of New York, and said that "he would gladly do any thing in his power to shew his regard to the good behavior of that colony: but the honour of parliament required, that no paper should be presented to that House, which tended to call in question the unlimited rights of parliament. That they had already relaxed in very essential points; but could not so much as hear of any thing which tended to call in question their right of taxing. As to Quebec duties, by which the province of New York was affected, as he did not pretend to be infallible, he confessed they were not laid exactly as ought to be, and he was willing to give satisfaction in that point immediately. This however was but a trifle to the general objects of the Remonstrance." Mr. Cruger modestly pointed out that "The assembly of New York have pursued this path; they have endeavoured to put a truce to reseantment and tumult, and, while the other colonies (in the frenzy of riot, commotion, and despair) have nearly annihilated the postward, from New York." He had several times in the session expressed his sentiments very fully upon every thing contained in that Remonstrance; as for the rest it spoke so strongly for itself, that he did not see how people in their senses could refuse at least the consideration of so reasonable and decent an Address."

"Such conduct Sir, cannot but meet the approbation of this House . . .

Policy and justice recommend the encouragement of such a spirit of accommodation, in this and in his Parliament . . . . In their present addresses to the throne, and both Houses of Parliament, though they may have extended their claims and complaints a little too far, . . . they could not at this particular crisis, wholly disregard the opinion of their sister colonies." He further showed the injustice of stating, "as a reason for rejecting a petition from British subjects and in an English House of Commons, that they [the colonists] claim a right of giving and granting their own money in matters affecting them."

"And, Sir, as a refutation of many unjust charges alleged against them, they particularly disclaim all intentions and desire of independence. They confess the necessity of a superintending power in parliament. . . . Permit me then, Sir, to beseech the House not to turn a deaf ear to complaints, . . .

Mr. Aubrey remarked that the right under which parliament had taxed the colonies "is at best obsolete, if a thing never practiced can become so. Now, a right that has become obsolete is very near akin to no right at all; and when revived is as offensive as if it had never previously existed. . . . And here the Americans seem equally excusable (as the rebels against Charles I) for not admitting a principle, which may be abused to their ruin. . . . Whenever a minister wants money for bad purposes and finds the nation clamorous against his raising it at home, what so natural for him as to supply his wants by the plunder of another nation?"

Mr. Fox pointed out the folly of not listening to the petition of New York. "What is there," he said, "to hinder the people of New York from trading with the interior country as before? Everything is just the same; there are no troops to hinder them passing and repassing as usual. Is there so much as an officer to receive presents, by which they are directed to be paid? It is mentioned, to convince you of your ignorance in taxing America. You make an act of parliament to raise a revenue in that country, and you not only make a capital blunder, but stumble at the threshold of collecting it."

Gov. Johnstone observed: "Ministers have long declared, that it was wished for a simple application from one of the colonies, and now it is come they treat it with scorn and indignity." He was severe on Mr. Corwall for saying it came only from 26 individuals. "These 26 are the whole assembly," he said. "When the question to adopt the measures recommended by the congress, was negatived by a majority of one only, in this assembly of 26 individuals, the ministers were in high spirits and these individuals were then represented as all America."—Parl. Hist. Eng., XVIII: 645-50.

"The City and County of New-York having through the delegates of that colony, applied to the congress for their advice how to conduct themselves with regard to the troops expected there, The Congress . . . Resolved, That it be recommended for the present to the inhabitants of New-York, that if the troops, which are expected should arrive, the 1st Colony act on the offensive so long as may be consistent with their safety and security: that the troops be permitted to remain in the barracks, so long as they be peaceable and quietly, but that they be not suffered to erect fortifications, or take any steps for cutting off the communication between the town and country; and that if they commit hostilities or invade private property, the inhabitants should defend themselves and force by law. . . . Rice, flour, and other provisions should be removed from the town, that places of retreat in case of necessity be provided for the women and children of New-York; and that a sufficient number of men be embodied and kept in constant readiness for protecting the inhabitants from insult and injury."—Jour. Cong. (Ford ed.), II: 495-92.

"The Martial Spirit diffused through this Province at this Juncture is almost beyond Concepcion; many new Companies have been already raised in this City, and several more are in Contemplation, most of them are in very neat Uniforms; much of their Time is spent in perfecting themselves in the Manual Exercise, and several of them are already so compact as to vie with the best Veterans."—N. Y. Merc., May 15, 1775. See also May 1 and 4.

The Penn. Jour. observes: We hear from New York, that the well known Dr. Cooper and his Pens. [see May 19], have taken sanctuary on board a man of war, from whence it is said they intend for England. We hope the Non-exportation Agreement to Great-Britain will always except such traitors to the Liberties of America."—Penn. Jour., May 17, 1775. May 24.
The committee of 100 decides upon the following "Directions for a Military Watch in the City of New York::

18. First. That a guard be mounted every evening at eight o'clock, at the City-Hall, consisting of not less than forty men properly officered.

Second. That detachments be made from the said guard to patrol the streets every two hours, under the command of a non-commissioned officer, accompanied by a constable or other civil officer, who may be directed by a Magistrate to attend from nine o'clock in the evening until five o'clock in the morning.

Third. That they pay particular attention to every person that produces no Provisions contrary to the Resolves of this Committee, to take particular notice of them, and endeavour, by persuasion and other peaceable methods, to prevent it, and that they make a report thereon.

Fourth. That the patrols do not challenge persons, boats, &c., but watch their motions, if suspected, and by all means endeavour to prevent outrage on person or property, and report the perpetrators.

Fifth. That no unnecessary and wanton alarm be given to our fellow-citizens, either by firing of guns, beating of drums, or otherwise, in the night, but that all their operations be conducted with that manly prudence and discretion becoming citizens zealous to support their freedom without tumult and disorder.

Sixth. That the commanding officer of the guard dismiss his guardsmen every evening, and order them to begin to parade by ten o'clock, to the Chairman, Deputy, or Chairman pro tempore, all extraordinary occurrences which may have happened during the time of his being on duty, signed by himself."—"Am. Arch., II: 656-57, N. Y. Merc., May 22, 1775. For later regulations see Dec. 20.

James Rivington sends the following address to the continental congress:

"Whereas the subscriber, by the freedom of his publications during the present unhappy disputes between Great Britain and her Colonies, has brought upon himself much public displeasure and detraction; in consequence of which his life has been endangered, his property invaded, and a regard to his personal safety requires him still to be absent from his family and business; and whereas it has been ordered by the Committee of Correspondence for the City of New-York, that a report of the state of his case should be made to the Continental Congress, that the manner of his future treatment may be submitted to their direction [see June 3] . . . He humbly presumes that the very respectable gentlemen of the Congress . . . will permit him to declare, and, as a man of honor and veracity, he can and does solemnly declare, that however wrong and mistaken he may have been in his publications, he has always meant honestly and openly to do his duty as a servant of the public . . . He declares that his press has been always open and free to all parties, and for the truth of this fact appeals to his publications, among which are to be reckoned all the pamphlets, and many of the best pieces that have been written to this and the neighbouring Colonies in favour of the American claims. However, having found that the inhabitants of the Colonies were not satisfied with this plan of conduct [see March 11], a few weeks ago he published in his paper a short apology, in which he assured the public that he would be cautious, for the future, of giving any further offence [see May 4]. To this declaration he resolves to adhere, and he cannot but hope for the patronage of the public so long as his conduct shall be found to correspond with it. It is his wish and ambition to be an useful member of society . . ."—"Am. Arch., II: 856-57. Sabine, "Loyalists of the Am. Rev., II: 216-18. See May 28 and June 3.

As there are not enough members present, the meeting adjourns. On May 23, the majority of the deputies had arrived, and the provincial congress began its session. Isaac Low, Peter van Brugh Livingston, Alexander McDougall, Leonard Lippinck, Joseph Hallett, Abraham Walton, Abraham Brasier, Isaac Roosevelt, John de Lancey, James Beekman, Samuel Verplanck, Richard Yates, David Clarkson, Thomas Smith, Benjamin Kissam, John Morris, John Cornelys, Jacobus van Sands, John Martin, George Follett, and Walter Franklin represented the county of New York. Deputies from the counties of Albany, Dutchess, Ulster, Orange, Goshen, Suffolk, Westchester, Kings, and Richmond were also present. Peter V. B. Livingston was May elected president, and the rules of the congress were decided upon. 22

A gentleman in New York writes to a friend in London: "Upon a calculation made here, we have upwards of 600 tons of lead in and about this town, which will be removed as soon as possible. The women and children are quitting the town fast. I expect to see it in ashes before long; which, I hope, may be the case of every one in the continent rather than our liberty should be wrung from the hands of the people. They are in expectation of receiving another supply of powder very soon."—London Chron., June 27-29, 1775.

The provincial congress resolves: "That this Congress will, before they rise, provide the best ways and means in their power, as Representatives of the People, for the discharge of such money as is now lent or shall be subscribed, or otherwise advanced or supplied on the public faith, to defray the charges that are or shall be incurred in the morning, or in writing, and passing from ten o'clock, by ten o'clock, to the Chairman, Deputy, or Chairman pro tempore, all extraordinary occurrences which may have happened during the time of his being on duty, signed by himself."—"Am. Dr. Cooper (see May 10 and 19) sails for Bristol in the "Exeter," having remained for near two weeks previously on board the "King Fisher," commanded by Capt. Montagu, "where he thought fit to shelter himself from the resentment of a people, who consider him as the writer of several pieces highly injurious to the liberties of America."—Penn. Jour., May 31, 1775.

The colonists use the following:

1. Resolved, that a post be immediately taken and fortified at or near King's bridge in the colony of New York, that the ground be chosen with a particular view to prevent the communication between the city of New York and the country from being interrupted by land.

2. Resolved, that a post be also taken in the highlands on each side of Hudson's River and batteries erected in such manner as will most effectually prevent any vessels passing that may be sent to harass the inhabitants on the borders of said river . . .

3. That the militia of New York be arm'd and trained and in constant readiness to act to prevent any insurrections, and that a number of men be immediately Embodied and Kept in that city and so disposed of as to give protection to the inhabitants in case any insult should be offered by the troops, that may land there, and to prevent any attempts that may be made to gain possession of the city and interrupt its intercourse with the country.

4. That it be left to the provincial congress of New York to determine the number of men sufficient to occupy the several posts above mentioned, . . . as well as to guard the City, provided the whole do not exceed the number of three thousand men, to be commanded by such officers as shall be thereunto appointed by said provincial congress; and to be governed by such rules and regulations as shall be established by the said Congress until farther order is taken by this Congress. . . .

5. That it be recommended to the 6th provincial congress that in raising those forces they allow no bounties or cloathing, and that their pay shall not exceed the establishment of the New England colonies."—Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford ed.), II: 59-61 cf. 4 Am. Arch., II: 854; Dunlap, Hist. of N. Netherland, Province of N. Y. & State of N. Y., II: Appendix, xvi. Doubtless it was in connection with these measures of defence that cannon in the city belonging to private persons were cause to be removed to the Bridge, some of which were afterward delivered to persons in Connecticut for the use of that state.—Laws of N. Y., 1800, chap. 33. See June 7.

The ship "Asia" arrives in New York from Boston, "after a Passage of 16 Days."—N. Y. Merc., May 29, 1775. This "Man of War of 64 Guns" was ordered to be removed to the colony of New York, on May 22, 1775. On June 7, Colden wrote to Dartmouth: "His Majesty's Ship Asia came into our Harbour about ten days since.

1775 May 18. The committee of 100 decides upon the following "Directions for a Military Watch in the City of New York:"

In my letter of March 19, I informed your Lordship that on May 1 I had suggested to Admiral Graves the propriety of sending one of the large Ships to this Place. He answered that I might expect to see the Asia here by the end of April. I am heartily sorry she was not, for I am of opinion that the Commander in Chief has already done good effect by encouraging some and discouraging others—The friends of Government saw no security for their persons or property but by joining with the multitudes...—N. Y. Col. Doc., VIII: 581–82. See May 27.

The committee for the provincial congress in behalf of the officers of the "Independent Company of Artillery." "That they have made considerable progress in forming, training and exercising the said company; and flatter themselves that, if properly supplied, they may, at this critical period prove of signal service to the Province. There are no carriages for even such cannon as they have pitched on to use until brass field-pieces be provided. Quite destitute of ammunition, and the necessary apparatus, they cannot exert themselves with that effect for the defence of the Colony, which are emulous of contributing to. They therefore pray you will take the matter into consideration, and grant such relief in the premises as you in your wisdom shall think fit."—4 Am. Arch., II: 845. On June 1, the congress ordered that Tudor "be desired to provide carriages, rammers and sponges, and such other things as are necessary for four guns for training his company."—Jo. Prov. Cong., II: 2.

Military Club. The officers of the Independent and Ward Companies of Militia of the city of New-York, are requested to meet at the house of Mr. Abraham Van Dycke, on Friday evening next... precisely at 7 o'clock.—N. Y. Merc., May 29, 1775.

In a letter to Maj. Isaac Hamilton, Colden says: "The very disagreeable Situation the five Companies under your Command have been in for some Time past has given Me a great deal of Concern. I am of Opinion that it cannot in any way advance his Majestys Service to keep the Troops in that Situation, and therefore have no doubt that the Measure proposed to You by Genl Gage is the most proper of any that can be pursued at this Time... My advice to you is Sir that after consulting with him [Capt. Vandeput] and fixing on the best Plan for embarking you shall get the five Companies on board the Asia as soon as possible. It will be necessary to keep this Intention entirely secret, and to effect the Embarkation in such way as to give the People the least Notice you possibly can of it."—Colden Papers (1877), 443±44.

For Maj. Lott, having received an order from the purser of the "Asia" to supply the ship with provisions, writes to the provincial congress to ask "whether the order shall be complied with, and whether he shall be at liberty to supply the said ship with such other provisions as she may from time to time have occasion for, for her own use, during her stay in this Colony."—4 Am. Arch., II: 20. To reply to this, the committee directed that Lott may furnish any provisions asked for, but that he shall report, from time to time, to the congress or to the committee of 100, "a list of the supplies so made."—Ibid, II: 1127. See June 20.
a commission from the king, or attempts to exercise a commission, and received heretofore, "shall be deemed an enemy to his country," and shall be tried.—N. Y. Jour., June 29, 1775. Regarding the controversy over the date and substance of the "Mecklenburg Resolves," see Winson, Nat. & Crit. Hist. of Am., VI: 510-57 (footnote).

It is resolved in the provincial congress at New York: "That it be recommended to the inhabitants of this Colony in general, immediately to furnish themselves with necessary arms and ammunition, to use all diligence to perfect themselves in the military art; and if necessary, to form themselves into companies for that purpose, under the further order of this Congress."—Jour. Proviii. Cong., I: 211 The Remembrancer (1775), 117.

Colden writes from "Spring Hill" to Gen. Gage: "Major Hamilton having communicated to me your Excellency's Letter to him, I had no doubt of the Propriety of advancing him to the five Companies of the 18th Regt. under his Command on board the Asia [see May 27]. They have never made above 100 Men, and have ever since the affair at Boston [see April 19] been in a very critical situation.

"After writing my opinion on this subject I had the pleasure of a visit from Capt'n Vaupeput ... and then found that there was such a Number of Women and Children belonging to the Troops, as would by no means be taken on Board the Asia [see June 5], it was therefore agreed by Us that the Troops must remain in the Barracks. You will hear from Major Hamilton what Pains are taken to debauc their Men, and how successfully high Temptations are offered to Deserters.

"I hear the spirit of arming and parading still continues to rage High in Town, & that several Independent Companies are formed, who are clathed in this form, & Exercise every Day. I have no reason to expect that affairs are yet in a State among Us to take a Turn for the Better.

"It is said to be resolved by the Continental and our provincial Congress that a very large Sum of Paper Money shall be issued. That the Port of New York shall be shut up when the others are. A Fortification is to be raised at Kings bridge, and one on each side of Hudson's River. The Impositions which such Measures must produce, may make the People uneasy & dissatisfied, and they may then perhaps take up Resolution enough to return to legal Government."—Colden Papers (1877), 426-156.

John Holt announces in his newspaper that "A Constitutional Post-Office is now kept, at J. Holt's Printing-Office, in Water Street, near the Coffee House, New York Where Letters are received in, and carefully dispatched by Riders." He publishes full particulars. He explains that he has been a great sufferer "by the Stoppage and Obstruction given to the Circulation of his Newspapers."-Holt's Post Office, which has been in the Hand of the British Ministry, to promote their Schemes of enlaving the Colonies, and destroying the English Constitution." He expresses the hope that those who have encouraged him will favour his application for the post of post master; and "he humbly requests the Favour, Concourse and Assistance of the Honorable Convention of Deputies for this Colony, in his Appointment to the said Office."—N. Y. Jour., June 1, 1775.

3 The members of the provincial congress "being informed that orders have been received from the General [Gage] for the embarkation of the troops now in this city ... earnestly recommend it to the inhabitants ... not to obstruct the embarkation of the said troops, but to permit them to depart this City peaceably."—Jour. Proviii. Cong., I: 28. See June 6.

Rivington writes to the provincial congress: "Having been just now informed that my case has been referred to the judgment of the gentlemen of the Provincial Council of this City [see May 28], and that it may probably be considered by them this morning, I have been employed the little time allowed me, to copy and enucleate the letter from the gentlemen of the New-York Committee, and my own address to the Delegates in the Continental Congress [see May 20] and added a newspaper, in which is inserted my address to the publick [see May 4], that the gentlemen of the very respectable Board ... may be acquainted with the whole proceedings in the matter."—Am. Arch., II: 899.

The letter from the committee of 100 reads: "The agitation of this Town by Mr. Rivington, as a printer, has given this Committee much concern. Some of the warm friends of liberty seem not to be fully satisfied that his former offences, as they were against the whole Continent, are within our authority; and we are concerned that nothing less than a determination of the General Congress will give full satisfaction on that head, much less secure him in his person and property. We have therefore resolved to refer his case to your respectable body, and would beg leave strongly to urge it as a subject of their serious consideration, as a temporary expedient; but as they are merely temporary in effect, as far as concerns him, we beg the direction of that body, whose determination we doubt not will be a law to the Continent. His transgressions are known to your whole body. He has subscribed our Association, and we know not that he has since his subscription done any thing contrary to its true intent and meaning."—Ibid., II: 899-900. See June 7.

This being the king's birthday, a royal salute is fired by the "Asia" (see May 26). "The crew then gave three cheers, which were answered by some of the inhabitants from the docks. There were we hear no illuminations in the city ... except one house, the lights of which, it is said were, on the request of the spectators, presently withdrawn. Not that the people had the least dissatisfaction to his majesty's family or person; on the contrary, they approve his title, and are friends to monarchical government—But take every opportunity to assert his abhorrence of the public measures pursued during the greatest part of his reign, the permission of which is imputed to him."—N. T. Jour., June 8, 1775. On June 3, announcement had been made that there was "No powder in the magazine for the usual salute on the king's birthday."—Coloon. Min. M., 507.

A Londoner writes: "The duplicity of New York will ever render them suspected. The many and repeated assurances given to the Ministry by their quondam leaders, will justify a suspicion, which the conduct of some of the merchants and traders confirms, that they would adopt any means to break through or elude the Association."—Am. Arch., II: 903.

Colden writes to Gerard Bancker, the provincial barrack-master: "Major Hamilton intending soon to move the Troops out of the Barracks, has desired Me to lend them some Blanketts and Utensils, which appearing to Me to be necessary in their present Situation, you will please to let the Major have what Blanketts and utensils he wants taking particular and proper Receipts for whatever you lend."—Colden Papers (1877), 418. In a letter of the same date to Major Hamilton, Colden reveals that the difficulty entertained earlier (see May 31) in regard to the removal of the troops has been obviated by "removing the Women to Governor's Island."—Ibid., 417.

William Smith, writing to Col. Lewis Morris, delegate from Westchester Co. to the continental congress at Philadelphia, says: "You are called upon by every Motive of Honor & Interest, Principles and Patriotism, to render well upon the strange look of this tremendous Hour. . . .

"Among the many Objects that probably present themselves to your Mind, I think your Attention should be principally directed, to the present overture of Administration, however disdained you may be to subscribe an Assent to it. Remember that the Congress widened the Controversy unnecessarily, by a Denial of the whole Legislative Authority of Great Britain. . . . It was a just Idea formed by our English Friends in the Commencement of this unhappy Quarrel, that an Authority to tax us, was not requisite to maintain the Legislative Supremacy of the Nation.—And if the contending Parties, could be brought to adopt this Principle in a reasonable Extent, all Animoity would instantly cease. . . .

"The present is the precise Moment for attempting this good Work. . . .

"As to the Mode of answering the British Proposal, it cannot be Very Materiel. . . . The Nature of the Answer itself is the great Desideratum.

"Certainly it should in the most explicit Manner shew your Loyalty to the King—your Affection to Great Britain, and your abhorrence of a Separation. . . . You will next lament the present Calamities of the Country (which is inserted my a Word about Rights) proceed to state the Line of Conduct that will calm the stormy, troubled Sea of Disscontent—Then you will in Terms of the most explicit Affection, declare your Readiness to contribute to the Exigencies of the Nation, upon Confidence that all future Aids are to be expected in the Way of Requisition, and . . . that your internal Police, should be left to the Colonies, you ingaging for such a liberal Support of Government, as shall give the Executive no just Foundation for Complaint.

Colony in the Confederacy, that whenever it shall please his Majesty and the two Houses of Parliament, to signify their approbation or disapprobation of the Plan, a Foundation of the Restoration of the Harmony of the Empire, to liberate the Commerce and cultivate their ancient Affection.

"This Course of negotiating, will feel the Pulse and try the Sincerity of the Ministry; and appears to me to be recommended, by no means capricious, that I am colours. Remember that Time will give you every Thing, which the most sanguine Zeal for your Country can desire."—Ifm. Smith M.S.S. (folio 168) in N. Y. Pub. Library.

6 The several companies of the royal regiment of Ireland march from the upper barrack[s], and embark on board "his Majesty's ship Asia, of 64 guns, commanded by George Vandeput, Esq. The rest of the regiment are at Fort Chartres and at Boston."—Rivington's Gazetteer, June 8, 1775.

Col. Marius Willett gives this description of their departure: "There was a public house near Beechman Slip kept by Mr. Jasper Drake. At this house the warm friends of the opposition to the British measures used to meet daily. I was at that place with about half dozen more when word was brought that the troops had commenced their march. And that beside the arms and accoutrements that they were armed with, four Carts Loaded with Chests filled arms—As we were among the number of those who consider the permitting the troops to depart at any rate when we had it in our power to make them Prisoners proceeded from fear or something worse and as the permission given by the Committee did not extend to their taking any spare arms with them. It was suddenly determined to hazard the Consequence of endeavouring to seize upon these spare arms. The persons present by agreement set out on different routes through the City to alarm our friends. My rout led me to pass the Coffee-house where after ascertifying the measure about to be pursued I proceeded through Water Street to the Exchange which then stood at the Lower End of Broad street from whence I discovered the Troops on their March down Broad Street I proceeded up the street and on discovering several Carts Loaded with Chests of arms in front of the troops under a small guard I stopped the front Horse which of Course caused a halt in the whole line of march. On the appearance of the Commanding officer to Enquire into the cause of the halt I informed him that the permission of the Committee did not extend to the troops taking with them any other arms than those they carried with them. The halt of the troops afforded time for the Committee of the Citizens. The Carts loaded with arms were turned out of the line of march. And the troops under arms addressed with an Invitation to such as disliked the Service in which they were to recover their arms. And receive the protection of the Citizens who considered them as Brethren of the same Family. But if their sentiments coroborated with the measures of the British of the Citizens. The Carts loaded with arms were turned out of the line of march, and the troops under arms addressed with an Invitation to such as disliked the Service in which they were to recover their arms. And receive the protection of the Citizens who considered them as Brethren of the same Family. But if their sentiments coroborated with the measures of the British Government. Then they were disposed to Join in the Barbarous work of shedding the blood of their fellow citizens we were ready to meet them in the Crimmson field. One of the Soldiers recovering his arms was received with repeated huzzas and Led away by the Exiling citizens, some few afterwards followed and were Conducted with the taken arms to a place of Safety. The troops marched to the river and embarked under the Hisses of the citizens. —N. Y. during the Am. Rev. 57-59.

On June 7, Colden gave Dartmouth a report of this affair. He wrote: "Notwithstanding the March of the British from the Barracks, the people began to hangrange them extorting them to desert, and assuring them of sufficient protection. Two or three fellows had the hardiness to turn off with their Arms from the Ranks, and were immediately carried away by the People. When the Troops got upon the Bridge it was immediately filled with the British troops. In the Heights of the Baggage were stop'd, and in the face of the Mayor Aldermen Congress and Committee Men, turn'd about by a few Desperate fellows, carried to a Place at some Distance, where they open'd the Baggage and took out a number of Spare arms and all the Ammunition belonging to the Detachment. The Troops got their Arms out of their Baggage. This violent outrage has much allarm'd the Inhabitants and many of the Congress and Committee Men themselves who did not expect their authority would meet with such a public Contempt, as demonstrated how inadequate they were to the Government & Protection of the People. The Events of Yesterday made it sufficiently apparent that a People encouraged to trample on Magistrates and legal authorities by any thing will presently grow wild and dangerous Passions.—Colden Papers (1877), 44-47.

A committee of the provincial congress submits to that body the draft of a letter to be sent to the New York delegates in the continental congress, regarding the erection of a fortification at "King's Bridge. This is approved. In the committee's opinion, a post (capable of being manned) would be the best course, and that the high ground adjoining Mr. Hyatt's house . . . will answer the purpose proposed by the continental congress in their requisition [see May 25], so far as the occupying that bridge can contribute to the keeping up a communication between the country and this city . . . this work should be constructed by the troops when embodied, and ready to occupy it . . it would be the highest simplicity, to erect a fortification before we have the means of defending it: by this mode of proceeding the expense will also be very much reduced." In this session the provincial congress resolving "that Collo. Philip Schuyler is the most proper person in this Colony to be recommended as a major-general, and Richard Montmonier, Esq. as a brigadier-general."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 31-32.

The provincial congress resolves: "That whenever doubts shall arise, with respect to the recommendations or resolutions of the Continental Congress, in things about which the latter have recommended it to this board for an explanation thereof. And that any attempts to raise tumults, riots or mobs, either under colour of a dubious interpretation of such recommendations or resolutions, or for any other reasons or purposes, is a high infraction of the rights of the association, and tends directly to the dissolution of this Congress."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 33.

In the afternoon of the same day, the congress took action in the case of Rivington (see May 18), by the following resolution: "Whereas James Rivington of this city, printer, hath signed the general association, and has lately published a handbill, declaring that intention, and has now signed a pean, and has thus asked the pardon of the public who have been offended by his ill-considered publications: Resolved, therefore, That the said James Rivington be permitted to return to his house and family, and that this Congress doth recommend it to the inhabitants of this Colony not to molest him in his person or property."—Ibid., I: 54. See Nov. 23.

Colden informs Dartmouth that "congresses and Committees are now established in this Province and are acting with all the confidence and authority of a legal Government. The Provincial Congress of this Province, now setting, consist of upwards of 100 Members. . . . The principal matters said to be under consideration in the Congresses are raising money and an army to oppose the Kings Forces, and erecting such Fortifications as may best keep the command of the Country, and obstruct the March of an army. . . . The Places promis'd to the Congress are with the Province. Kingsbridge, upon the little River which separates the Island of New York from the Continent, about 14 miles from the City; and some place on each side of Hudsons River, which may be best situated for maintaining the Command of that River . . . a number of Cannon were removed from the City into the Country [see May 25]. The Continental Congress approved of this measure and recommended that all the Cannon and Ammunition should be remov'd into the Country, except those belonging to the King; which has accordingly been done. I am told they amount to about 100 Pieces of Ship Cannon belonging to the Merchants, and many of them are not fit for use. . . . The Spirit of arming, and military Parade still runs high in the City. Several companies are formed who have appointed their own officers, are well armed and clothed in uniform."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 79-80.

"The preceding Wore Cape following in the morning in their Baggage were stop'd, and in the face of the Mayor Aldermen Congress and Committee Men, turn'd about by a few Desperate fellows, carried to a Place at some Distance, where they open'd the Baggage and took out a number of Spare arms and all the Ammunition belonging to the Detachment. The Troops got their Arms out of their Baggage. This violent outrage has much allarm'd the Inhabitants and many of the Congress and Committee Men themselves who did not expect their authority would meet with such a public Contempt, as demonstrated how inadequate they were to the Government & Protection of the People. The Events of Yesterday made it sufficiently apparent that a People encouraged to trample on Magistrates and legal authorities by any thing will presently grow wild and dangerous Passions—Colden Papers (1877), 44-47."
pair immediately to Turtle Bay to signify this Resolution to the New York committee which that the Stores may be assembled there for the purpose aforesaid, and to order them immediately to disperse, and desist from the further execution of the said measure."—4 Am. Arch., II: 1285.

The committee of 100 appoints a sub-committee "to inspect and examine into the Cargoes of any vessels which may arrive in the Port, suspected of having goods on board not admissible."—4 Am. Arch., II: 1233. See also Jan. 30.

The provincial congress provides for a bounty of $5 for every 100 weight of gunpowder manufactured in the colony, and $20 for every 100 good muskets.—4 Am. Arch., II: 1288.

Colin writes to Major Hamilton: "Few Things could add more to the shagreen and Uneasiness I feel from the most unhappy state of the nation. That the legal authority of the Laws and Officers of Government, being prostrated and trampled on, no assumed Power of Congresses or Committees will be sufficient to restrain the People. There is a Party in the City, who are determined that this Province shall not fall short of the most violent in their Measures of Opposition to the King & Parliament. I am sorry to find these wicked Men daily get the Better of Magistrates & Congresses & Committees, and do whatever their extravagant Passions lead to."—Colin Papers (1875), 426.

In a letter to Mayor Hicks of the same date, Colin very vividly describes "the high Insult and Outrage" offered to the king's soldiers, and then adds: "It is a lamentable Reflection, that neither your Presence with other Magistrates, nor that of those who have so lately given me a public Assurance that they would strengthen the Head of the Civil Magistracy, did prevent this violent Outrage on his Majesty's Troops who have behaved in the most peaceable and orderly Manner ever since they came to the City. I will not suffer myself to doubt of your having done what was in your Power; but it is my Duty to endeavour to add any Influence I may possibly have, and to call upon you to persevere in every Method you can devise to recover and restore the Troops, 4c., which have been so unjustly taken from the King's Service. Every Degree of confidence must be lost, and the Citizens of New York branded with a scandalous Breach of Faith, unless this be immediately done."—Ibid., 427-28. See June 10.

The provincial congress informs its delegates at Philadelphia: "A certain Captain Cowin being suspected of taking on board his vessel provisions for the Army and Navy at Boston, though suspected to persons at Rhode-Island, we have thought proper to delay his voyage until we have the sentiments of the General Congress on the subject. Our reason of suspicion is this, that it hath been intimated to the President, that a part of the cargo is assigned, are commissioned to supply those articles to the Army and Navy, which is done, as is alleged, by suffering vessels which contain provisions to lie in the harbour unloaded until seized by a ship-of-war, according to agreement for that purpose."—Am. Arch., II: 1567-68.

Mayor Hicks delivers to the provincial congress Colin's letter to him of June 9 (p. 9). After taking it into consideration, the congress resolves "that every inhabitant of this Colony who is possessed of any of the said arms or accoutrements, taken from His Majesty's troops, on Tuesday last [June 6], should immediately deliver them to the Mayor of the City of New-York."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 37, 38.

"A correspondent has favoured us with the following etymology of the word Yankee when the New England colonies were first settled. The inhabitants were obliged to speak a language which could be understood by most of the common people. They found but little difficulty in subduing them all, except one tribe who were known by the name of Yankooos, which signifies invisible. After the waste of much blood and treasure, the Yankooos were at last subdued by the New Englanders. The remains of this nation (agreeable to the Indian custom) transferred their name to their conquerors. For a while they were called Yankooos; but, from a corruption common to names in all languages, they put, through time, the name of Yankee; a name which we hope will soon be equal to that of a Roman, or an ancient Englishman."—Virginia Gazette, June 10, 1775.

A quantity of military stores is taken from "what are called the King's stores, at Turtle Bay, and carried clear off."—N. Y. Jour., June 15, 1775. For a view of this store-house as it was in June 1852, see Man. Com. Coun. (1857), opp. p. 192.

The New York committee wishes the mayor "to give orders for the removal of some soldiers' wives and children, infested with the small-pox, out of this City, and to take measures to prevent their becoming a Parish charge."—4 Am. Arch., II: 965-66.

"The Members of the New-York Military Club, Are earnestly requested to meet next Friday Evening, precisely at 7 o'clock, at the House of Mr. Abraham Van Dyck, and every Friday Evening following, at such time as may occasionally be agreed on by the Majority of Members present at the Adjournment."—N. Y. Merc., June 12, 1775. See July 5. Van Dyck's tavern was on Broadway. See Aug. 1, 1776.

Congress orders "that Colo. Lippencord and Mr. McDougal be a committee to agree with any person in this city for importing without delay quantity of gunpowder not exceeding thirty tons, allowing such importer one hundred per centum upon the first cost for the quantity to be imported, be being at all Charges and risk, and the powder to be delivered in good and merchantable order."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 41.

Messrs. Christopher Miller and Patrick Dennis attending at the door, were called in [to the provincial congress], when they informed this Congress that they were requested by a number of the members of the Marine Society of this City, to inform this Congress that they were about to form themselves into an artillery company, and they had nominated Mr. Anthony Rutgers of this city for their captain, and prayed the approbation of this Congress in the nomination." The nomination is unanimously approved.——Jour. Prov. Cong., II: 41; 4 Am. Arch., II: 1297.

August McDougal, "who it is said has been privately inducing Men for some Time past to serve under General Gage, against their Country," is taken into custody by "a Party of Colonel Lasher's Company of Grenadiers," and conducted before the provincial congress. After his examination by that body, he is immediately sent off to Gen. Wooster's camp at Greenwich, Cona, being "requested by a Committee of our Independent Companies as far as King's Bridge."—N. Y. Merc., June 19, 1775. See also N. Y. Col. Doc., VIII: 588-89.

The provincial congress orders "that no person whatsoever presume to inoculate for the small pox within this Colony before the first day of December next, and that the Several committees within their respective districts carefully observe that there be no unauthorized componists to whom greater part of the cargo is assigned, are commissioned to supply those articles to the Army and Navy, which is done, as is alleged, by suffering vessels which contain provisions to lie in the harbour unloaded until seized by a ship-of-war, according to agreement for that purpose."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 441; 4 Am. Arch., II: 1301.

The provincial congress writes to Gen. Wooster: "this congress think it expedient to request you to march to this Colony with the Troops under your command. As we have at present but few tents, we beg you would direct such as you have, to be sent to the place intended for their encampment and make such other disposition for the support of your Troops as in your power."—4 Am. Arch., II: 1301.

Cornelius C. Bocadorius employs men "to set up a fence for him round a piece of his Land that had last vacant & common for many Years which fence was fully completed without any Molestation," etc. In the afternoon it was chopped down and burned by order and in the presence of the mayor and aldermen.—From manuscript history of "Domine Hook", in N. Y. Hist. Soc. archives, concerning the title to that property originally granted in 1676 to Annatie Jansen and Roelf her husband.

The battle of Bunker Hill occurs. About 3,000 British soldiers under Howe assaults the American breastworks, and are twice repulsed by about 1,000 provincial commanders under Generals Prescott and Putnam. After sustaining the fire of the regulars for two hours, the Americans are forced to evacuate because of lack of ammunition. The killed and wounded on the British side number about 1,059; on the American, about 450.——See bibliographical references to the battle in The Reader's Hand Book of the Am. Rev., by Justin Winsor (1885), 35-39. The first news of the battle reached New York on June 20 (p. 9). For earliest accounts in New York newspapers, see N. Y. Jour., and Rivington's Gazetteer, June 22, 29; N. Y. Merc., June 26, July 3.

In the N. T. Mercury of Sept. 25 appeared an advertisement with a head-line reading "Philadelphia, Sept. 14th, 1775," in which subscriptions were solicited for "An exact View of the late Battle at Charlestown: Hill, on Friday June 17, 1775" in which an advanced party of Seven Hundred Provincial troops, with an attack made by Eleven Regiments and a Train of Artillery of the Ministerial Forces, and after an Engagement of Two Hours, retreated to their main Body at Cambridge, leaving Eleven Hundred of the Regulars killed and wounded on the Field... With a View of Gen. Putnam's Part of the Action..."—Rivington's Gazetteer, June 22; N. T. Merc., June 23.

"Friday last [June 16] the Mercury Frigate, Capt. McCarthy, arrived at Sandy-Hook, in 14 Days from Boston: He was dispatched from thence by General Gage to order whatever Troops might arrive here from England or Ireland, for Boston; and last Wednesday he luckily fell in with a Transport from Cork with Part of the 44th Regiment bound into this Place; but she soon stood to the Eastward, and Capt. McCarthy now awaits at the Hook to give the like Orders to the Rest of the Fleet that may arrive here."—N. T. Merc., June 19, 1775. See June 15.

Late on this day (Tuesday), the first news reaches New York of the battle of Bunker Hill (see June 17). The provincial congress orders that Abraham Lott, Esquire, be at liberty to supply Capt. Vandeput and the ship Asia, with such small necessaries as may be wanted from time to time" (see May 27). This is the result of information given by the mayor, that Capt. Vandeput "cannot get any small necessaries for himself or his ship; and... requests such aid of this Congress as may give them relief from the same necessity."—Jour. Prov. Cong., II, 485.

This morning, the news which came from New England last night is "published in a hand bill, and distributed in this city." According to Rivington's report in the Gazetteer (published on Thursday, June 22), this handbill read as follows:

"New-York, 21st June, 1775.

Last night, by a Vessel in a short Passage from New-London, we have the following important Intelligence, in a Letter from a Gentleman at Norwich, to his Friend in New York.

At the same time, "information being received that June 25, T. Tryon is at the Hook, and will land at about one o'clock," Col. Lasher is reported to "send one company of the militia to Poule's Hook to meet the Generals. That he have another company at this side the ferry for the same purpose; that he is ready at his return either the Generals or Governor Tryon which ever shall first arrive, and to wait on both as well as circumstances will allow."

There are varying accounts of the receptions accorded Washington and Tryon on this day. Pastor Shekirk, of the Moravian Church, records that "in the evening, at the end of the Revolutionary War, for our Governor, Wm Tryon was expected to come in on his return from England; and at the same time General Washington of the Provincials, who has been appointed Chief Captian of all the Troops by the Continental Congress. They would show some regard to the Governor too, but the chief attention was paid to Gen. Washington. At one Church the Minister was obliged to give over; for the People went out, when the General came, who was received with much ado. The Governor came on shore late in the Evening."

On the same day, Wm. Smith writes: "This is a Day marked by the Singular Event of a pompous attendance on General Washing-1775

Concourse on the Arrival of Govr Tryon—the former at 4 P M & the latter at 8—The New Volunteers in their Uniforms (9 Companies) received the Generals at Lippodens and made a Procession to the House. The return found the same followed by a gaiting Multitude—Mr Tryon was only attended by a Crowd who received him at the Ferry stairs & escorted him to Mr Wallace's... He appeared grave this Evening & said little. I left De Lancy there as attentive as any of Tryon's real Friends.

There was much shouting in the Procession—A Proof that the Populace esteem the Man, tho they at this Instant hate his Commission & would certainly have insulted any other at that Station.—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), IV.

Mrs. Richard Montgomery, a daughter of Judge Robert R. Livingston, was in New York at this time with her husband, Gen. Montgomery. She wrote that "the whole town was in a state of commotion. all the militia was paraded, bells ringing, drums beating—and in that moment the British governor Tryon arrived. As he landed he looked with delight at the general excitement that prevailed, and said: 'Is this all for me?' When two of his counsellors took him merrily by the hand and led him to a house in Broadway, where he nearly fainted when he saw the great Washington pass, attended by a crowd of patriots. A window next to the City Hotel I was so happily placed that I could see him. Here General Schuyler and General Montgomery received their comminations and in a little time by spectators, who saw the whole action, that there could not be less than 4 or 500 killed... Mr. Gardner who got out of Boston on Sunday evening, says that there were 500 wounded men brought into that place, the morning before he came out.

This account was taken by the Spectator, Elijah Hile, of Lebanon, who was a spectator on Winter-Hill, during the whole action."

—N. Y. Mercury, June 26, 1775. One of these handbills, which bears Holt's imprint ("Printed by John Holt, in Water-Street, near the Coffee-House"), is owned by Mr. W. B. Osgood Field, New York. See Evans, Am. Bibliog., VI. 175. This broadside is often referred to as "the Bunker Hill broadside," a name which should rather be applied to that of June 24 (q.v.).

The continental congress writes to the provincial congress: "As the Congress are of opinion that the employing the Green Mountain Boys in the American army would be advantageous to the service, well on account of their situation as of their disposition and alacrity, they are desirous you should embody them among the troopes you shall raise."—Jour. Provim. Cong., I: 65. See July 4.

The provincial congress having received a letter from Gen. Schuyler, containing information "that General Washington, with his retinue, would be at New-Ark this morning, and requesting this Congress to send some of its members to meet him there, and advise the most proper place for him to cross Hudson's river in his way to New-York," congress orders that certain members "pass immediately to New-York, and recommend the place of Washington the place which they shall think most prudent for him to cross at."

J. Shaw Kirk, says that Tryon received little notice—Bancroft, Hist. of the U. S. (1891), IV: 216.

"Jones continues: About 9 o'clock the same evening Governor Tryon came from Sandy Hook, and landed at the Exchange, where he was met and welcomed once more to his Government, by the members of his Majesty's Council, the Judges of the Supreme Court, the Attorney General, the Speaker and Members of the General Assembly then in town, the Clergymen of the Church of England, the Mayor, Recorder and Aldermen of the City, the Governors of King's College, of the Hospital, the Members of the Chamber of Commerce, and Marine Society, with a numerous train of his Majesty's loyal and well affected subjects, who conducted him with universal shouts of applause to the house of Hugh Wallace, Esq., a Member of his Majesty's Council, where he took up his residence for the night."

"Judge Jones adds that the same persons who greeted the "rebels" government in the morning "now one and all joined in the Governor's train, and with the loudest acclamations, attended him to his lodgings, where, with the utmost seeming sincerity, they shook him by the hand, welcomed him back to the Colony—wished him joy of his safe arrival, . . ."

"Washington directs Gen. Schuyler to take "command of all the troops destined for the New York department; and see that the orders of the Continental Congress are carried into execution."

"He requires him to "Keep a watchful eye upon Governor Tryon, and, if you find him attempting, directly or indirectly, any measures inimical to the common cause, use every means in your power to frustrate his designs."—Writings of Washington (Ford ed.), II: 494-96.

Paul Revere passes through New York on his way to the continental congress at Philadelphia.—Rivington's Gazetteer, June 29, 1775.

The provincial congress of New York gives its approval to the following address to Gen. Washington (see June 15): "At a time when the most loyal of his Majesty's subjects, from a regard to the laws and constitution by which he sits on the throne, feel themselves reduced to the unhappy necessity of taking up arms to defend their dearest rights and privileges, while we deplore the calamities of this divided empire, we rejoice in the appointment of a gentleman, from whose abilities and virtue we are taught to expect both security and peace. Confiding in you, sir, and in the worthy generals immediately under your command, we have the most flattering hopes of success in the glorious struggle for American liberty. It is for you, as the whole of us, to decide this important contest, shall be decided, by (that fondest wish of each American soul,) an accommodation with our mother country, you will cheerfully sign the important deposit committed into your hands, and resume the character of our worthiest citizen."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 55.

Washington wrote, in reply: "Gentlemen—At the same time that with you I deplore the unhappy necessity of such an appointment as that with which I am now honoured, I cannot but feel sentiments of the highest gratitude for this affecting instance of distinction and regard.

"May your warmest wishes be realized in the success of America at this important and interesting period; and be assured, that every exertion of my worthy colleagues and myself, will be equally extended to the re-establishment of peace and harmony between the mother country and these Colonies, as to the fatal but necessary operations of war."

"As you came up from Sandy Hook, we did not lay aside the citizen, and we shall most sincerely rejoice with you in that happy hour when the establishment of American Liberty on the most firm and solid foundations, shall enable us to return to our private stations in the bosom of a free, peaceful and happy Country."—Ibid., I: 56; Jour. Am. Arch., III: 1311-12.

In a letter to a friend in Edinburgh, a New Yorker writes: "A regular army of 70,000 men is to be immediately raised; all ranks of people are in arms. Seventeen regular companies are already formed in this city who have no pay, and provide themselves with uniforms, arms, and ammunition. Should the unhappy contest continue six months longer, it is apprehended they will be found wanting. On July 2, we shall have near 200,000 bold resolute men disciplined to as great perfection as any of his Majesty's troops."—Linden Chron., Aug. 19, 1772.

On this day, Rivington's Gazette and the N. Y. Jour. publish additional reports regarding the battle of Bunker Hill (see June 21, 24, 10).

The Congress orders: "That every gunsmith in the city of New-York be requested to repair, with all possible dispatch, any arms of the troops from the Colony of Connecticut, now here, which may be brought to them by the quarter-master of the said troops, or either of them, for that purpose."—Jour. Provim. Cong., I. 62.

Dartmouth writes to Tryon that "it is His Majesty's firm resolution to exert every power which the constitution has placed in His hands to compel obedience to the Laws and authority of the supreme Legislature." Orders have been given for increasing the army in America. The "Admiral will be directed to send to New York such a part of his Fleet, as he shall think may be necessary to secure (as far as depends upon Naval Service) the Passes of Hudson River," etc.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII. 589.

The Connecticut troops "marched last week to this City and encamped in the suburbs [see June 27]. This we are told," Colden writes to Dartmouth, "is done by the order of the Continental Congress, but for what purpose is kept a secret."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII. 590. Tryon writes, on July 4, that these troops "were ordered here by the Continental Congress, as well to endeavor to check the four Regiments which were intended for this Province, as a mark of disgrace and Punishment to New York for the conduct of her General Assembly last Session. The pay of these Troops... is placed to the account of this Province."—Ibid., VIII.* 590.

The corporation of the city prepares the following address to Gov. Tryon: "We wait on you Sir, to congratulate you on the better establishment of your health and to bid you welcome to a people, who from the recitude of your administration could not part with you without the deepest regret, and who must therefore receive you again with all that confidence of safety and protection which the experience of your virtues and abilities can inspire." "Would to Heaven that an event so honorable to you as this fresh mark of the Kings approbation really is and which is so acceptable to us; but be assured, his Majesty is too true to all authority, power, and government (though I cannot say government, as there is none) is in the hands of the lower class of people, who are so warm in a dispute that they do not comprehend, that it would be dangerous for the Congress themselves to act contrary to the spirit of these people. In short, liberty is despised into lusitude; those who would nobly defend their liberties constitutionally, seek for redress of their grievances, and take off a King's head if he deserved it, are now called Tories."

Too many of the Merchants who owe their all to the indulgence of the British Merchants, are now ashamed to publicly declare, on the arrival of every ship by which they receive what they call inimipotent dunning letters, their avowed determination not to pay their debts [cf. July 8], and honest men dare not even despise them.—Figure to yourselves the consequences."—Linden Chron., Aug. 10-12, 1775.

The provincial congress having learned that the common council intends to offer the governor an address of welcome (see July 3), the following resolution is passed: "Though this Congress entertains the highest respect for his Excellency, yet it will be altogether improper for the said corporation, or any other body corporate or individual, to address this Colony, to address his Excellency at this most critical juncture." A copy of this is ordered to be delivered to Mayor Hicks.—Jour. Provim. Cong., I. 66; N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII. 594.

In consequence of this, the members of the common council, on the following day, sent an address from any public body, presented at this critical Juncture would occasion a dissatisfaction, not from a Disregard to His Excellency, but from the present troubles of the times." They therefore begged...

that he would exclaim "their not waiting on him . . . as was proposed" (see July 3), and that he would "waive such a public Testimony of their Esteem for the reason above mentioned."

Germantown, and the officers of the Connecticut forces (see June 27) dine "at Mr. Samuel Franchese's, in the Fields," where an "elegant Entertainment" is provided by the members of the New York Military Club (see June 12). "The Day was spent in the utmost Harmony, every Thing consisting to please, being agreeable that Union to July 16, 1775. At this time, Franchese's tavern (formerly spelled "Francys") was Hadden Hall on the corner of Warren St. and Broadway.

The New York committee of 100 resolves "That all Masters of Vessels arriving in this Port from Great Britain or Ireland, are hereby required, as soon as they conveniently can, or within twenty-four hours after their arrival, to make application to the Chairman or Deputy Chairman of this Committee . . . and give proper satisfaction that there are not now, nor have been in his Vessel this present voyage any Goods or Merchandise contrary to the General Association of the Continental Congress. And it is hereby recommended to all owners of Vessels, or those to whom they may be addressed, to inform their Masters of the above Resolves; and that no Master do presume to discharge or suffer any thing to be taken out of his Vessel until such satisfaction has been given, and leave obtained from the Chairman or Deputy Chairman among other things, of the character of the persons on board.

Col. McDougall informs the provincial congress that "a number of men enlisted in this city, as part of the troops to be raised in this Colony, are ready to be encamped, but that tents and other necessaries for the officers, and many articles for the soldiers are yet wanting; that part of the upper barracks are ready for use; and that a master-maister is wanted to muster the men now enlisted." Orders are given for the immediate mustering of the enlisted men; "and that such men as pass master, and such others as shall be enlisted, be lodged in the barracks in this city, until their tents, and other necessaries are ready; or until the further order of this Congress."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 66; 4 Am.
Arch., II: 1340.

A Declaration by the Representatives of the United Colonies of North-America, now met in General Congress at Philadelphia setting forth the Causes and Necessity of their taking up Arms" is published as a broadside by John Holt. This states that "government was instituted to promote the welfare of mankind and ought to be administered for the attainment of that end," but that the legislature of Great Britain has "attempted to effect their cruel and impolitic purpose of enslaving the colonies by violence, and they labor under the disadvantages of our condition; necessary for last appeal from Reason to Arms.—Yet, however blinded that assembly may be by their intemperate rage for unlimited domination, so to slight justice and the opinion of mankind, we esteem ourselves bound by obligations of respect to the rest of the world to make known of our condition and the causes of our caution.
The declaration then reviews the planting of the colonies in America without expense to Great Britain, the wealth accumulated and commerce built up by the industry of the colonists alone, the aid given freely to Great Britain in time of war, and, finally, the many unjust and coercive laws passed by parliament in the last eleven years. It cites the various petitions for redress of grievances, the temperate measures pursued by the first continental congress, and the fruitlessness of all their entreaties. The congress next describes the attack on Lexington, the harsh treatment of the British, and the many cruelties perpetrated in the colonies by Gen. Gage and his soldiers.

In conclusion, it states: "In brief, a part of these colonies now feels, and all of them are sure of feeling, as far as the vengeance of administration can inflict them, the complicated calamities of crime, fire, sword, and famine. We are reduced to the necessity of having unconditional submission to the tyranny of irritable ministers, or resistance by force—The latter is our choice.—We have counted the cost of this contest and find nothing so dreadful as voluntary slavery.—Honor, justice, and humanity forbid us tamely to surrender that freedom which we received from our gallant forefathers, and which our innocent posterity have a right to receive from us . . .

"Our cause is just. Our union is perfect. Our internal resources are great, and if necessary, foreign assistance is undoubt-eedly attainable . . . With hearts fortified with these animating reflections, we most solemnly, before God and the world declare, that, exerting the utmost energy of those powers, which our benefi-cient Creator hath graciously bestowed upon us, the arms we have been compelled by our enemies to assume, we will, in defiance of every hazard, with unparalysed courage and perseverance, employ, for the preservation of our liberties, being one mind resolved, to dieFree men rather than live Slaves.

"Least this declaration should disquiet the minds of our friends and fellow subjects in any part of the empire, we assure them, that we mean no dishonor to United States, nor have it so happily subsisted between us, and which we sincerely wish to see restored . . . We have not raised armies with ambitious designs of separating from Great Britain, and establishing independent states.—We fight not for glory, or for conquest . . .

"In our own native land, in defence of the freedom that is, our birthright, and which we ever enjoyed till the late violation of it—for the protection of our property, acquired solely by the honest industry of our fore fathers and ourselves, against violence actually offered, we have taken up arms. We shall lay them down when hostilities shall cease on the part of the aggressors and all danger of their being renewed shall be removed, and not before.

"With an humble confidence in the mercies of the supreme and impartial Judge and Ruler of the universe, we most devously impose his divine goodness to conduct us happily through this great conflict, to dispose our adversaries to reconciliation on reasonable terms, and thereby to end this war without the horrors of civil war."—From an original in the N. Y. Pub. Library; of Jour. Cent. Cong. (Ford ed.), I: 118-57. The original draft, in the handwriting of John Dickinson, is preserved in the N. Y.
Hist. Soc; the first page of the same, as well as the published broadsides in 1775, is reproduced as an insert in Avery, Hist. of U. S., V: 284. This was answered by Dr. Samuel Johnson, of the ultra-tory party in England, in a diatribe entitled Taxation no Tyranny (London, 1774); 55-57.

The provincial congress appoints a committee "to convene all the Blacksmiths in York, and inquire whether they can make Gun-barrels, Bayonets, and Iron Ramsrods, and what number any of them can make in a given time."—Am. Arch., II: 1342.

On the motion of Col. McDougall, he and three others are appointed a committee "to write to [Great Britain] for four set of good locksmiths, to make gun-locks, and to engage to pay the expense of their passages from Britain to this Colony."—Jour.

The provincial congress resolves "That Ten Shillings shall be allowed to every Soldier that shall enlist in the Continental Army in this Colony, for the present campaign. . . ." and to "the good market, to be some how associated with the Master-Master and Armourer for each Regiment." It is ordered "That Mr. Gerard Bancker, the Barrack-Master [see June 22] deliver to Colonel Mc-Dougall all Such Beds, Blankets, and other utensils for Soldiers, now in the custody of the said Barrack-Master, and belonging to this Colony, as Col. McDougall may require the same. The Captain of the Corps now raising in this Colony."—Am. Arch., II: 1342-45.

The captains appointed by the provincial congress to enlist men in the New York battalion under the command of Colorange Mc Dougall and Ritzema (see July 3) give notice of their places of rendezvous. Volunteers are to receive 12d. per day, and, in addition, a dollar a week until they are encamped.—N. Y. Jour., July 6, 1775. The first division of the battalion sailed from New York on Aug. 8 (q. v.).

In spite of the corporation's action (see July 3), Gov. Tryon sends to the members of the common council the answer he has prepared to their address of July 3 (q. v.). After thanking them for their good wishes, he continues: "I confess my disappointment at the change of Circumstances in this Government and feel the weightiest distress at the present unfriendly aspect of the Times.
I was induced to enter upon this period of the Government, holding the pleasing hope of being able to contribute, in some small degree, the justening the General wish of the Nation for a speedy and happy reconciliation between Great Britain and her Colonies
"If there can be a Time when it would be wisdom and Humanity to listen to the calm and dispassionate voice of reason; and moderation it surely must be here. In the present moment

8 A letter from London to Philadelphia contains the following news: "Your survival depends on your firmness and assiduity. If you submit, sixty of you are to be hanged in Philadelphia, and the same number in New York; five hundred Pounds is offered for Captain Sarat's head in particular—a secret order."—4 Am. Jour., II: 1697. Another letter from London states: "Our dependence on New-York, and (under God) the preservation of that City and Colony from a very shambrous defilement, which has been fatal to the cause of freedom, has been greatly owing to the abilities, zeal, and assiduity of Mr. Holt . . . . The business is now to develop the schemes laying to deceive and divide the New-Yorkers, finding more force like to answer no valuable end. They now talk of blocking up the ports, and thus disturbing the trade, to make people quarreled with each other, which quarrels some are employed to foment."—4 Am. Arch., II: 1614.

10 A Londoner writes to a friend in New York: "The present Struggle between this Country and North-America, I have heard old People 50 Years ago predict . . . . I have always been of Opinion, that the Measures pursued here since 1765, were mistaken and unjust; this Country should have content to take the War from America by Trade, and not by Revenue Acts, imposed on a People unrepresented . . . . The greatest Part of the Nation wish well to America, and detest the present Politicks; so that it is a War of Administration only . . . . the Ministry I think are sick of the War in America, yet I see not the least Trace of their relenting, except I hear of no Preparations to send more Troops; but probably they will cover the Coast with Ships of War, and suffer no Trade, and truly I think that would be a Blessing to America instead of a Curse. The eyes of Government are fixed on the Congress and their Resolutions . . . . I think the Rupture will be much greater before the Wound is healed; some more Blood must be drawn, and then they, when cooled, will heat, and perhaps agree for some Time, but when settled, I imagine America will carry some Points towards the Establishment of their Liberties."—N. Y. T. Merc., Sept. 11, 1775.

11 Much more than 150 of the principal inhabitants of the city, sensible of the advantages derived from the trade of the Province of Connecticut, and desirous of giving their Bills of Credit a Currency equal to those of the other neighbouring Colonies," sign an agreement "to receive the same in all Payments whatsoever." On July 11, the city committee passed a resolution urging all of the inhabitants of the City of New York to join in the plan. 12 Liverpool from New York, and "has brought back the cargo she July took from hence in November last, not being suffered to land it at New-York."—London Chron., July 8-11, 1775.

Gen. Wooster (see June 27) writes to the committee of safety: "I have last night heard a report that the Board of Trade, and the Board the Asia man of war one of the prisoners sent here by the Continental Congress, is now under guard at our camp. I would beg the immediate advice of the Committee of Safety concerning what is best to be done with him; his brother is willing and desirous that he should be sent away somewhere, that he may not endanger the safety of the prisoners; some people think that he was sent on board the Asia; others think it best to have him sent to Connecticut with Gov. Skenne who will go off as soon as this matter can be determined. I hope, therefore, to be assisted with your advice as specially as possible. Immediately on the receipt of this, the committee ordered Hering to be sent under guard to the city ball for examination.—Jour. Provinc. Cong., I: 71. He was found guilty and sentenced to jail in Connecticut.—Ibid., I: 75.

The committee of safety writes to the New York delegates at the continental congress: "We have formed an arrangement of the three thousand men (exclusive of the Green Mountain Boys) which the Continental Congress have ordered us to raise into four battalions, of seven hundred and fifty men each, including their officers, and would be glad to be informed what their pay is to be . . . . we have reason to believe that the four battalions will be completed soon, but are sorry to hear that we have no powder for them when raised."—4 Am. Arch., II: 1784. See July 15.

The committee of safety learn that a mob has burned a boat belonging to the "Asia," and has stolen some private property and military stores. The civil authorities are ordered "to examine strictly into the several matters . . . . and to punish all persons who are guilty of perpetrating the same."—Jour. Provinc. Cong., II: 77-78. On July 18, the committee expressed its approval of the mayor's intention to have a boat built to replace the one burned.—Ibid., I: 81.

Before the carpenters had quite finished the new barge, "some desperately perfidious" one night, saw it to pieces. Another was immediately ordered built; any who interfered with the work were to be considered and treated as enemies to their country."—Ibid., I: 104-5. Gov. Tryon's report of this affair to the Earl of Dartmouth, Aug. 7, was as follows: "On the 13th ultimo a Boat belonging to His Majesty's Ship of War the Asia (the only King's Ship now in this Harbour) under the command of Capt. Van Cleoput was seized and set on Fire by the Mob. The Mayor and Corporation took up the Matter as a high misdemeanor, & attempted a discovery of the perpetrators of an outrage so manfully contrary to the general sense and inclination of the Citizens. At the same time His Excellency the Gov. Van Cleoput was empowered by the Mayor and in that were supported by both the City Committee & Provincial Congress. The Boat when partly finished has since, in the might been secretly cut in Pieces. No other Boat I am told is to build, and I hear it is to be secured against any attempts to destroy it."—N. Y. Col. Arch., III: 1775.

A letter from New York reports that "Every person in this province capable of bearing arms are now completely accoutred and in constant exercise, except those whose avocation will not admit of their attendance, and they pay a fine; but they are looked on in a contemptible light; and must be obliged to take arms in case of emergency."—London Chron., Aug. 26-29, 1775.

Gen. Wooster, in command of the Connecticut forces, asks permission of the New York committee of safety to remove his troops (see June 27) to "a spot of ground belonging to Mr. Sickle, of Harlem." He wants to do this because the soldiers, "in the situation of their encampment, are subjected to many difficulties, which render it next to impossible to maintain that good order and discipline which is entirely necessary in the regulation of an army . . . . it will be much for the benefit of the service to remove the troops to a farther distance from the town."—Jour. Provinc. Cong., II: 75-80. So likewise. The change was made on July 18.—Rivington's Gazetteer, July 21, 1775.

Another letter in regard to the troops (see July 12) is sent by the committee of safety to the delegates at Philadelphia. This states that the enlisted men "grow uneasy for want of money, which prevents them from continuing. We hope, however, that as no powder, we have no blankets. For God's sake send us money, send us arms, send us ammunition."—4 Am. Arch., II: 1788-89.

For the answer from the delegates, see July 18.
CHRONOLOGY: THE REVOLUTIONARY PERIOD: 1763-1776

The committee of safety agrees that "Herman Zelwitz shall be major, and is hereby appointed major of the first regiment of the troops now raising in this Colony."—Jour. Proven. Cong., I: 30; II: N. Y. Jour., July 20, 1775. Zelwitz was later detected in traitorous acts (see Aug. 24, 1776).

The committee of safety issues this letter to the colonels of the New York regiments: "You are requested to prepare and lay before the congress of this Colony at New-York, a state of your regiment, and of the number of men raised for it by each company with all possible despatch. You will also be pleased to inform the Congress when you expect your Regiment will be completed and ready to take the field. We pray you to give all possible despatch in this business; the present circumstances makes it of great importance. —Jour. Proven. Cong., I: 23.

In a letter to the committee of safety, the New York delegates at the continental congress write: "We are not insensible to the distress to which you must be reduced, for the want of money, arms, and powder [see July 12 and 13]. With the first, you will soon be supplied. The difficulties attending an emission so common, of which the necessary guards against counterfeits is not the least, has rendered its process very tedious. We can give you no assurances of a supply of arms and ammunition from this quarter. Every scheme which could be devised to procure them from abroad has been pursued, and on their success, and the efforts of the Company, we must depend. Some blankets are to be had in this City [Philadelphia], which will be purchased as soon as the money is issued."—4 Am. Arch., II: 168.

Ethan Allen, writing to the New York congress from Ticonderoga, says: "When I reflect on the unhappy controversy which hath many years subsisted between the government of New-York and the settlers on the New-Hampshire Grants, and also contemplate on the friendship and union that hath lately taken place between the Government and those its former discontented subjects, in making a united resistance against ministerial vengeance and slavery, I cannot but hope for further hopes of reconciliation. To promote this salutary end I shall contribute my influence, assuring your Honours, that your respectful treatment, not only to Mr. Warner [lieutenant-colonel of the battalion] and myself, but to the Green Mountain Boys in general, in forming them into a battalion, are by them duly regarded, and I will be responsible that they will retaliate this favour by boldly hazarding their lives, if need be, in the common cause of America."—4 Am. Arch., II: 1695.

Benjamin Franklin proposes a plan of confederating the American colonies.—Jour. Comt. Cong. (Ford ed.), II: 195-99. Col. McHenry is appointed by the safety, to "take possession of the Town Barracks for such of the Troops now under his command as he shall think proper to place there." Mr. Cureninus is to supply them with provisions.—4 Am. Arch., II: 1797.

The city treasurer is ordered "to pay to John Watts Junr. Esqr or the sum of £1000, to be employed & laid out by the Committee [see April 6] towards Building the Brieveley."—M. C. C., VIII: 99. See Nov. 2.

An advertisement informs the public that William Kambel, "Clock and Watch-Maker, at the Sign of the Dial Near the Counties Market," carries on that business in all its branches, and "likewise the gold and silver smiths business."—N. Y. Merc., July 24, 1775.

By a vote in the provincial congress, held in New York, Ebenezer Hazard, bookkeeper of this city, is recommended for the position of post master of the city, instead of the rival candidate, John Holt, the printer.—Jour. of the Provin. Congress. 90. See Oct. 23. See also the account of Hazard in A. G. Vermilye's paper on "The Early New York Post Office," read before the N. Y. Hist. Soc. on Dec. 2, 1884, and published in Mag. Am. Hist., Feb., 1885.

Col. McDougal is appointed "a military committee, for fourteen days from this day, with full power during that time to order and dispose of all things whatsoever, relating to or concerning the troops raised or to be raised in this Colony."—Jour. Provin. Cong., I: 91.

A London Weekly news says that the ministry has "at present in agitation" the following plan: "With the assistance of Governor Tryon, who is much relied on for the purpose, to get immediate possession of New-York and Albany; to fill both of these Cities with very strong garrisons; to declare all rebels who do not join the King's Forces; to command the Hudson and East Rivers with a number of small men-of-war and cutters, stationed in different parts of it, so as wholly to cut off all communication by water between New-York and the Provinces to the northward of it, and between New-York and Albany, except for the King's service; and to prevent, also, all communication between the City of New-York and the Provinces of New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, and those to the southwest ..."—4 Am. Arch., II: 1753-56.

The provincial council receives instructions from Lord Dartmouth relating to the grant of charters to Presbyterian churches; papers relating thereto, are referred to the attorney-general.—Cal. Coun. Min., 505.

In this month, Hugh Gaine printed a poem of 114 lines, Aug. entitiled "Gen. Gage's Soliloquy." This represented Gage in various moods. First, he mourns the destruction he has committed, his loss of friends, and his fight against men of English blood; next, he purports himself that it is right to attack those who defy the king, and that all such rebels should be severely punished; and finally, he is again overcome with remorse at the remembrance of Lexington and Bunker Hill, and resolves to flee to some land where he is unknown. The poem ends thus: "To wars like these I bid a long Good Night / Let North and George themselves their battles fight."—From a photostat (made from an original in the Library Company of Philadelphia) in the N. Y. Pub. Library (Evan, 146).

The provincial congress resolves "That every officer who has already enlisted, or who shall hereafter enlist a soldier in the Regiments now raising in this Colony, shall be entitled to a dollar for each such soldier who shall pass muster, and be received into the service, the officers paying the expense of such enlistment."—4 Am. Arch., II: 1810.

On or about this day, John Anderson started publication of The Constitutional Gazette, a bi-weekly newspaper. The last issue located is dated Aug. 28, 1776, and publication must have been discontinued soon thereafter, as the British entered the city in September.—See Early N. Y. Newspapers, II: 419; and the "Bibliography of Am. Newspapers," in the Am. Antiquarian Proceedings, XXVII (N. S.): 395.

The common council orders a further issue of notes to the value of £2,600, to be applied towards carrying on the New-York Water Works."—M. C. C., VIII: 100. On Sept. 6, the mayor and the recorder were directed to be the signers of the notes of 8s. and 1l. to Alderman Waddell and the "Chamberlain" of those of 4s. and 2s.—Ibid., VIII: 103. The first notes had been ordered on July 25, 1774 (q. v.), and Aug. 25, 1774 (q. v.). The N. Y. Pub. Library owns a complete series of the newspaper, printed by Hugh Gaine, 1774-76. The provincial congress orders: "That the several Committees and Sub-Committees of the different Counties within this Colony, be directed immediately to purchase or hire all the Arms, with or without Bayonets, that are fit for present Service (so the Credit of this Colony) and to deliver them to the respective Colonels in this Colony employed in the Continental Service, or their Order for the Supply of the Continental Army."—From a broadside preserved in the N. Gen. Wooster, with the Connecticut forces, leaves the encampment at Harlem (see July 15) and crosses the East River at Horn's Hook to Long Island (see Aug. 7).—Rivington's Gazetteer, Aug. 10, 1775. He received orders from the provincial congress on Aug. 16 (p. 1).

The provincial congress resolves "That every county, city, manor, town, precinct and district within this Colony . . . be divided into districts or beats. . . in such manner that out of each may be formed one military company, ordinarily to consist of about eighty-three able bodied and effective men . . . The battalion commanded by Col. Lasher [see July 3], the companies of artillery, light horse and huskars in the city and county of New-York . . . excepted."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 104; N. Y. Jour., Aug. 16, 1775.

A proposal is made "to the Independent companies of Col. Lasher's battalion for a certain number of each company to turn out as Minute Men." To "the honour of the whole battalion," they unanimously agree "to act as Minute Men, and to be ready at a moment's warning to defend their much injured country."—Col. Gen., Aug. 19, 1775.

The provincial congress orders Wooster to remain on Long Island (see Aug. 8) until further notice, because "it is probable future attempts will be made by order of Gen. Gage to take the live stock from the east end of Long Island and the islands near it."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 106. But, on Aug. 18 (p. 4-v.), the general received notice to return to the city.

"The Sub-Committee, appointed by the General Committee, to divide the city and county of New York into beats or districts for forming the militia [see Aug. 9] . . . request that the captains of Colonel Lasher's battalion, the independent and associated companies, captains of light horse and huskars, furnish their respective men with certificates of their being inhabited in their said companies, the better to enable the committee to form the said beats."—Rivington's Gazetteer, Aug. 17, 1775; N. Y. Jour., Aug. 19, 1775.

A letter of this date from New York concludes: "There is very little reason to expect a speedy reconciliation between the Colonies and the Mother Country, as the former do not seem the leastinclined to make any concessions on their side but expect a total compliance with all their demands on the part of Great Britain. Independence of the Mother Country has been long in agitation, and the throwing the tea into the sea was the manoeuvre deliberately concerted to begin the attempt."—London Chron., Oct. 5-7, 1775.

The provincial congress writes to Gen. Wooster: "we desire you to return to your camp at Harlem, with the utmost speed, to assist in the defence of this city and province."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 108. On Aug. 23 (p. t.), Washington wrote Wooster some news which prevented the latter's compliance with the above order.

The provincial congress passes a resolution "That no cattle, sheep, poultry or live stock of any kind, except horses, be exported from this Colony . . . until it shall be otherwise ordered by this or the Continental Congress."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 111; N. Y. Merc., Aug. 19, 1775; N. Y. Jour., Aug. 24, 1775.

A shoemaker named Tweed or Tweedy is taken into custody on the dock near Beekman Slip by the populace, because he has uttered in public "many disrespectul and abusive Words, of the American Congresses, Committees, and Proceedings, in their Opposition to the Tyrannical Measures of the British Ministry . . . expressing his Desire, that General Gage, with his Forces would arrive here, to punish the Rebels; in which Service he was willing and desirous to lend his Assistance, and distinguish himself." He is released only after being tarred and feathered, and "after asking Pardon on his Knees, praying for Success to General Washington, Aug. and the American Arms, and Destruction to General Gage and his Crew of Traitors."—N. Y. Jour., Aug. 24, 1775; N. Y. Merc., Aug. 8, 1775.

Twenty-one pieces of ordnance ("nine-pounders"), "that were 23 mounted on the Battery under Fort George," are removed by the citizens to the Common.—N. Y. Col. Dict., VIII: 631-32; 641-42. The cannon were dragged up Broadway and ranged before the liberty pole.—Cong. Gen., Aug. 20, 1775. The fact that the provincial Congress had "ordered the Cannon on Carriages to the Fortification to be removed" was communicated to "the Asia Man o' War," which thereupon "ordered 2 Barges to lie off the Fortieth nere eno' to inspect what was done."—On finding, about midnight, "that a Militia Comp^2 was privately under arms & removing the Cannon," the barges drew near and fired. The militia then fired on the barges, killing one man and wounding others. "Upon this some Guns were fired from the Man o' War a 74 Gun ship, and at length she discharged a whole Broadside upon the City . . . The Militia proceeded & removed all the Cannon as ordered. The City was thrown into the greatest Consternation & Distress. And next day Multitudes of Women and Children were removed."—Literary Diary of Extra Stiles, I: 609.

During the "bring," a house next to Roger Morris's and Samuel Frauncis's at the corner of the exchange, each had an eighteen pound ball shot into their roofs; some other houses suffered, but the principal damage was sustained by some small buildings adjoining the battery."—Rivington's Gazetteer, Aug. 31, 1775; Am. Arch., III: 259. The statement about "Frauncis" is substantiated by Freneau, who mentions the incident in one of his poems: "Becare a broadside was ended all must begin again—/ By Jove it was nothing but Fire away Flannagan! At first we suppos'd it was only a sham, / Till he drove a round ball thro' the roof of black Sam."—The Poems of Philip Freneau, written chiefly during the late War (1786), 211. Gen. Washington writes to Gen. Wooster: "Yesterday I received advice from Boston that a number of transports have sailed on a second expedition for fresh provisions . . . we think Montauk Point on Long Island a very probable place of their landing. I have, therefore, thought it best to give you the earliest intelligence, but I do not mean to confine your attention or vigilance to that place; you will please to extend your views as far as the mischief may be probably extended." In consequence of this, Wooster did not carry out the provincial congress's order of Aug. 18 (p. 5-v.).—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 125. He and the troops returned to the city on Sept. 12 (p. 6-v.).

"Letters from New York . . . bring an account, that the principal families have left New York, and are retired into the mountains, part of that province, where they live in tents and huts, till some convenient houses can be erected for them; and that they are supplied with all necessaries of life, and that in great plenty, from the back settlers, who enjoy the fruits of their labours, being out of the reach of any ships of war."—London Chron., Aug. 22-24, 1775.

Capt. Vaudeppt writes to the city officials: "After the event of last Night [see Aug. 23] I think it necessary to inform you, that having Information that it was intended by some People in New York to take away the Guns from the Battery, which, as Stores belonging to the King, it was my Duty to protect. I sent a Boat to lie near the Shore, to watch the Movement; they began to move the Guns from the Battery, which being observed by the Officer in the Boat, he left his Station to come on board to inform me thereof, but being perceived from the Shore, he was fired upon by a great many Musketry, by which one of the Men in the Boat was shot dead. My Duty called upon me to repel an Attack of this sort. With all the defence I could make, I sent one of my Men to fire upon the Battery. I acquaint you with this that the People of the Town may not imagine it is my Intention to do them Hurt, which I wish as much as possible to avoid; but if they will persist in behaving in such a Manner as to make their Safety, and my Duty incompatible, the mischiefs that may arise must lie at their Doors, and not mine." In another letter of the same date, 24th Aug.

Vaudreur reviews the actions of the people, and then adds: "this is to require at the Hands of the Magistrates, due Satisfaction for these and such like acts, as I must otherwise look upon these Acts, not as Acts of Rights, but as done by the whole Community."

On Aug. 25, he wrote again: "I have just now received yours; in return to which I am to acquaint you that the Musket fired from our Boat was fired at a signal towards the Ship, and not at the Battery. You say you are at a Loss to account how my Duty could oblige me to fire upon the City, in defence of those Guns, in the Seat of civil Government; and you add, that you can neither account for my Indulgence than an Hour after the return of the Boats and the Removal of the Cannon, for firing a Broadside at the City at large. You surely cannot doubt its being my Duty to defend every Part of the King's Stores, wherever they may be: For this Purpose I fired upon the Battery, as the only Means to prevent the Intentions of the People employed in removing the Guns. For a considerable Time I thought they had de- sisted from their Purpose, till their bustling and their firing from the Walls upon the Ship, convinced me to the contrary; this occasioned the Broadside to be fired, not at the City at large, but at the most effectual Method to prevent their persisting in their Pursuit, which it was impossible I could tell they had effected. I have done nothing but what I shall persist in, and what I know to be my Duty; In the doing which I shall, if possible, avoid doing Hurt to anyone." — N. T. Merc., Aug. 28, 1775.

It is resolved by the provincial congress, in session at New York, That no more cannon or stores be removed from the Battery, but that guard be strengthened this night by an additional company, in order to prevent any insult being offered to His Excellency the Governor. And . . . That Col. Lasher be desired to strengthen the guard intended for this evening, by adding the Grenadier company to that guard . . . and that upon a message from His Excellency's Staff, they return to the house and protect him from insults."— Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 122.

Pastor Shewkirk records in his diary: "Things were the same in the Town as yesterday, & rather worse. A correspondence was carried on between the Capt. of the Asia, & the Mayor of the City [see Aug. 24], & thru' the latter with the Committee or Congress, to adjust matters. Gov. Tryon acted as Mediator."— The Campaign of 1776, part 2, 103.

An item of London news states: "His Majesty has been pleased to promote William Tryon, Esq: Governor of the province of New-York, to a peerage. You may be the first regulation from which appointment it cannot be supposed that gentleman will be honoured with any military command upon the American staff."— Rivington's Gazetteer, Nov. 2, 1775.

Pastor Shewkirk records in his diary: "The Moving out of the Town comprising the City looks in some Streets as the Plague had been in it, so many Houses being shut up."— The Campaign of 1776, part 2, 103.

A small sloop comes down the North River from "Little Egypt," and anchors beside the "Asia," in order, it is supposed, "to supply that Ship with Necessaries." The sloop was closely watched until Sept. 3, "when she set sail and stood up the River attended by an armed Sloop and some Boats from the Asia, but she was immediately pursued by a Number of Boats from this City, and soon taken."— N. T. Merc., Sept. 4, 1775.

An extract of a letter from New York to a merchant in London reads: "If this letter brings you this you will undoubtedly receive the New York Papers containing an account of the conduct of Captain Vanderput of the Asia, in firing on the town to stop the removal of the cannon which were carrying away by order of the Congress [see Aug. 23]. These papers speak very disrespectfully of Captain's behaviour, but I assure you they have treated him with great injustice, by charging him with cruelty and inhumanity. The case was briefly and truly this: Captain Vanderput being informed that the people were removing his Majesty's cannon, &c. he fired only a few shot into the town by way of intimida- tion, and dispersed the mob by the sight of which they actu- ally moved off near twenty pieces, and but three of the provincials were slightly wounded; whereas, had [he] been cruel or inhuman, he could soon have destroyed the whole town . . . But the Patri- ots here constantly misrepresent everything; and our news-papers contain very little to be depended on."— London Chron., Oct. 19-21, 1775.

A boat, in which there are two negroes and two white men, is seen coming from the transport in the North River. When taken before the Governor, said the negroes he had been hired to carry two women on board the transport. This they did, and then fetched the men on shore. One white man, "being a suspicious Fellow, and of a refractory Temper," was committed to the care of the guard in the barracks, but the other three were discharged. "The People that were on the Wharf, drew the Boat out of the Water, and carried it to the Commons, where they set it on Fire, and reduced it to Ashes, amidst the Acclamations of Thousands."— N. T. Mercy, Sept. 4, 1775; Rivington's Gazetteer, Sept. 7, 1775; N. T. Jour., Sept. 7, 1775.

"We are informed that the first desecration of the Provincial troops was from the regiments raised by the New Yorkers, and that it was occasioned by one of their serjeants and a few of their rank and filemen being taken into custody for a supposed insult to one of their officers— the serjeant demanded a Court Martial, which was refused, and he and the private men were punished with a degree of severity, and reduced of it in that country. This spread such a panic among the rebel troops, as they had no redress from such treatment whenever their commander thought fit to inflict it, that in the course of two days near 300 of them deserted."— London Chron., Aug. 29-31, 1775.

The "sign of the Blue Bell," a tavern kept by one Linton, is mentioned in an order of the provincial congress.— Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 119. See Landmark Map Ref: Key, III: 977.

A sloop with dispatches from Gen. Gage, which has been lying near the man-of-war, sends her boat ashore with four men and one woman, who are immediately taken prisoners and carried to the guard-house. The woman was discharged, but the men were detained for further examination. The boat was "stove to Pieces on the Beach near Greenwicch, & then burnt."— N. T. Jour., Sept. 7, 1775; N. T. Merc., Sept. 4, 1775; Rivington's Gazetteer, Sept. 7, 1775.

The provincial congress passes a resolution providing that a committee of the city of New-York, and hereby exempted from the military night-watch, and being called upon as minutemen, or of the militia to go out of the said city."— Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 155; Mon. Com. Coun. (1862), 671.

The provincial congress sends the following letter to Augustus van Cortlandt, clerk of the city and county. "The alarming state of public affairs command our attention to the safety of the records under your care, and although we do not at present perceive any immediate danger to this city; yet we are of opinion that matters of such vast importance should not be entrusted to an uncertain con- tainer. We therefore determined that if [a] box containing these records should be destroyed, it would unhinge the property of numbers in this Colony, and throw all our legal proceedings into the most fatal conclusion.

We do, therefore, request you to inquire for some place of security to deposit the records under your care, and thereby inform the Committee of Safety of such place, that they may give further directions on this subject."— Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 135. See Sept. 5.

An anonymous letter of this date, directed to Maj. Thomas Moncrief at Boston, was found, on Sept. 7 (p. v.), among the papers taken from Capt. Isaac Winn. It read in part:

"Dear Major: I wrote to you a few days ago, by the transport which sailed from hence. I hope you have received it. It is now decried by Congress criminal to speak, and as it would be equally so to write, not knowing into whose hands this may fall before it reaches you, I am determined not to transgress, as I wish to re- main in the Country as long as I can, and not to do any thing that may cause a banishment, or the punishment of being sent to the mines of Simbury, which are punishments daily inflicted on those poor culprits who are found or even supposed to be inimical. Doubt respecting this unique little country. You will be ferreted and exposed to insults I would wish you to avoid." This letter was judged, "from the handwriting and other circumstances," to have been written by Theophilus Bache, a merchant of the city. Bache was ordered to appear before the committee, but the door-keeper reported that he had gone out of town.—Am. Arch., III: 88-96.

Because a great number of the enlisted men are not armed, and every effort to hire or purchase arms has failed to procure a sufficient number, the committee of safety passes the following resolution: "That all such arms as are fit to be procured for the troops raised in this Colony, which shall be found in the hands or custody of any person who has not signed the general association in this Colony, shall be impressed for the use of the said troops." All the muskets so seized are to be appraised and certificates of their value given to their owners who are to be paid by the treasurer of the provincial congress "provided the same be not returned at or before the conclusion of the present unhappy controversy between Great Britain and the united Colonies."—Jour. Pastor Sheidlake records in his diary: "The Town-Soldiers, or the Minute Men made a great Parade to-day; marching with their Baggage & Provision, &c. Gov. Tryon sends the following letter to Mayer Hicks: "From undoubted authority from the City of Philadelphia the Conti-13 nal Congress have recommended it to the Provincial Congress to seize or take up the officers of this Government, and particularly myself, by name. I am therefore to desire you will inform the Corporation and citizens of this City, that I place my security here in their protection; that when that confidence is withdrawn, by act of my person, the Commander-in-Chief's ships of war in the harbour will demand that the inhabitants discharge me on board the fleet, and on refusal, enforce the demand with their whole power. Therefore, anxious to prevent, if possible, so great a calamity to this City, as well as inconvenience to myself, I am ready, should the voice of the citizens be unfavourable to my staying among them, immediately to embark on board the Asia requesting that the citizens will defeat every attempt that may be made to hinder my removal, with my domesticks and effects, should that be their wish, since I returned to this Province with every honourable intention to serve them, consistent with my bounden duty to my Sovereign." — 4 Am. Arch., III: 1025; and

The date of Oct. 10 appears to be erroneous, as Mayor Hicks' letter

John Hunter submits to the provincial congress a plan "for establishing a Linen Manufactory." After discussing the need of this, he suggests the following estimate for the work: "£ 2000 to be appropriated by the Congress to the purpose of setting up manufactories of linen, woollen, &c., in the Province. This money to be repaid (if repaid at all) by a lottery; let the profits of the manufactory be set aside to public services. It will not do to repay the £ 2400, with the money arising from the sale of the goods, because this will very soon put an end to manufacturing." — 4 Am. Arch.,

The Petition of the Congress of America to the King" is read in the house of commons. There arose a dispute after the reading of the petition, as to whether Mr. Penn, governor of Pennsylvania, who had brought the petition from America should be called to authenticate it and give his views on the condition of the colonies.
It was finally decided that he should be asked to come before parliament on Nov. 10. He was examined on that day as to the character of the Americans and of congress, the reason for armament, the resources of Pennsylvania, their attitude in regard to taxation, and the powers of congress.

After Penn's withdrawal, the Duke of Richmond opened the debate. He pointed out the difficulties of carrying on a war against Prussia, the inconveniences of their taxes, the army in the state of Lexington, whose love for liberty might not be quenched even by the desolation of their towns, who knew the nature of their country, and who had sufficient internal resources to carry on the war. On the other hand the British would have to raise an army of hirelings, to carry provisions across the ocean, and fight in an unknown land.

He concluded by moving "That the matter of the said Petition affords Ground of Conciliation of the unhappy Differences subsisting between the Mother Country and the Colonies; and that it is highly necessary that proper steps be immediately taken for attaining so desirable an object."

The Earl of Dartmouth contended that it was impossible to recognize the petition without at the same time relinquishing the sovereignty of the British Parliament. In reply to Richmond's arguments be pointed out that "in a war with America they would easily exceed in numbers, and that the fact that the Americans had an army so well equipped was a proof of their disloyalty." He further asked: "Did it become the offending party to dictate the terms of peace?"

The Earl of Shelburne declared "there were only two obstacles which could be urged against the motion. It might be urged in the first place, that to yield to the petitions of the citizens that they have received up the point of taxation. In the next place it might be censured, as derogating from the dignity of parliament, to treat with an assembly not legalized as a congress. . . . The point of taxation had repeatedly been given up, even by the ministers themselves.
. . . Taking money without the consent of the people, was so fundamentally wrong, that the more we consider it, the more we become convinced that we have no right to tax America, and are afraid of rendering herself stronger. Suspend your operations, and you furnish her with the very means of raising in her demands, if not of totally disclaiming all dependence on this country. Finally, be sensible of your experience in recollecting Dartmouth’s motion was lost: “For the motion 27: Proxies 6; Against it 60; Proxies 26.”—Parl. Hist. of Eng., XVIII: 897–936.

The committee of safety receives the following letter (signed “A”) from Philadelphia: “I sincerely sympathize with you in your distress, and, from the inhuman proceedings of those tyrants that infest America, I am afraid your valuable Town of New-York is in danger of being burnt. I would therefore recommend to you to prepare for vessels, which, properly made use of, will defend you against your internal enemies, and save your Town.”—Am. Arch., III: 153.

All of the men nominated by the committee of safety on Nov. 3 (p. 10) as delegates to the congress are elected, with the exceptions of Isaac Low, Abraham Walton, and John Marston. In place of these last, Cornelius Clopper, Thomas Smith, and John Horton are chosen.—N. Y. Merc., Nov. 15, 1775.

Dartmouth informs the governors in America that they “are at liberty to withdraw themselves from the Colony whenever their personal safety shall make it necessary for them to do so.”—N. Y. Col. Doc., VIII: 64.

The Sub Committee appointed by the general Committee, to consider a mode for employing the infinite number of people who are in distress, reports that a number of people have formed themselves into a company “for the promoting American manufactories,” and have decided upon the following regulations:

1. That the Society shall be called, The New-York Society for employing the industrious Poor, and promoting Manufactury.
2. That the company shall continue for three whole years, commencing on the day of the first general meeting of the subscribers.
3. That a single share in the company be fixed at Ten Pounds, and after payment of their respective subscriptions, every subscriber shall be entitled to a vote in common on all occasions, and also to be elected to any office belonging to the company; and no person shall be elected with any office, but a member thereof.
4. That we will begin with the manufacturing of Woolens, Linens, and Cottons, and carry on the same to the greatest extent and advantage.
5. That the General Meeting of the Subscribers, shall be called by written tickets within one week after two hundred Subscriptions are obtained, in order to choose by ballot, for the first year, one of the Managers, a Secretary and Treasurer.
6. That the number of the Managers may be changed, annually on the day of election, by re-electing the old Managers, and adding four new to their number.
7. That the Managers carry on the Manufactury according to the rules of the Company, and shall have the whole direction thereof.
8. That the Treasurer shall give security for the faithful discharge of his trust; and account for, and deliver up to his successor, all such papers, books, writings, and effects, as shall then be in his hands.
9. That a state of the manufactury, and of the companies accounts, shall be fairly made out, at the end of every six months, and kept in the manufactury store, for the inspection of the members.

The report is thereupon unanimously approved by the general committee, “as proper to be recommended to the consideration of the inhabitants of this City.”—N. Y. Jour., Nov. 16, 1775 4 Am. Arch., III: 1424–25.

The provincial council receives from John Pownall a royal proclamation, dated Aug. 23, for suppressing seditious and rebellion in America, and orders that it be published.—Col. Comin. Min., 506. It was published the next day. —Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 834.

John Morris Scott writes to Col. Richard Varick: “... Every office shut up almost but Sam. Jones’s who will work for 6½ a day & live accordingly—All Business stagnated the City hall deserted for fear of a Bombardment—a new Congress elected—Yesterday the new Congress was to meet but I believe they did not make a House. ... Who can prize life without Liberty? It is a blessed privilege that your people enjoy.”—N.Y. City during the Am. Revolution (privately printed for the Mercantile Library Assn., 1861), 83–85. The letter is from “Greenwich,” which is usually considered to have extended only as far north as 21st St. (see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 987). As a footnote states that Scott resided “in the seat since known as The Hermitage and The Temple of Health,” which was burned, until a recent date, between the third Street, between Eighth and Ninth avenues, and as Pl. 41, Vol. I, indicates that Scott’s house really was in that neighbour- hood, it is apparent that the name “Greenwich” was sometimes applied to a much larger section than we generally associate with the village. See also Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 947, and Pl. 176, Vol. III. Mr. Lamb is evidently in error in placing Scott’s residence at 35rd St., instead of 43rd St.—Lamb, Hist. City of N.Y., III: 90 (footnote). See view in Man. Com. Coun. (1835), 212.

Parson Seabury (see Feb. 23), Mayor Underhill of Westchester, and Judge Fowler of Eastchester, are seized by a band of Connecticut rangers led by Capt. Sears. One account of the seizure reads: “On the 20th of this month, sixteen respectable inhabitants of this town, in company with Captains Sears, set out from this place [New Haven], for East and West Chester, in the province of New-York, to disarm the principal Tories there, and secure the persons of Parson Seabury, Judge Fowler, and Lord Underhill.—On their way thereto they were joined by the Captains Richards, Seilick, and Mead with about 30 men.—At Martinneck they burnt a small sloop, which was purchased by government, for the purpose of carrying provisions on board the Asia.—At East Chester they seized Judge Fowler, then detained a man named Seabury and Underhill. Having possessed themselves of these two caiiffs, they sent them to Connecticut under a strong guard.”

The main body of the troops pressed on to New York, where they attacked Rivington’s printing-office on Nov. 23 (p. 3)—Penn. Jour., Dec. 6, 1775.

In a memorial to the general assembly of Connecticut, Dec. 20, Seabury adds further details of the raid, as follows: “Your Memorialist begs leave further to represent, that he hath heard a verbal account that one of his daughters was abused and insulted by some of the people when he was at his house on the 22d of November. That a bayonet was thrust through her cap, and her cap thereby tore from [her] head. That the handkerchief about her neck was pierced by a bayonet, both before and behind. That a quilt in the frame on which the daughters of your Memorialist were at work was cut and pierced with bayonets as to be rendered useless. That the wife obtained the widows of old age through to open his book, they examined his papers,” and from which some money was taken. In the same memorial, Seabury represents the charges against him:

That he ... had entered into a combination with six or seven others to seize Captain Seabury, at the instance of the County of West Chester, and Convoy him on board a man-of-war.

That your Memorialist had signed a Protest ... against the proceedings of the Continental Congress.

That your Memorialist had neglected to open his church on the day of the Continential Fast.

And that he had written pamphlets and newspapers against the liberties of America.
"To the first and last of the charges your Memorialist pleads not guilty..." He considers it a high infringement of the liberty for which the victorious sons of America are now nobly struggling, to be carried by force out of one colony into another, for the sake either of trial or imprisonment in the other colony. Three days after his "spiritual" memorial was written, "the gang who took [him] prisoner thought proper to withdraw their guard and let [him] return to his desolated home," after a captivity of about five weeks.—Dawson's "Westchester Co., N. T. during the Am. Rev.," 450-35.

In Nov., of Dec. 12, to Gov. Trumbull, of Connecticut, the provincial Congress of New York remonstrated against the raids on Rivington and Seabury. With regard to Parson Seabury, the letter says: "Mr. Seabury, we are informed, is still detained. If such should be the case, we must entreat your friendly interposition for his immediate discharge; the more especially as, considering his ecclesiastical character, (which, perhaps, is venerated by many friends to liberty,) the severity that has been used towards him may be subject to misconstructions prejudicial to the common cause."—Am. Arch., IV: 402.

Fowler and Underhill were released much earlier than Seabury, after having subscribed to depositions in which they apologized for signing a protest against the resolutions of the continental congress.—Penn. Jour., Dec. 6, 1775. Dawsoo, op. cita, 139 footnote, cites bitter political controversies between Isaac Sears and both Seabury and Rivington as the reason for the harsher treatment accorded by them.

The Connecticut "banditti" (see Nov. 22) continue their marauding expedition by an attack on Rivington's printing-office. A band of about 75 entered New York "at noon-day on horseback, with bayonets fixed, in the greatest regularity went down the main street and drew up in close order before the printing office of the infamous James Rivington.—A small detachment entered it, and [in] about three quarters of an hour, brought off the principal part of his types, for which they offered to give an order on Lord Dunmore. They then fasted and wheeled to the left, and marched out of town to the tune of Yankee jigs. The vast concourse of people assembled at the Coffee-House bridge, on their leaving the ground, gave them three very hearty cheers."—Penn. Jour., Dec. 6, 1775, cf. N. E. Chron. (Cambridge), Dec. 7, 1775. For a fuller compilation of contemporary reports and opinions regarding the events, see Man. Com. Coun. (1668), 813-37.

The incident brings together the general committee for the city and county. They consider the act "a breach of the Association," and a motion is made "that Isaac Sears, Samuel Broome, and John Woodward, be cited to appear before this Board, in answer for their conduct in entering the City of New York in the capacity of a hostile manner."—Am. Arch., III: 1636.

Losing, in his Field Book of the Revolution, and Sparks, in his Life of Governour Morris, describing the affair, say that the types were melted into bullets. Dawson disputes this, declaring that Connecticut printers were too glad to increase their limited supplies of types to convert into bullets, for which, in his opinion, cheaper lead was better adapted.—Dawsoo, op. cita, 133, footnote. The Journal's account says, further, that "Seabury, Fowler, and Underhill were (with the types and arms) safely lodged in New Haven."—Penn. Jour., Dec. 6, 1775.

In reporting to Dartmouth the raid upon Rivington, Gov. Tryon wrote: "Isaac Sears is evidently a tool of the Continental Army, publicly declaring he acts respectively of Congresses and Committees; and I am told by good authority he showed a letter he received from General Lee, recommending the seizure of my personal property, to do it at all events, and that the Continental Army would bear him out..."

"The intimation of Isaac Sears' design speedily to revisit this Province with a more numerous body of the Connecticut Rioters, and to take away the Records of the Province induced me to order such publick Records as were most interesting to the Crown to be brought on board to me..."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 846.

On Nov. 26, John Jay, a New York delegate to the continental congress, wrote from Philadelphia to the president of the provincial congress in New York: "The New-England exploit is much talked of, and conjecture; the number as to part the Convention will take to relative; some consider it as an ill compliment to the Government of the Province, and prophecy that you have too much christian meekness to take any notice of it. For my own part, I don't approve of the fact, and think it neither argues much wisdom, nor much bravery; at any rate if it was to be done, I wish our own people, and not strangers, had taken the liberty of doing it. I confess I am not a little jealous of the honour of the Province, and feel prevailed upon by the reflections and some little spirit being mingled with its prudence."—Jour. Proviv. Contr., I: 218. A similar sentiment was expressed by the general committee of the city and county in a petition to the provincial congress on Dec. 5. They believed the repetition of such incursions "will be productive of many great and evil consequences," and expressed the hope that the provincial congress might "devise some expedient, to prevent, for the future, the inhabitants of any of the neighbouring Colonies coming into this, to direct the publick affairs of it or to destroy the property or invade the liberty of its inhabitants."—Am. Arch., IV: 185-84. For the action of the provincial congress, see Dec. 12.

The common council authorizes payment of £10 to Stephen Alleo for the repair of the "new Road" for one year.—M. C. C., VIII: 117. Apparently, Allen did not get his money at this time, for we find that a bill of his, sworn to before Alderman John Brooke on Oct. 10, 1782, and paid at half that time by the city, is not paid (M. C. C., 1784-1831, IV: 753) for "keeping the road in repair from G1 George Street to sand hill road in ye 8th year 1775—from Jan'y 1st to Decem't 31st."—From the original, preserved in metal file No. 6, city clerk's record-room. George Street was the name given to the extension of Broadway from about Ann St., to the present Atror Pl. (see Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 956, title "Broadway"). It is first shown (without name) on Pl. 50, Vol. I.

It may have been as early as this time that the archived stone bridge at the present Canal St., on Broadway, was erected, for discussion of which see Pl. 54, Vol. III and April 18, 1772, Vol. IV. A social club was held Saturday evenings, in the winter at Francis' Tavern, corner Broad and Dock Sts., and in summer at Kip's Bay, dispersed this month. A list of its members was found among the effects of one of them, John Moore, and presented by his son, Thomas W. C. Moore, to the N. Y. Hist. Soc. Among these are some of the best known men of their time, including John Jay, Governor Morris, and Robert R. Livingston. They appear as either "disaffected" or "loyal," and other comments about each of them have been added. The list was printed in Man. Com. Coun. (1853), 438-45.

On Nov. Tryon sets out for New York, having been ordered by the Board of War to return to Europe (see July 7); he writes to Samuel Bayard, deputy-secretary, concerning the safety of the records.—Col. Coun. Min., 506.

A provincial council meeting is held on board the ship "Dutchess of Gordon," in New York harbour, the following members being present: Gov. Tryon, and Messrs. De Lancy, Apthorp, and Smith. The council resolved that after giving the evening of Dec. 12 to the Captain Sears had formed a Design of carrying them into New England as a Pledge for or to compel the Fidelity of this Province to the great Association," Tryon directed the deputy secretary to remove for the present, on board the ship Dutchess of Gordon, such records as immediately concern the interest of the crown.

The council approves this order, but when the governor suggests the removal also of the records which relate to private property, Smith contends that "if any man was hurt by the Loss of the Records the Authors of the Remoral would be answerable in Damages and must be named in the Petition." The other members agree with Smith, and therefore advise that Tryon leave these latter "in their present situation in the secretary's office."—Wm. Smith's Diary (M.S.), V: Report of the Sec. of State, relative to the Records, c.e. in his office (No. 2. In Senate, Jan 5, 1810).

Gov. Tryon, still on board the "Dutchess of Gordon," in the harbour, sends to Mayor Hicks a letter addressed "To the Inhabitants of the Colony." He says that he has "royal permission to withdraw" (see Dec. 1)—and declares his readiness to perform every service in his power "to promote the common Felicity." He adds: "It has given me great Pain to view the Colony committed to my Care in part the reports of Captains Grassi have to have afforded me some arrival any Prospect of being able to take the dispassionate and deliberate sense of its Inhabitants in a constitutional manner upon the Resolution of Parliament for composing the present Turmoils in the Provinces—a Resolution that was intended for the Basis of an Accommodation and, for the purpose of restoring the general Tranquility & Security of the Empire. I owe it to my affection for this Colossus to declare my Wish that some Measure to be speedily adopted for this Purpose may be proposed— I feel an extreme Anxiety in being Witness to the growing Calamities of this Country without the Power to alleviate them—Calamities that must increase while so many of the Inhabitants withhold their allegiance from their Sovereign and their obedience to the Parent Country by whose Power & Patronage they have hitherto been supported & protected.

When the address was read in the governor's council, "De Lancy said it would neither serve King nor Country. Cruger wondered any good could be expected from it. I promised nothing certain from it." In spite of these objections, the letter was printed and sent to the mayor.—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), Vol. 1, in N. Y. Pub. Library. N. T. Merc., Dec. 11, 1775. For the action of the provincial congress upon it, see Dec. 14.

An advertisement reads: "Samuel Loudon begs leave to inform the Public, that on Thursday the fifth day of January next, he will publish No. 1 of a News-paper to be continued weekly entitled The New-York Packet; or the North-American General Advertiser.

"He has already possessed himself of a neat and sizeable set of Types for the above-mentioned purpose; together with every other necessary for carrying on a splendid News Paper; and the best of hands shall be procured to perform the manual art... Subscriptions, &c. are thankfully received by Samuel Loudon, at his house in Dock-street, near the coffee-house, New-York."—N. Y. Merc., Dec. 4, 1775.

William Smith in his diary, says: "I visited the Mayor and there found Alderman Matthews Brewerton, Waddell & Jeffers & persuaded to the Propriety of calling an Assembly for petitioning Parliament again."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.). See Dec. 7.

In a report to Dartmouth, Tryon states that, as Sears has threatened to return to town and take the post public records of the province, he had ordered (Dec. 3) that the records be put in the board "Duchess of Gordon."—*N. Y. Col. Dict., VIII: 646, 667. On Dec. 4 (q.v.), the council had approved of the order. These records "consisted of eighteen books in folio, of records of charters and grants of lands, under the great seal of this province; two books in folio, of records of grants of land to reduced officers and soldiers...; three books in folio, of records of charters and commissions under his Royal Highness James Duke of York, the great seal of Great Britain, the great seal of England, and the seal of the admiralty of England; one book of records, of Indian cessions, by the treaty of the Duke of York, and two books of council on the state department." These books were in two strong chests, under the seals of both Tryon and Samuel Bayard, Jr., the deputy-secretary, the keys to the locks being retained in Bayard's possession.—Rep. on Am. MSS. in the Royal Inst. of Grt. Brita., I: 25. These records were brought to Tryon on the "Duchess of Gordon" by Bayard.—Ibid. On Dec. 9 (q.v.), Gov. Tryon made a certificate that he had received on board the ship "two Books containing Records of Patents, Records of Commissions etc. and Minutes of Council... the said two Books being locked with a Padlock, and under my seal at Arms, and the seal of the said Deputy Secretary." Writing to Lord Germain in 1779, Tryon stated that, shortly after this, for greater security, these records "were put on Board the Asia under the care of Capt. Van Dophe. The Asia being ordered home, soon after necessary of New York and the first steamer told him in a letter that City, Capt Van Dophe desired me to inform him what he should do with the two Books of Public Records; I acquainted him, as the Eemy boasted they would burn up the remainder of New York that Winter, the Records would not be safe on shore, and accordingly requested him to put them on Board the Eagle Man of War. Capt Van Dophe saild a few days after, since which I have never heard, what he actually did with those Records. I presume he either put them on Board the Eagle or if he carried them home, that he has lodged them in the Quatermaine Office."—N. Y. Col. Dict., VIII: 676—676.

For the wanderings of these records on the high seas, see Sept. 29, 1781. The book of Indian cessions alone was lost (see Nov. 1, 1781).

A broadside, printed at New York, presents "The Answer of the Congress to the King's Proclamation" of Aug. 23, which cast aspersions upon the American cause. This denies that the colonies have forgotten the allegiance they owe "to the power which has protected and sustained" them, and refutes the allegation that they have proceeded "to an open and avowed rebellion." The delegates of the congress then add: "We, therefore, in the name of the people of these United Colonies, and by authority, according to the purest maxims of representation derived from tiets, declare, that whatever punishment shall be inflicted upon any persons in the power of our enemies, for favouring, aiding or abetting the cause of American liberty shall be retaliated in the same kind and the same degree upon those, in our power, who have favoured, aided or abetted, or shall favour, aid or abet the system of ministerial oppression. The essential difference between our cause and that of our enemies might justify a severer punishment. The law of retaliation will unquestionably warrant one equally severe."—From a broadside in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

Smith, in his diary, says that he "met some of the Congress at Simmons's." It was the general opinion that an assembly should be convened "to make conciliatory Propositions." However, the support of Mr. Scott (see Dec. 8) "had not been secured unfortunately."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), Vol. 1.

To the provincial congress, Mr. Scott (see Dec. 7) presents several resolutions, which declare in substance: 1. that the Lexington skirmish lying in the Country Calendar was "that it was inexpedient to ask the Governor to convene the old Assembly to give an answer to the Febry Resolve of Parliament," 3. that the governor should be protected on shore. "The Congress was thus thrown into great heats." Scott "lampedoon the Gov'r's address [see Dec. 4] with great acrimony and was joined by Hobart & McDougal who with Scott were intent upon a new Election of Assemblymen. That night, the "Answer of the grand Congress of 6 Instant to the King's Augt Proclamation arrived and the House grew more disinclined to Peace afterwards on the news of the Proclaiming of Stores in Canada & other Successes in that Quarter."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), Vol. 1.

Gov. Tryon acknowledges the receipt of the provincial records (see Dec. 6) thus: "I do hereby certify that in Pursuance of my Directions and the Advice of his Majesty's Council for this Province I have received from Sam'l Bayard Jun' Dep't Secretary of this Province on board the ship Duchess of Gordon two Boxes containing Records of Patents, Records of Commissions etc & Minutes of Council—Given under my Hand on Board the ship Duchess of Gordon in the Harbour of New York this 9th Day of Dec 1775 having signed a Duplicate of this Certificate. I said two Boxes being locked with a Padlock and under my Seal at Arms and the Seal of the said Deputy Secretary. —Wm. Tryon.

The books given up to Tryon, says Smith, were: "17 Vol Pei of Records of Patents 2° D'n Indian Cessions to reduced Officers & Soldiers pursuant to the Royal Proclamation of 7 Octr 1775 3° D'n Records of Commissions Patents & Charters under the great Seal of Great Britain. 4° Minutes of Council in the State Department. 25 Vol. in Foliio. These Books are of infinite Consequences to the Colony & the Seizure a Mortgage upon the People for their Return to their ancient union with Great Britain. I am informed the Indian Cessions were put to him on Scott's taking the Custody of the Papers of the Secretary's Office. Had the Secret of Mr Tryon's withdrawing so Many of the Books been discovered I think Bayard would scarce have escaped with his Life & I as one of the Council should have certainly felt the popular Rage—Yet I believe there is a mistake in certifying that Mr Tryon took them by the Advice of Council—See My Minute of the Day concealed in the Hands of Jacob Blaa the Neighbour to Col P R Livingston at the Manor—I forget the Date of the Day we were consulted but well remember that Mr Tryon had some Records on the Board, that we were informed by his keeper. I remember him to himself as to the Propriety of removing any more—I mentioned this 5 Jan to Bayard, who admits that there were Papers in the Duchess of Gordon when we were consulted but adds that he thinks they were those mentioned in the Certificate—See the
I am not a little anxious for the Safety of the Records—Mr. Tryon is not distinct in his Account of what he did with them—Whether he ordered Vandeput to carry them home or to deliver them to Lord North!—He only believes they are in the Plantation Office.”—Wm. Smith’s Diary (III. VI), under date of Feb. 5, 1779. Smith adds in his diary on the following day, that he showed to Tryon a Hayard’s copy of his (Tryon’s) receipt for the records, and begged the governor “to write to Ld Geo: Germaine for their Preservation but he scarce attended to me and rarely does I as wish to any Civil Concerns.”—Ibid., Feb. 16, 1779.

As the continental congress has ordered his Mr. Trumbull, at a detached account of the buildings destroyed, vessels seized, and stock taken, the general committee of the city requests that “All Persons in this City and County who have sustained any Loss or Damage by the Ministerial Army or Navy in America, since March last . . . prepare and deliver to them an accurate Estimate of the same, with the Examinations of Witnesses, and other Papers and Documents officially authenticated.”—N. T. Merc., Dec. 11, 1775.

Hugh Gaine advertises for sale his “Universal Register, or American Kalendar, for the Year 1775,” which, he says, is illustrated “with a beautiful and accurate Copper Plate Plan of the City of New-York.”—N. T. Merc., Dec. 11, 1775. There is a copy of this book in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

The provincial congress of New York formulates a letter to Gov. Tryon of Connecticut, to the following effect: “We are induced by a petition from the General Committee (see Jour. Prov. Cong. I: 216, for petition) that a body of troops from your colony, lately made a public entry into this city at noon-day, and seized and carried off the types belonging to one of the public printers [see Nov. 21], with the authority from the Continental or this Congress, or their Committee. While we consider this conduct as an insult offered to this colony, we are disposed to attribute it to an imprudent, though well intended, zeal for the public cause, and cannot entertain the most distant thought that your colony will approve of the measure. It is unnecessary to use arguments to show the impropriety of a proceeding that has a manifest tendency to interrupt that harmony and union which at present happily subsists throughout, and is so essential to the interest of the whole Continent. It is our earnest desire, that you would take the most effectual steps to prevent any of the people of your colony from entering into this for the like purposes, unless invited by our Provincial Congress, a Committee of Safety, or the General Committee of one of our Counties, as we cannot but consider such intrusions as an invasion of our essential rights as a distinct Colony; and common justice obliges us to request that you would adopt some proper measures to suspend the terms of the General Committee of the City and County of New-York. We believe you will not Consider this requisition as an attempt to justify the man from whom the types were taken. We are fully sensible of his desert; but we earnestly wish that the glory of the present contest for liberty may not be sullied by an attempt to restrain the freedom of the Press . . .

“And the more effectually to restrain such incursions, . . . we propose to apply to the Continental Congress, not by way of complaint, but for such a general regulation on this subject as may as well prevent such jealousies as any future incursions by the inhabitants of other Colony into the other for the apprehending or punishing any enemy or supposed enemy to the cause of liberty.”—4 Am. Arch., IV: 404; Jour. Prov. Cong. I: 214-15.

The threatened application to the continental congress mentioned in the letter to Gov. Trumbull was evidently put into effect, for in the New York Gaz., July 4, 1776, it passes: Philadelphia wrote to the committee of safety: “We highly applaud the spirit, and at the same time, respectful manner in which you have supported the dignity and independence of our Colony, and demanded reparation on the subject of the Connecticut introard.”—“Your situation of Connecticut will not only do you the justice which you have required, but adopt effectual means to restrain their inhabitants from similar attempts in future. In this expectation we shall take the liberty to defer the application to Congress which you direct, until we are favoured with a copy of Govt. Trumbull’s answer to your letter.”—Jour. Prov. Cong. I: 433. See March 8, 1776.

After taking into consideration Govr. Tryon’s address of Dec. 4, Dec. (q.v.), the provincial congress, sitting in New York City, resolves:

“that it is the opinion of this Congress, that none of the inhabitants of this Colony, have withdrawn their allegiance from His Majesty . . . that the supposed present turbulent state of this Colony, arises not from the want of a proper attachment to our Prince, and the establishment in the illustrious house of Hanover, but such free and independent subjects of the British Crown, or a spirit of opposition’ to that just and equal rule to which by the British Constitution, and our ancient and established form of Government we are subject; but solely from the inroads made on us both by oppressive acts of the British Parliament, devised for the exclusive benefit of the American Colonists, and the hostile attempts of the ministry to carry those acts into execution.”—Jour. Prov. Cong. I: 217-18; N. T. Merc., Dec. 18, 1775.

The committee of 100 adopts the following regulations for the night watch: 1. That at least one company must give “at 5—on Barracks on the Battery” from six o’clock in the evening until daylight.

2. That the adjutant of each battalion “whose tour of duty is it” be notified at least 24 hours before he mounts guard, and that he make a report of the “occurrences of the night,” the next day on duty, and the whole in the year 1776.

3. That, immediately after roll-call, sentinels be set at all appointed places.

4. That detachments of the guard patrol the streets every two hours, beginning at ten o’clock, to protect persons and property, to prevent deserting or suspects, and to prevent the landing of goods contrary to the association.

5. That no “wanton alarm” be given to the inhabitants by firing guns or beating drums.

6. That, if any alarm be given in the night, the officer send a sufficient detachment of the guard to inquire into the reason.

7. That every officer carry out the rules of the provincial congress in regard to firing and punishing delinquents.—Am. Arch., IV: 281-82. The sub-committee, which reported these regulations, stated that “the military night watch, which has been kept for several months past [see May 18], has been found of great utility towards preserving peace and good order in this city, and protecting the persons and property of its inhabitants; . . . is become more necessary than ever, from the unsettled state of public affairs, and the recent instances of insults offered to the rights and persons of said inhabitants.”—N. T. Jour., Dec. 24, 1775.

In the course of the debate in the house of commons on the 21 bill to prohibit all trade with the rebellious American colonies (American Prohibitory Bill), Mr. Hartley says: “By this fatal bill of separation you now declare the Americans to be enemies in form, therefore it is yourselves that force upon them the rights of enemies. You that all the tyrants of the former times were resorted to be responsible to your country for the events of your own war, to which they have been so reluctant and you so precipitate. When this country shall come to open its eyes, to see and to feel the consequences, they will know of whom to require an account. . . . The fate of America is cast. You may bruise its heel, but you cannot crush its head. It will revive again. The new world is before them. Liberty is theirs. They have possession of a free government, their birthright and inheritance, derived to them from their parent state, which the hand of violence cannot wrest from them. If you will cast them off, my last wish is to them; May they go and prosper! When the final period of this once happy country shall overtake ourselves, either through tumult or tyranny, may another Phoenix rise out of our ashes!”—Parl. Hist. of En’g., XVIII: 1105-5.

Because “discourses have arisen in the minds of many of the citizens of New-York, by a practice of some of the inhabitants to visit the King’s ships of war,” the provincial congress resolves: “That it be recommended to the inhabitants of this colony, to refrain from going on board of any of the King’s ships or vessels of war, withoutleave of the Committee of a county in this colony, or the Committee of Safety.”

The congress are persuaded a resolution “That every person, not an inhabitant, entering into this colony, shall be furnished with a certificate from the Committee of the jurisdiction wherein he last resided, that he is friendly to the Liberties of America, or be subject to be dealt with as a person inhumiliter thereto.” This latter order is considered necessary because “sundry persons whose conduct in the neighbouring colonies of which they were respectively inhabitants, has been unhappy in liberty, and occasionally their removal into this colony; and should such removals continue, the number of discontented persons in this colony will be increased, and the unhappy consequences will be considerable to enemies to the liberties of America."—N. Y. Terc., Dec. 25, 1775.

Because the king's mails have been "taken and obstructed" at Baltimore, Philadelphia, and other places, the deputy postmaster-general informs the public that he is obliged to "stop all the persons' letters, letters which arrive on the packets will be kept on board, and the names of those to whom they are addressed will be advertised, in order that the people may apply in person or by friends for their mail."—N. Y. Terc., Dec. 25, 1775; 4 Am. Arch, VI: 453.

"Another of His Majesty's Ships the Phoenix and Asia now lie in the East River; the latter opposite Murray's Wharf; and the former near Burling's Slip."—N. Y. Merc, Dec. 25, 1775. See Jan. 29, 1776.

An address "To the Freeholders and Freeman of New-York," signed "A Citizen," is published as a broadside. It reads: "I have good reason to assure you that there is a scheme in agitation to surprise and confound you in a matter of the last importance; the election of members for a new assembly. I therefore conjure you, as you value your rights as citizens, and the safety and happiness of the colony, to be upon your guard. A pit is digging, a net is spreading for you; be careful, be vigilant—suffer not yourselves to be deceived by the contrivances and intrigues of wicked men, who will court your favour to destroy you, and will cajole you to betray you. You have had abundant experience of the danger of an injudicious choice... It is your duty and interest, as far as lies in your power, to fill every department with men, whose known character and situation give you full reason to expect they will be entirely devoted to your service. But it concerns your lives and properties, in an especial manner, to choose proper men to represent you in the legislature of your country. It is essential to your happiness as citizens—it is essential to your existence as freemen..."

"You have had a fair opportunity of seeing men in their true characters, you know who are your friends, and who your enemies, who will stand by and protect you in time of danger, and who will desert and betray you... Remember you are to choose men to be the guardians of your rights for seven years. To do you justice for so long a time, you will require men of uncommon virtue, and of a truly independent spirit, else you will have no security against their being corrupted. They should be men of abilities also, well acquainted with the constitution, and with the circumstances of the province.

"When you are called upon, come forth with that independent unbriessed spirit, which becomes free citizens. Despise all the views of party. They are beneath you. They ought never to be considered when the interests of your country are concerned. All you ought to regard, is, the intrinsic worth of the candidate who submits himself to your judgment and election." From an original in the N. Y. Pub. Library. Another broadside of similar purport, signed "A Poor Man," appeared the following day. See an original in N. Y. Pub. Library.

Just prior to the Revolution, a little Catholic congregation worshiped in the house of a Devon German, in Wall St. The Jesuit Father, Ferdinand Steinmyeyer, ministered to them on his trips from Maryland. To avoid arrest, he assumed the name of Farmer and entered the city in disguise. The house was burned in the fire of 1776, and afterward a magazine was broken up on the site. In 1776, St. Peter's Church, built in 1785-6, was the first Roman Catholic church erected in New York, although Catholic services were held in Fort James under Gov. Dongan as early as 1687.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, Ill: 936.

Prior to this year, the house of Walter Rutherford was erected at the north-west corner of Broadway and Vesey St.—Duet, Reminiscences of an Old New Yorker, 35-39. It was demolished to make room for the Astor House, which for so many years occupied the block from Vesey to Clay St., on Broadway. See Landmarks Map Ref. Key, Ill: 952, 976; Pl. 174, Vol. III.

The following account of New York, written by William Dunlap, and published in 1813, describes some of the prominent features of the city at this period: "The new road, now Broadway, stopped at the gardens which surrounded what has since been called the Sailer's Snug Harbour [Landmark Map Ref. Key, Ill: 947], then the country-seat of Andrew Elliot, Esq. At another spot, now the corner of Leonard Street and Broadway, stood a house and gardens, the rural retreat of our citizens, called, from a retreat of the kind near London, the white Conduit House [ibid., Ill: 981]; it has been since called Mount Vernon Gardens [ibid., Ill: 980], and, as will be seen, a theatre attached to it, the remains of which were visible within seventeen years. Nearly opposite, on the other side of the new road, were the remains of aqueducts and reservoirs begun some time before 1755 [see April 22, 1774], for the purpose of raising water from the Collect, the pond below, and to the east, before-mentioned, to supply the city with wholesome water from the stagnant receptacle of filth which slaughter-houses and other nuisances poured into it.

"On the eastern side, the city terminated, as has been said, by the ship-yards on the line of the water, and at a small distance from the shore by a steep bank, on which was walled in a cemetery called the Jew's burying-ground. Near this bank stood a house, now a tavern, and called from its central situation Centre House. Beyond the cemetery were orchards, gardens, and meadows, suffering decay from the effects of war.

"To return to the extreme or south point of the island and town. Below the towering hill on which Fort George bristled with cannon, lay the battery, a fortification covering a portion of that health-giving space still bearing the name. Part of the ramparts advanced to the water's edge, and on the north, between them and Broadway, the rocky foundation protruded, until the earth of the hill on which the towering fort stood was brought down, since the war of independence, to cover them."—Dunlap, Hist. of the Am. Theatre (1835). J: 84-85.

St. Jean de Crèvecoeur (naturalized as Hector St. John), describing New York as it was between 1770 and 1781, called it "beautiful although irregular." He said the inhabitants were skilled in the construction of wharves, which were sometimes built in 40 feet of water. "Beaver street, today so far from the seashore was so called because the skins of these animals made a dike. I have talked with old inhabitants, who have seen the tide rise to the neighborhood of the City Hall [Wall St]. You know that is more than four hundred fathoms from the sea.

Access to this writer, at that time several of the streets had sidewalks on both sides, paved with flat stones and adorned with plane trees. The architecture of the city combined Dutch neatness with English taste. The houses, most of which were of brick, were finished and painted with great care.

Crèvecoeur declared that the merchants were "intelligent, able, and rich, and the artisans very skillful, especially the carpenters, the cabinet makers and the joiners." The New Yorkers, he said, were very hospitable, and the reception they accorded strangers was "enough to give them a high idea of American generosity, as well as of the simple and cordial friendliness which they are to expect in the other cities of this country." Food was so cheap and abundant that every one lived in comfort, "the poorest not even excepted." There were 3,400 houses, 28,000 inhabitants (cf. 1771, and 1775), and 20 churches (cf. 1767 and 1770) belonging to different sects. These figures, as well as the following references to the college, hospital, waterworks, etc., make it evident that the conditions he described were such as existed early in 1776.

The Frenchman praised the college, with its library and great number of valuable mathematical instruments, but he regretted that it was not built "in some rural retreat," far away from "the turmoil of trade, and the dissipations and pleasures always numerous in large cities." He mentioned also the presence of a hospital for sailors, "built at a convenient distance from New York on an eminence not far from the Hudson River;" the Chamber of Commerce (see Febt. 28, 1770); the Marine Society (see April 12, 1770), which, he remarked, had a fund of $5,000, and gave annual pensions.
1776 and other assistance to the widows and children of Ship Masters—Mr. White, a loyalist, was hanged on a tavern sign-post at the corner of Cherry and Roosevelt Sts.—See Grim's Notes (MS.) in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Grim was himself a tavern-keeper, his house being known as the Hessian Coffee House.—Landmark Map Key, III: 975.

By the winter of 1775-76, after the non-importation had been effective for about a year, the upward trend of prices indicated the approaching depletion of mercantile stocks; but the radicals in general still preferred to believe that private avarice was the sole animating cause. The chief centers of trouble were the ports of Philadelphia and New York and the markets tributary to them. The dearth and high prices of West India commodities created greatest uneasiness because of their former cheapness and wide household use.—Schlesinger, The Colonial Merchants and the Am. Revolution (Columbia Univ. Studies, 1918), 586, and authorities there cited.

The sheriff gives public notice, as directed by "his Majesty's Writ," to "the Freemen and Freeholders of the City and County of New York," to assemble on Feb. 1, "on the Green near the Work-House," to agree, "by a Plurality of Voices," four freeholders to be "Representatives of this city and county," and to secure the "General, or Commander in Chief of the Province of New York, in a General Assembly."—N. Y. Merc., Jan. 8, 1776. See Feb. 1.

Samuel Loundon begins to publish The New York Packet, and the American Advertiser, his imprint being "Printed by Samuel Loundon, in Water-Street, New-York, West-End of the city, before the laws of John Peter Zenger and the Old Slip," which was the last paper established in New York before the Declaration of Independence.—"The Hist. of Printing in Am.," by Thomas, in Am. Antiq. Soc. Transactions (1854), VI: 124; Early Newspapers, II: 246; Brigham, Am. Antiq. Soc. Proc. (1871), 474. Lounsdon advertised the publication of this paper in Gaine's newspaper, with a statement about its good qualities, the ways of distributing it by post-riders, etc.—N. Y. Merc., Jan. 15, 1776. See Aug. 29.

Christopher Colles is granted £50, "which this Board agreed to allow him towards his Support for the last month." At the same council meting it was resolved "that a Number of printed Notes [see Aug. 2, 1775] for carrying on the water works to the Value of £2000 be immediately struck."—M. C. VIII, 120, 121. Colles received £10 more on Jan. 19 (ibid., VIII, 124), and other payments later (ibid., VIII, 133, 139). See, further, March 4.

Having learned of the fitting out of a British fleet at Boston and the embarkation of troops for a southern expedition, and believing that "it is a matter of the utmost importance to prevent the enemy from taking possession of the city of New York and the North River, as they will thereby command the country, and the communication with Canada," Washington sends the following orders from his headquarters at Cambridge to Maj.-Gen. Charles Lee: "You will, therefore, with such volunteers as are willing to join you, and can be expeditiously raised, repair to the city of New York; and calling upon the commanding officer of the forces of New Jersey for such assistance as he can afford, and you shall require, you are to put that city into the best posture of defence, which the season and circumstances will admit, disarming all such persons upon Long Island and elsewhere, (and if necessary otherwise securing them,) whose conduct and declarations have rendered them justly suspected of designs unfriendly to the views of the Congress. You are, also, to inquire into the state and condition of the fortifications up the North River, and as far as shall be consistent with the orders of Congress, or not repugnant to them, to have the works guarded against surprises from a body of men, which might be transported by water near the place, and then marched upon the back of them. You will also endeavour to have the medicines, shirts, and blankets, now at New York, belonging to the ministerial troops, secured, and forwarded to this army. Captain Sears can give you particular information concerning them."—Lee Papers, II: 272-73, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1874). 9 Thomas Paine publishes anonymously, in Philadelphia (see Penn. Ev. Post, Jan. 9, 1776), a political or propaganda tract having in the first edition the following title: Common Sense; addressed to the inhabitants of America, On the following interesting subjects. I. Of the Origin and Design of Government in general, with converse Remarks on the English Constitution. II. Of Monarchy and Hereditary Succession. III. Thoughts on the present State of American Affairs. IV. Of the present Ability of America, with some miscellaneous Reflections.

This was soon followed (on Feb. 17) by another tract, and the two together constitute the ordinary editions of this work (see Sabin, XIV: 124-25). The first edition of this second tract bears the following long title: Large Additions to Common Sense; Addressed to the inhabitants of America, On the following interesting subjects. I. The American Patriot’s Prayer. II. American Independence defended, by Candidus. III. The Propriety of Independence, by De-

IV. A Review of the American Contest, with some strictures on the King’s Speech, Addressed to all People in the Thirteen United Colonies, by a Friend to Purity and Mankind. V. Letters to Lord Dartsmouth, by an English American. VI. Observations on Lord North’s Conciliatory Plan, by Sincerus. To which is added and given An Appendix to Common Sense; Together with an Address to the people called Quakers, on their Testimony concerning Kings and Government, and an additional Supplement, by Mr. S. Philadelphia, Printed, and sold, by R. Bell, in Third-Street. MDCCCLXVI.
The first part of this famous work went through at least twelve editions and reprints in different cities and towns of America and Great Britain in 1776, one of these being a reprint by John Anderson in New York (Sabin, XIV: 125). Evans gives the following bibliographical note: “The first edition of Common sense was published in Philadelphia in January, 1776, and the sales soon reached one hundred thousand copies. The Legislature of Pennsylvania voted the Author five hundred pounds in appreciation of its value to the Colony. Large additions were made to the first edition. Other authors, such as Franklin, and Sabin, have noted the work of Paine except in small part.”—Am. Bibliog., V: 265. See also Frothingham’s Rise of the Republic (1872), 476 (footnote). Paine argues for the total separation of the colonies from Great Britain, and under-

The king’s speech from the throne (Oct. 26, 1775), declaring that the war, on the part of the colonies, is “manifestly carried on for the establishment of an American empire,” makes its appearance in an American newspaper. He states that, to put an end to the disorders in the colonies, he has increased both the naval and land forces. He recommends the appointment of commissioners with large powers for the purpose of granting pardons to such of “the unhappy and deluded multitude” as may be convinced of their error by the display of arms.—Penn. Ev. Post, Jan. 9, 1776; any way of fortifying that part, so as to prevent the entrance of the enemy; and also to enquire whether the depth of water in Hudson’s river, below the battery, may not easily be lessened, so as to prevent large ships passing up, and to make an estimate of the expense, and report their proceedings in the premises immediately to Congress.”—Jour. of the Cont. Cong. (Ford. ed., 1906), 1776, remarked:

deal of miscellaneous information regarding the history, govern-as of foreign countries. The first issue appeared in 1775 (p. c.).

William Lery, the town major, reports to the committee of safety that he neglects the war, and that his “good Nature is imposed upon; that the more they do, the more seems to be required at their Hands,” and that they will be compelled “to desist, unless their Fellow Citizens will step forth and aid them in the common cause.” He also mentions “the danger to which this City is nightly exposed, not only from the attacks of the Enemy and internal Anarchists, but from the Malice and interestance of any Individual who mounts Guard;” and he lays before the committee “particular threats which he has heard from some individuals of those unruly Guards, . . . such as firing upon his Major’s ships now in the Harbour,” an act that must unavoidably bring unspäkelös Distress upon the Inhabitants of this City.”— tinued on April 10.—Ibid., I: 280-81.

A letter from Gen. Lee, dated Jan. 22, enclosing a letter from the committee of safety of New-York, is received by the committee of petitions of the City of New-York, which the committee, in answer, resolved: "That a committee of three be appointed to repair to New-York, to consult and advise with the Council of safety of that colony, and with general Lee, respecting the immediate defence of the city of New-York; and that general Lee be directed to follow the determination of said committee thereon. That it be an instruction to the said committee, in case the city cannot be defended, that they earnestly recommend it to the inhabitants to remove their most valuable effects to a place of safety. That the said committee be further instructed to consult with general Lee and the Committee of safety of New-York, about the fortifications on Hudson's river, and about fortifying the pass at Hellgate."—Jour. Cont. Cong. (Phila., 1777), II: 39.

John Holt writes to Samuel Adams: "Happening lately to be in Company of a Worker in Metals and speaking of the Cannon lately cast up at the Bridge, I asked him if he knew how to clear the Cannon that Carleton had endeavoured to render useless by ramming them with Balls, at Montreal. He supposed that I had applied to, to procure a Person who would undertake the Jobs, and last night came to tell me be knew one who understood the work of Col. Kain. I told him, that I knew that he understood repairing and putting old or damaged Musquets in Order, and would either buy them or make them fit for Service. . . . The same Man also informed me of a Matter I had before heard of, and communicated to a Member of our Provincial Congress, viz. That the Emigrants of the British Ministry, particularly Governor Tryon, have for many Months past, been doing their utmost to engage all the Gunsmiths in America, in every Branch of the Business, to go for England, where they are promised high Wages and constant Employment for life. That many of these in this Town, have actually entered into pay, & while they stay here are paid high Wages for not Working, nor instructing any Person in the Business; that a Number of these Workmen & many from this City, were sent home in the last packet, and every one who has any Skill in the Business here, has been tampered with—That even Convicts have been promised Pardons, go Guineas given for the Freedom of one in Maryland, & his Expenditures paid by Tryon to this City, from whence he was sent home . . . ."—"We still continue to be insulted by the two Ships of War close to our Docks, who not only seize all our Vessels that they can lay Hands on, and have put a stop to all our Navigation down the Sound by burning and firing the fields near the City, that they now dare venture to, but on every Occasion Menace the Town with a Cannonade. And if we do not improve the Time before the Spring, or the arrival of Troops and Ships of War from England, I have not the least doubt but they will take possession of the Shores below and adjacent to Hell Gate, fill the Sound with their Small Ships of War & of Course stop all our Navigation in it, keep possession of long Island & make Excursions at pleasure upon the Mainland in New York, New Jersey, Connecticut & Rhode Island. [See Dec. 25, 1775.]

"All this might be entirely prevented by our immediately erecting one or more strong Forts at & near Hell Gate and others on each Side below at the Narrows, with some Flots near them to obstruct the quick passing of Ships. Some floating Batteries would also be of the utmost importance. These Matters are absolutely necessary, & no Time ought to be lost . . . . The Treasures of the Continent are in your Hands, all its Force under your Direction. If these Forts were only begun, with Vigour, in all probability the men of War would immediately decamp . . . . One Thing more I would mention. . . . "The Post Office. Under the British Administration, the Primary End who are willing "to be managers of employing the industrious poor in this city in spinning and making manufactures" was but a secondary Consideration. With us, at present, and I hope it will always be so, the Case is reversed; the public Conveniency, is the first Object. In comparison of this, the Revenue it produces, is hardly worth the least Notice, and in Order to give it all the Usefulness that might reasonably be expected from it, the Post Masters, from the highest to the lowest should be unnecessarily enjoined to rob all the Bidders to carry and deliver at the proper places on their Respective Roads, all the News papers that should be brought to the post Offices for that purpose. In what I shall say upon this Subject, I am not in the least influenced by my own private Interest as the Printer of a News paper, but solely by a Regard to the public good. I propose, perhaps in one Week more, to discontinue the printing of a Newspaper, one great Reason of which Intention is, that I cannot get my Papers carried with any Regularity by the Post . . . . As a mere Conveniency, the Carriage of News papers is of Importance to more than twenty Times as Many Persons as the Carriage of Letters is . . . . But the great Use of News papers is in that they form the best opportunities of Intelligence, that could be devised, of every public Matter that concerns us, besides communicating many Useful Discoveries in Arts and Manufactorys & many moral & religious Truths &c. It was by the means of News papers, that we received & spread the Notice of the tyrannical Designs formed against America, and kindled a Spirit that has been sufficient to repel them . . . . The Experience I have had, both as a Printer of a News Paper, and as a Post Master, which I was for Many Years, convinces me that what I have now mentioned to you concerning News papers, is just, and that our Improvements will do more good than harm . . . . It is if he knew the Continental Congress alone who can put this matter upon a proper Footing . . . ."—From the original letter preserved in the N. Y. Pub. Library, and printed in John Holt—Printer and Postmaster, by V. H. Falsits (1920), 10-15.

"An equally divided vote, for and against, is taken by the officers of Col. Kain's Troops, and of other volunteers, on the question whether they are willing that the battalion shall engage, as a battalion, "in the Cause of this Country on the Terms and Conditions offered by the Committee of Safety." A list is made, however, of the commissioned and non-commissioned officers, and some of the privates (showing their names, offices, and independent companies), who "are willing to Enter in the service of their Country." These include Col. John Lasher, and Maj. Sebastian Bauman. The next day, certain "non-commissioned officers of the first Battalion of Minute-men of the City of New York" petitioned the provincial congress, in behalf of themselves and the privates of this battalion, expressing their willingness to remain in the service, but asking for back pay, and that their duties might be confined to this city only, where their friends and relatives are. In this petition, the original organization of this battalion was thus described: "That the Memorialists for the defence of their invaluable Rights and Privileges, formed themselves into different Companies under different officers . . . . That sometime after . . . . the Companies to which they severally belonged were formed into one Battalion by the style & title of Col. Kain's Troops, and of the officers that have been or are Dependants of the same . . . . That after they had so formed themselves into a Battalion, Field officers were appointed. That after the appointment . . . . pursuant to an order or Recommendation of the Honourable the Continental Congress and of the Honourable the Provincial Convention for this Colony, they jointly and severally became Minute Men. . . . That agreeable to their orders as Minute Men, they have at all times been ready, and have actually turned out to do their duty as such both by day and night when so required to do by this Honourable Body."—N. arived in the city, Gen. Lee, when he came from Cambridge to Hartford, published a Cull upon the People of that neighbourhood to join his Colours for a month to suppress a dangerous conspiracy. Waterbury’s men believed their mission was to “burn New York and thus cut off communication between the traitors and the army at Boston.” Lee had not received all of the Gout,” but their regiment of light horse had proceeded to Kingsbridge, only to find a dispatch from Gen. Lee to the effect that “the Congress approved the Sentiments of the New York Committee,” and so the light horse were dismissed. Seymour imputed the scandal to the “Couns. Samuel Bronson, a New Yorker, New Yorkers who had removed their effects to New England and were of that Party who some time since came down on Horse back and carried off Rivington’s Tyope manu forti at noon day” (see Nov. 23, 1775). When the firing of New York was being planned at Stamford, Sears had expressed himself as eager for it despite the inevitable loss of a house he claimed to own there worth several thousand dollars. Therefore, when Seymour learned that Sears did not own a house or “an ounce of moveable property” in the city, he went back home “highly enraged at the Cheats which had put their Colony to a vast Ex pense & with a resolution to prevent such a thing in the future,” and the command of Le Enrige building for the Continental service.—William Smith’s Diary (Ms.), Feb. 2, 1776, preserved in N. Gen. Charles Lee, who came to town from Boston, was escorted by a company of riflemen, a body-guard, and a regiment of Connecticut men.—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 667; Penn. Exq. Post, Feb. 8, 1776. A letter from New York states that Gen. Lee “was escorted into town by Capt. Lecary’s troop of light horse, and a great number of our principal inhabitants.”—Penn. Exq. Post, Feb. 6, 1776. He lodged at Mrs. De La Monteigne’s, who kept a public house on the Common. While he had command in New York, about 200 pieces of heavy cannon, which were mounted in Fort George and on the Battery, were placed on the Common in front of his quarters but lest, upon the arrival of the British army, they should be retaken, he later ordered them carried to Kingsbridge.—Jones, Hist. of N. Y. during the Revolution, I: 82. In connection with Jones’s work, see Johnston, Observations on Judge Jones’ Loyalist Hist. of the Am. Revolution: How Far is it an Authority? (1806).

Arrived in the Spring,” Gen. Lee, when he came congress from Pennsylvania, who is in New York as one of a committee of congress sent to advise with the New York council of safety and with Gen. Lee respecting the defence of the city, writing to “My dear Sally,” presumably his wife, says: “This Town has been in the hands of the Enemy, and Dittrick’s troops have been taken into their Heads that we had come with positive Orders from the Congress to Gen’1 Lee to attack the Men of War lying here, which would have introduced the Destruction of the Town. In consequence of this they were all Motion moving out their Household Goods & Families. With Difficulty we quieted their apprehensions by Assurances that the Purport of our Journey was directly the Reverse. No sooner was this Matter accomplished than their Lieut. father as surveyors, with greater Probability of Reason, by the Arrival of Gen’1 Clinton [see Feb. 4], we who had Intelligence, sailed from Boston with some Men of War & 600 Soldiers destined as was supposed for this Town. The Troops which accompanied him are not yet arrived but are supposed to be left behind at Sandy Hook, & we have every Reason to conclude are intended to make an Attack on one of [the southern colonies], most probably Virginia. . . . I assure you that when M’ Clinton arrived I fully expected that Hostilities would immediately have commenced & the Scene which would then have ensued was sufficient to drive every Wisc. New Yorker to their knees. However thank God the Storm has at present blown over & the Town begins to recover its Calmness.”—MS. letter preserved in N. Y. Pub. Library.

On the same day, Pastor Shewkirk, of the Moravian congregation, wrote: “Soldiers came to town both from Connecticut and the Jerseys, and the whole aspect of things grew frightful, and increased so from day to day. The inhabitants began now to move away in a surprizing manner. The weather was very cold, and the rivers full of ice, which proved a great obstruction to the People’s moving...”—Pastor Shewkirk’s diary, in The Campaign of 1776, part II, 265.

The committee of safety made no attempt “to ease the Inhabitants charging to urge their Flight that the empty Houses might be used as Barracks for the Soldiers they had sent for.”—Wms. Smith’s Diary (Ms.), Feb. 5, 1776.

Gen. Charles Lee dispatched by to Washington: “We are to erect enclosed batteries, on both sides of the water, near Hellgate, which will answer the double purpose of securing the town against pirates through the Sound, and secure our communication with Long Island.”—Lee Papers, IV: 272, in N. Y. Hist. Soc. Collections (1871).

Trevor Newland writes to Benjamin Franklin outlining a plan for building battery coast defences. It is not intended for any specific locality.—Lee Papers, I: 286-92.

At a conference held at Major Gen. Lee’s headquarters in New York, the committee of safety decides upon making a “secure fortified lodgment for the troops” in New York, wherever Gen. Lee or other commannder shall think best, “for preventing the ministerial troops from taking possession of this City.” They also decide that such an entrenched encampment and other works should be made on Nassau Island, wherever Gen. Lee or other commander shall think best; also that such works should be erected at Hell Gate.—Journ. of the Com. of Safety, I: 284.

“Lord Sterling arived wht 1000 men from the jerseys.”—From letter of Garish Harin, opr. cit., 86-87. This was William Alexander, Earl of Stirling, who was born in the city of New York in 1746, and succeeded his father as successor to the Titles of New Jersey. He was appointed a brigadier-general in the continental army on March 1, 1776.—Ibid., 86, foot-note. Another authority gives Feb. 6 as the date of his arrival.—N. T. Col. Docs., VIII: 667. See also reference to him in N. T. Packet, Feb. 15, 1776; and “Life of William Alexander, Earl of Stirling,” in N. J. Hist. Soc. Collections (1847), Vol. II.

Gen. Lee writes to Gov. Trumbull, of Connecticut: “It is determined to take strong possession of the city, as well as of its most important environs, in short to put the Province in such a situation as to render any attempt of the enemy to establish themselves in it ineffectual. For this purpose some additional Battalions are ordered to be levied in this Province. But from the great scarcity of men & greater of arms, I apprehend it will be a considerable time before they can be completed & equipped in such a manner as to arm corps in whom we can place the Enemy may perhaps very soon appear and we ought immediately to be ready to receive them. I could, therefore, Sir, wish that if Col. Ward’s regt is not already disbanded and your Colony can spare them, that they be immediately detached for this place. But if it is disbanded that you would be able to send a number of volunteers, equal in number to that regt completely armed & accoutered.” He adds in a postscript: “Gen’1 Clinton arrived almost in the same instant with myself; he has brought no men with him, at least that we can discover & has given his word of honor none are coming. Says it is only a friendly visit to M’ Tryon, but the fact is, I suppose he came only to reconnoiter whether the Coast was clear and his friends the Feb.
toies ready for his reception.—"MSS. Knox, Ward, C. Lee, Kirkwood, Harris (1765-90), 68-69, in Harvard Coll. Library.

"The Governor sent for the Mayor, and desired him to assure the public, that General Clinton was only come to pay him a visit on his way, and that the troops should not land here; nevertheless it was thought necessary to keep a strict look out, for if they should land by surprise, in consequence of which half of our battalions kept guard all night, the other half the next, the second battalion doing the same. Nothing hostile has yet commenced, but God knows how soon it may. The ice obliges the ships to warp closer together than is usual this day the ice is so thick, they make side to side, and many people upon it."—Penn. Evc. Fds., Feb.
10, 1776.

The committee of safety issues a statement, signed by Henry Remsen, chairman, and addressed to the inhabitants of the neighbouring counties and colonies, that "this city is now become a scene of confusion and distress, occasioned by an apprehension, that unmerited hostilities will shortly be commenced by the ships of war lying in this harbour; under the influence of this belief many of our poor are abandoning their habitations, and flying for protection into the arms of their brethren in the nei-bouring counties and provinces. This Committee therefore earnestly intreat all those among whom such poor may, come to exercise great kindness and benefit towards them, by furnishing them with habitations and other necessaries of life, for their present subsistence, on the easiest terms, and accommodating them in any other way, which their wealth or duty to the poor, as Christians, may direct."—N. Y. Packet, have withdrawn with their effects, hundreds without the means to support their families."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 667.

Gen. Charles Lee writes to the president of congress: "A transport is this instant arrived in this harbour with troops, although it is said that General Clinton gave his honour that not a soldier was destined for this place. As we have, sir, a great deal to do, many works to throw up, Long Island to secure, and a considerable deal of duty necessary for the safety of the city, . . . it is requisite to proclaim that every body be taken relief that the Committee of Safety (whose zeal and alacrity seems most fre-vent) have ordered three regiments of Minute-Men into the city;
but I apprehend even this addition will not enable us to accomplish the measures resolved upon . . . the Congress would do well;

After noting the arrival of the British transport "Ketty" with 200 soldiers, a news report states: "In Consequence of the above Manoeuvre, his Excellency the Earl of Stirling, arrived here from New-Jersey, with about 1500 Men, 2000 are daily expected from Pennsylvania; 1000 from Dutchess-County in this Province, and 2000 from Connecticut; so that we may this Week have an Army here of near 8000 effective Men."—N. Y. Merc., Feb. 12, 1776.

"The 9 & 10 Instant Nothing materd happen ped moeving as an Instant from letter of Garish Harin, ep. cdto, 87.

A British man-of-war, transports, and tender, go from New York Harbour on this day to the "Watering-place" (near the present Quarantine), with 200 marines on board. It is reported that they intend to storm or bombard the forts on Staten Island, and supply themselves with live stock. "Gen. Livingstons, in a letter of march forth to prevent this, but learning that the fleet had left the Hook the day before, the troops were ordered back, leaving a detachment to guard the coast."—N. Y. Merc., Feb. 19; N. Y.

The British troops seize the king's artillery and military stores in Fort George and on the lower battery, and carry them off without opposition,—"(the same day that General Clinton sailed out of this Fort [Fort], . . . Cap'l Packer [of the "Phoenix"] finding it impossible to interrupt this outrage otherwise than by firing on the City. The ice keeping the Ships of war so near within shore that he was of opinion he could not bring the Ships under his Command to a day off the Fort and Battery, the Chief Part of the stores were deposited without great risk to the King's Ships from the Ice at that severe season. The destruction therefore of the City where there were so many friends to Government, with the loss of all their property, & the consideration of preserving the town for the King's army was thought to be too great an injury, on the final recording the removal of the Artillery and Stores, which even after such sacrifices could have been carried off by the Jersey and the Connecticut Troops; who came into town with full expectations, and the declarative purpose of sharing in the plunder of the effects of the Inhabitants as soon as the King's Ships should fire on the City."—From Tryon's See also Garish Harin's letter in N. Y. City during the Am.
Rev., 87. Smith says:

"The whole Town was alarmed with the Removal of all the Cannon from the Fort and Battery to the Fields—Carts now improved for the Stores & ammunition & the Cauoou drawn by Hands with an astonishng uproar & shouting & the work continued all Day long with no almost intire neglect of all public worship. The multitude expected every Moment a Firing from the Ships. . . .
but midday into the House was brought a Despatch from his having the Conduct of this Business & applaunded himself for transacting it in open Day as less alarming to the Inhabitants but I withheld my Confidence . . . & let off no Reprheticss for distressing the Town at such an internpore Season because I found the Attempt to persuade People to continue in their homes was all taken by the Committee."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), Feb. 12, 1776.

Gen. Charles Lee writes to New York to the president of congress: "As the North-River is now entirely clear of ice, I thought it imprudent to suffer the cannon and other stores to remain any looper upon the Battery, and to yards at the very water-edge, from whence the ships of war might have conveyed them at their pleasure. . . . I ordered the whole to be removed to the ground above the Upper Barracks; it was effected without the least opposition, or show of opposition from the ships; indeed, I even consider their menaces to fire upon the town as idle gas-conades."—Lee Papers, I: 287.

"Last Lord's Day [Feb. 11] we were in much confusion; people in almost every street were loading carts with their goods. Our churches were nearly empty, and those who went would scarcely hear the Preacher's voice. In short, all was trepidation and confusion. The greatest part of the inhabitants, with their moveables, were taken relief that the Committee of Safety (whose zeal and alacrity seems most fre-vent) have ordered three regiments of Minute-Men into the city;
but I apprehend even this addition will not enable us to accomplish
the measures resolved upon . . . the Congress would do well;
to establish an Hospital in this Colony."—Lee Papers, IV: 279-

there securely kept, under such guard, until the further order of the provincial congress of this colony, or of this committee of safety, as the said guard are hereby expressly required to permit the said Samuel Bayard, Esq. to have continual access to, and the direction of the said records, except that he and every other person be prevented from removing them, or any of them, from the place where they are hereby ordered to be deposited, &c. On the same occasion, your committee, having taken a note of this resolution of the committee—Reported to the Sec. of State, relative to the Records, &c. in his office (in senate, Jan. 5, 1820). Cf. Col. Coun. Min., 507, which gives Feb. 14 as the date of the removal of the records.

With the capture of New York City by the British these records started on a peripatetic career. Whenever the capital of the state was moved the records were moved. Whenever was heard the cry 'the enemy are coming' the sacred documents were the first articles to be seized and hastily conveyed to a place of safety. Upon the approach of the enemy to Kingston, the archives of Orange County were removed to Rochester, a small town in Ulster county. After Burgoyne's defeat, the archives were returned to Kingston, where they were guarded by a special detail of 200 men. —Pub. Papers of Geo. Clinton, I: 10-11.

Mayor Whitehead Hicks tells the provincial congress that Geo. Tryon, in his diary, quotes Gov. Clinton as saying, "that His Majesty's Council, and some of the magistrates of this city, may have occasion to visit on His Excellency." It is therefore ordered "That the Honble. Caswallader Colden, Lieut.-Govr. and the Honble. Daniel Hammondsen, Oliver De Lancey, Chas. Ward, Atporpho, William Smith, John Wallace, William Axtell and John Harris Cruger, Esqrs. of His Majesty's Council for this Colony, the Worshipful Whitehead Hicks, Esqr. Mayor of the city of New-York, and Saml. Bayard, Jour. Esqr. Deputy Secretary, and Deputy Clerk be permitted to go on board His Excellency's ship, until the further order or direction of this Congress or the Committee of Safety."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 296. Smith, in his diary, recites his difficulty in passing the sentinels thus: "We proceeded to the Dock [to embark for the council meeting on the "Duchess of Gordon"] apprehending no Difficulties from the Guards.—A sentinel forbid the Clerk of the Council to set his Foot in the Boat upon which we retired and I went home.—The Congress took the Alarm apprehending that if we did not meet the Governor there would be no Prorogation & a Dissolution would follow—within Half an Hour their Clerks sought for the dispersed members & assured us there would be no further Obstruction & imparted us to repair again.—We got Smith's Diary—I: 296. The Diary—"Application being made by some of the master carpenters employed in building the continental frigates, to some members of this house, informing, that about fifty of their journeymen and apprentices had engaged as volunteers to march with the battalion of associates for New York, and that their zeal for the public service is such, that they cannot be persuaded to desist by any arguments or influence of said builders," it is resolved "That the spirit and zeal of the said journeymen and apprentices is highly approved of by Congress; but, nevertheless, it is the opinion of this Congress, that the public will require essentially the services of the said associates continuing at their work on the said continental frigates; and that, therefore, all the carpenters, journeymen, and apprentices, employed as aforesaid, be requested to remain in that service, as there is no doubt but other associators will complete the number wanted."—Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford ed.), IV: 147-48.

The provincial congress orders that John Van Cortlandt, Mr. Roosevelts, and Capt. Rutgers act as a committee to examine the lists of empty houses in this city, made by sundry citizens at the request of the Committee of Safety, and to ascertain such as they may think most proper for the use of the troops. —Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 296.

Mayor Whitehead Hicks resigns office, having been appointed on this day to be justice of the supreme court in place of Robert Livingston, deceased (Col. Coun. Min., 506-7); and Alderman David Mathews is appointed by Gov. Tryon to be mayor.--M. C. G., VIII: 127; N. Y. Merc., Feb. 19; N. Y. Jour., Feb. 24, 1776. Smith, in his diary, quotes Gov. Tryon as saying to the council that Hicks was "tired of the parliamentary & desirous to retire from the Town." He further says: "I have known Mr. Tryon so indolent to the Board as at this meeting. He thought as he had no Instructions he could constitute Judges without us but he chose nevertheless to consult us, and then he nominated Mr. Hicks for a Judge—This occasioned the Silence of the Rest of the Board on these appointments, and they observed a proper Resentment in giving no opinion, especially as there was indeed no Objection to be made since the principal Characters of the Country were in open Opposition to Gov. —Wm. Smith's Diary (M.S.), Feb. 14, 1776. The alarm and conclusion in this city, for some days past, was truly distressing, occasioned chiefly by the unexpected arrival of Gen. Clinton in the Mercury frigate [on Feb. 4], and two other vessels, a ship with troops, and a brig, from Boston. They sailed from hence three days ago, it is said, for North-Carolina, since which they have enjoyed some degree of quiet; but how it will continue, is hard to tell.—N. Y. Packet, Feb. 15, 1776.

The provincial congress passes the following resolution: "Whereas a large body of troops are daily expected from the neighbouring counties and Colonies, for the defence of this city against the ministerial army and navy, in which case it will be necessary (as the barracks are already filled with those already arrived,) to provide proper houses for their reception: It is therefore Resolved and Ordered, That the general committee of the city and county of New-York, be requested forthwith to cause a return to be made to them of all the empty houses in this city, or any that are, or a sub-committee of their body, select a sufficient number of said houses for the accommodation of the troops that shall, from time to time arrive. That in the choice of the said houses such be taken as are least liable to be injured by the troops. That the said committees, or their sub-committee, be careful to take a survey of the condition of the said houses, at the time they shall be taken possession of, and at the time such houses shall be let by the said troops, to the end that proper satisfaction may be made to the proprietors for any injury the said houses may receive by reason of quartering troops therein."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 301.

"Col. McDougall informed the Congress that he understood that the floors were laid in the hospital lately erected in this city. Congress orders "That Col. Swartwout be authorized to demand the keys of the hospital lately erected in this city and open the apartments for his use, as he thinks proper. Also, that he be authorized to make use of the same for his regiment of minute men."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 301.

Gen. Charles Lee writes from New York to the president of congress: "I think it my duty to inform you, that the Phenix and Governour Tryon's ship are already out of the harbour, and that the Asia of under sail. They, most probably, have had intelligence of the danger which threatens their comrade, the Mercury, and General Clinton, from your fleet, and are sailed with an intention of attacking it. The Asia ran aground opposite the Exchange; as the tides are low, we were in hopes she would not have been able to get off this flood. In these hopes we were preparing cartridges for some pieces of cannon, (which is not here from want of method, a very short operation,) and flattered ourselves that we should have been able to have destroyed much demaged her, but she was now, unfortunately, afloat."—Jour. Cont. Cong., IV: 1179-80. Under the same date, Smith recorded: "The Phenix fell down this morning to the Narrows & the Asia ran aground opposite to Whitehall in the afternoon in retiring with the Duchess of Gordon below the Town. She got off before the Preparations were made for the Troops, to whom they were completely to be delivered, and much damaged her, but she was now, unfortunately, afloat."—Wm. Smith's Diary (M.S.), Feb. 17, 1776. "Capt. Vandeventer of the 'Asia' is stationed in North River, and takes the 'Dutchess of Gordon' under his protection with Governor Tryon on board."—N. Y. Col. Marr., VIII: 674.
A debate is held in the house of commons on a motion for an enquiry into the causes of the ill success of the British arms in America. Mr. Fox declares that "our ministers wanted both wisdom and integrity, our parliaments public spirit and discernment; and that our Commanders by sea and land were still worse."

The committee reported in March, however, that they "had viewed the house on Freshwater Hill, where John Fowler lately dwelt, with two barns adjoining. That Dr. Treat highly approved of said house and barns, &c. for the amount of £70 from the 1st day of May next." This action congress ratified.—Ibid., 1: 336. See also April 6.

Col. McDougall informs the provincial congress "that some works will be necessary to be erected on some ground on the bank southwest of Trinity church; that three small houses there (one of them tenanted) will necessarily be taken down." Mr. Roosevelt, Capt. Rutgers, and Mr. Beckman, "who are judges of buildings," are appointed a committee to examine and determine the value of the three buildings.—Jour. Prov. Cong., 1: 335.

Gen. Charles Lee writes: "I have pulled down the interior part of the fort, lest it should be converted into a Citadel by Mr. Tryon and his Myrmidons."—Lee Papers, 1: 334.

The common council authorizes the payment of £317:7:6 to Isaac Mead, "for the Doors of the hall Where the Arms was taking out Sundry Articles for the New goal & Repairing the Sentry Boxes."—Original voucher in comptroller's office, M. C. G., VIII: 127.

Alexander Moncrieff is paid £609:9:9, "in full of his Accl for sundry Exagenses attending the Bridewell including a Quarters Salary."—M. C. G., VIII: 129. Moncrieff's account includes 2,153 days' subsistence for vagrants, at 5 shillings per day.—Original voucher in comptroller's office.

The committee appointed to examine the seals in the common council the resignation of Mayor Hicks, dated Feb. 14 (q.v.), which shows that it is entered in "Lib. No D of Commissions page 184," in the secretary of state's office; and he informs the board that Gov. Tryon has appointed him to the offices of mayor, water-bailiff, and clerk of the market. His commission is published, and he is "conducted to the Common Council Chamber, and placed in the Chair."—M. C. G., VIII: 127. Samuel Landon announces that his circulating library now amounts to over 2,000 volumes, and that a supplementary catalogue is about to be issued to subscribers.—N. T. Packet, Feb. 22, 1776.

Frederick Rhemlander writes from New York to Peter van Schaack: "General Lee is taking every necessary step to fortify and defend this city. The men-of-war are gone out of our harbor; the Phoenix, the New York, and the Island; that we are now in a state of perfect peace and security, was it not for our apprehensions of future danger. To see the vast number of houses shut up, one would think the city almost evacuated. Women and children are scarcely to be seen in the streets. Troops are daily coming in; they break open and quarter themselves in any houses they choose. We are going to raise a new habitation; Colonels Lasher and Gouverneur Morris are candidates for the command."—Life of Peter Van Schaack, 53.

After much discussion of the meeting of congress, Dr. Treat has taken every measure to find out some proper place for a hospital, the only two obtained being Mr. De Lancey's house in the Out Ward, and three houses in and near Maiden Lane, near Walton's brewery. Congress is of opinion that the place in Maiden Lane will not answer the purpose, and that Mr. De Lancey's house in the Bowery is the most proper. A committee is appointed for the use of his house.—Jour. Prov. Cong., 1: 232.
1776 Those ministers who have so maddly driven them on to unavoidable Feb. resistance, must be answerable to their country for all future conse- quences. I wish to enter my protest once for all, that I shall always think it most foolish and felony, that any man, in any station, in their own defence, and in support of those very claims [for] which we ourselves have successfully taken up arms in former times, to rescue us from the violence and tyrannical pretentions of the House of Stuart—"Pat. Hist. of Eng. (1813), XVIII: 1770-71. It is reported in New-London that some 100 Rebel-inhabitants have been driven, and in support of their own claims, from their own homes, and in support of those very claims [for] which we ourselves have successfully taken up arms in former times, to rescue us from the violence and tyrannical pretentions of the House of Stuart—"Pat. Hist. of Eng. (1813), XVIII: 1770-71.

19 Mar. Ninety Cannon, of various sizes, have been taken from Fort George in New-York, and that Part of the Fort next to the City is demolished.

Numbers of Cannon are mounted on different Wharves in that City. "We learn that all the Cannon near Kingsbridge, which had been spiked, are now cleared, and fit for Use."—Conn. Gaz., (New-London), March 23, 1776.

A correspondent in London writes: "Lord Howe is to go [as] first commissioner, in the new, idle, ridiculous commission that is to be made out, to treat with America. His Lordship is not to be, nor to act as commander of any force, but in a civil capacity only. "Discerning men already say this commission scheme will not succeed. America will not treat with those men, nor with any persons [however otherwise respectable] sent by those who advise this. "First remove Lord Mansfield, and the tools of Lord Bute, and then, and not till then, America and England will believe the court are truly desirous of peace."—Moore, Diary of Am. Rev., I: 214, citing Const. Gaz., March 2 and 6, 1776.

Information is given to the provincial congress that sentries near the wharves frequently fire at boats and sloops containing the inhabitants of this and the neighbouring colonies as they enter or leave the docks and slips, "whereby the persons on board are in danger of losing their lives." Information is also given to this congress that "all communication with, and the supplies of necessary provisions to the ships of war, and Govt. Tryon's ship, in the harbour or in the bays near this City, is interdicted; and Mr. Roosevelt informed the Congress that Col. Waterbury has lately declared that the other United Colonies ought to crush this Colony of New-York; and that Mr. Isaac Sears had spoken of this Congress, and the general committee of the City of New York, in the most harsh, disrespectful and abusive terms . . ." A committee is appointed " to wait on Major-Gen. Lee without delay, and request of him the reason of his interfering the communication between this city and the ships of war and Govt. Tryon's ship, in or near the harbour of this city, contrary to the resolves of this Congress; and also, to request the occasion of the firing by the soldiery of this city on the inhabitants . . ."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 333.

The following notice is published: "The Fire Engine of the Wharf quarter is completely finished, Mr. Colle's proposes to keep it going for several Days successively, to give every Gentleman an opportunity of seeing it; and in order that they may more easily know when it is a working, a Flag will be displayed in the Middle of the Road, which may be seen from any Part of the Broadway."—N. Y. Merc., Mar. 4, 1776. There is an illustration of this engine in Wilson's Mem.Hist.City of N. Y., II: 478. For a description of the works, see March 11 and April 17.

Capt. Archibald Robertson, an engineer in the 47th Regiment of foot and an officer on Howe's staff at Boston, writes in his Journal: "It is now Eight o'clock in the Evening. Went to Head Qrs. . . . after waiting some time Capt. Monterey came down from the Genl told me he had been in Council & had advised the going off altogether—that Lt. Percy & some others seconded him & that the Genl said it was his own Sentiments from the first, but he thought the honour of the Troops Concerned—so it is agreed immediately to Embark every thing."—Robertson's Private Jour. 1775 (MS.), in N. Y. Pub. Library. Five MS. journals kept by Capt. Robertson, and a series of 54 American views made by him (see July 12), have recently been purchased by the N. Y. Pub. Library from three of his descendants. The journals are briefly written and not well written. The first deals with the expedition to Martinique in 1776; the others are valuable as contemporary records of Revolutionary War happenings. They extend from July 15, 1775, to the end of 1780 (during most of which time Robertson was in America).

Howe announced to his officers on the next day (9th) his decision to evacuate.

The common council orders the further issue of notes to the value of £2000 for carrying on the Water Works" (see Jan. 5).—M. C. C., VIII: 131. On March 18, it granted to Christopher Colles the sum of £50 "for the Expenses of supporting himself & Family for two months past."—Ibid., VIII: 133. See April 19.

A "middle size gun," taken from the guard house on this day, is described as "One Horse Collar fastened with a brass rib over the bared from the breach to the fight, and one on each side about 18 inches long, the plate of the lock brass, fixed for a bayonet."—Const. Gaz., March 27, 1776.

The following letter, signed by Pierre van Cortlandt and others, is written to Major Malcom: "The Provincial Congress of this Colony having appointed us a committee to concert measures for carrying into execution their resolve of the 5th inst. for the disarming the light-house at Sandy-Hook, we . . . have made choice of you for the execution of that important enterprise. . . . Upon your arrival at Sandy-Hook you will endeavour to take the glass out of the lantern, and save it if possible; but if you find this impracticable you will break all the glass. You will also endeavour to pump the oil out of the cisterns into casks and bring it off; but if you should be obstructed by the enemy, or not be able to procure casks, you will pump it out onto the ground. In short you will use your best skill here to render the light-house entirely useless. . . ."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 142.

Gen. Howe informs his officers that he intends to evacuate Boston and to go to Halifax. Robertson says "The Great motive for our leaving the Town is want of provisions not having a month's store & what the Navy can assist us in."—Robertson's Private Jour., 1775 (MS.), in N. Y. Pub. Library. The final evacuation took place on Mar. 17 (q.v.).

The news reaches New York that a number of troops are evacuating Boston, and embarking on transports; "it is thought they intend visiting N. York very shortly."—Penn. Est. Post, March 9, 1776.

The Selectmen of Boston send a petition to Gen. Washington "acquiring him that Genl Howe was to leave the Town [see Mar. 6] that they had ask'd the Genl if He intended to burn the Town. * He told them He did not unless the Rebels fired upon him & annoy'd his Retreat in that Case He did not know what He might do." They ask Washington not to allow "The Rabble to come into town, but only the People to take possession of their own houses &c."—Robertson's Private Jour. 1775 (MS.), in N. Y. Pub. Library. See Mar. 18.

The provincial congress resolve, that a letter be wrote to the Delegates of this Colony, informing them the Governor and Representives of the Colony of Connecticut have not as yet given any answer to the letter from this Provincial Congress [see Dec. 14, 1775] on that subject [the inroads from Connecticut] not required nor for the any restitution of the property taken away from James Rivington."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 346. See June 10.

Agreeable to a "resolve" of the continental congress, of this day, an appointment is taken of the arms, etc., taken from the "disaffected persons" in New York City. The list of these is printed in Cal. Hist. MSS. (Rev. Papers), I: 159.

William Temple, of Boston, brother of John Temple, hint-governor of New Hampshire, arrived in New York yesterday [10th], and went on to Philadelphia where he conferred with the members of the provincial congress, ascertaining that he had messages to the continental congress from the Marquis of Rockingham and the Duke of Grafton, to the effect that if the colonies could "keep their ground the ensuing Summer" the administration would be overturned and ruined.—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), March 11, 1776.

James de Lancey, who had fled to England via Quebec after the Lexington skirmish, and there joined the Whig faction to the Tory administration, writes to his friends in New York urging the adoption by the continental congress of Burke's "Bill for a Reconciliation," in order to overthrow the Lord North government. "This confirms me," says Smith, "in my opinion that the Government frowned upon the Fugitives from America and that the Opposition aim at rending the great controversy useful to themseleves."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), March 11, 1776.

Gov. Tryon informs the council that he has received three letters from the new secretary of state, Lord George Germaine.

1776 "announcing his [Germantown's] Appointment, asserting the Determination in it upon the Dependence of the Colonies, informing 11 that Commissioners were speedily to come out to grant Pardons and confer with the Colonies for restoring Peace."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), March 11, 1776.

"We can with Pleasure assure the Public, that the Fire Engine of the 13th March, if it was work'd many Days past Week, greatly to the Satisfaction of vast Numbers of People who went to see it. This Engine carries a Pump of 11 inches diameter, and 6 Feet Stroke, which contains 29 Galls. Makes 10 Strokes in a Minute In one Hour, 174 Hogsheads In 12 Hours, 5088 ditto. In 24 Hours, 4760 ditto.

"The Well is 30 Feet diameter, and 30 deep, contains 8 Feet depth of water.

"The Water is inexhaustible, for the Pump, tho' continually work'd, cannot lower the Water more than two Feet.

"A Cord and ½ of Wood will work the Engine for 24 Hours.

"It is proposed to work the Engine for some Days longer, for the further Inspection of the Public, of which Notice will be given by hoisting a Flag; by 7 o'clock, March 11, 1776. For another description of the works, see April 17.

"At New York we have a founder who has already cast 14 or 15 excellent brass field-pieces" (see Feb. 27)—The Remembrances (London, 1776), Part III, 31, See April 12.

In Washington, writing from Cambridge to the president of congress, during the evacuation of Boston, says that he considers it "of the last importance in the present contest that we should secure New York, and prevent the enemy from possessing it." He conjectures that the British have embarked for the purpose of attacking it. In accordance with a consultation of general officers, he states, "I shall detach the rifle regiment to-morrow, under the command of Brigadier-General Sullivan, with orders to repair to New York with all possible expedition." Others are to follow. Then he intends to send forward Major-Gen. Putnam, and to follow himself with the remainder of the army.—Writings of Gen. Washington (Ford ed.), III, 468-49.

"Six regiments of the American army, viz. Greston's, Stark's, Patterson's, Bond's, Webb's, and the rifle regiment, were put under orders to march for New York [from Boston]... A detachment of artillery was also ordered to march with this brigade.

"A Return" or account is made of the number of troops at New York, under the command of Brig.-Gen. The Earl of Stirling, showing where the regiments are from, where they are stationed, and the number of officers and privates on this day. It enumerates 181 serjes, 28 corporals, 80 drummers, and 217 privates.

From the original MS. with the Stirring Papers (Vol. IV), at N. Y. Hist. Soc.

Regulations are agreed to for the defence of New York, between Lord Stirling, general of the continental troops, and a committee of the provincial congress of the colony of New York.—From a contemporaneous manuscript copy of the agreement, in the Stirring Papers (Vol. IV).

14 The Duke of Grafton, in the house of lords, moves that the king be authorized and requested by parliament to issue a proclamation "declaring, that in case the colonies, within a reasonable time before or after the arrival of the troops destined for America, shall present a petition... setting forth... what they consider to be their just rights and real grievances, that in such case his Majesty will consent to a suspension of arms; and that his Majesty has authority from his parliament to assure them, that such petition shall be received, considered, and answered."

"The Earl of Dartmouth speaks against the motion. "I ever was," said he," and ever shall be of opinion, that this country cannot, with propriety, concede, nor can we, consistent with the essential interests of this country, consent to lay down our arms, till the colonies own our just legislative sovereignty... I was anxious to treat with them with tenderness, and even to give way to their prejudices, so far as it could be done with safety. What has been the consequence? They have treated those marks of favour as so many indications of national imbecility; they have abused this leviathan in proportion as it has been literally and affectionately exercised. I am of opinion, that the only sure and solid way of averting the evils of civil war, will be to send such a force as will awe the Colonies into submission."

The Duke of Manchester states that "The very great expense with which the present measures must necessarily be attended; the uncertainty of the real disposition of foreign powers; and the present state of the navy... all united, give just cause for considering the present measure, and answering the present questions which may follow, in case your lordships should be inclined to give it a negative."

The Earl of Sandwich, head of the naval department, denies the weakness of the navy, mentioned by Manchester, and adds: "the present measures, if steadily pursued, will, to every substantial purpose, answer the ends of humanity, and be the most effectual means of preventing the effusion of human blood."

The Earl of Hillsborough expresses himself as "perfectly convinced, that if the right of taxation be surrendered, every other beneficial right of sovereignty will soon follow, and America in the end be totally separated from this country."

The Earl of Shelburne can see but one objection to the motion, that "it would operate as an encouragement to America to rise higher in her demands... Granting every thing which may be built on this argument to have great weight, I would only oppose to his one consideration, that if this turn out not to be true, it would give the friends of government such a superiority, such a concurrence of hands and hearts, as would be more than a sufficient counterbalance for any inconvenience which might arise from the suspension of arms proposed by the present motion."

Lord Lyttelton asks the house to "Consider... what a figure you would cut in the eyes of all Europe, in those of your own subjects, in the opinion even of the very people for whose sake the benefit is intended. Would they not all unite in pronouncing it the summit of folly, of cowardice, and national weakness... It will only be," he adds, "to give the colonies time to prepare for more vigorous resistance."

The Bishop of Peterborough ventures to speak in the interest of humanity. He does not believe that the Americans want independence and would not listen to conciliation. "Should it, however, appear that nothing short of independence will satisfy America... it will let us all into the real ground of the quarrel, concerning which we so widely differ at present."

Lord Abingdon declares that "the present war to compel her [America] to an unconditional submission, is a war of conquest, and, if successful, must terminate in the absolute slavery of the vanquished."

Lord Camden is "desirous the present motion should succeed," and is curious to learn "the real intentions of administration, to know whether they mean at all to recede from their full demands, or whether they intend to risk every thing to pursue war for the pursuit, of the complete conquest in one event, or unconditional submission in the other."

Lord Mansfield opposes the motion, as "magnatory, ill-tempered, and ineffectual," and the Duke of Grafton closes the debate by urging the members "to reflect, that the honour of parliament, the prosperity and dearest interest of both countries, the lives of thousands of British subjects are at stake, that the present is probably the only moment you will ever have to snatch them from the ruin which will otherwise inevitably await them, and that the consequences of neglecting this opportunity, will be the source of endless mourning and lamentation to ages yet unborn."

The motion is lost by a vote of 91 to 31.—Port. Hist. of Eng. (1813), XVIII: 1247-86.

The continental congress recommends that "all persons... who are notoriously disaffected to the cause of America" be disarmed.—Jour. Conc. Cong. (Ford ed.), IV: 265. This resolution was complied with in New York City.—Cal. N. Y. Hist. MSS. (Rev. Papers), I: 259.

The committee of the continental congress appointed on March 11 "to confer with Gen. Charles Lee, and devise the best ways and means for the defence of New York," makes its report. Gen. Lee states, amongst other things: "At the City of New York is almost eviscer'd by navigable waters it is undoubtedly very difficult to fortify it against a powerful sea armament; but still I am of opinion that although Troops cannot easily be prevented landing under the Guns of their shipping, they may be prevented lodging themselves in, or converting it into a great place of arms as they have done Boston. The East River, I am almost persuaded,

May be secured in such a manner that their Ships will scarcely venture into it, or at least they cannot keep their stations when in. You plan'd and it is stated that the foot of the Jews burying ground [on the present New Bowery—cf. Dec. 17, 1729], to protect this Battery from the near approach of Ships.

"The Fort cannot . . . be defended, but as it is not possible in a manner to render it a fortification of offence against the Enemy, it might in their possession be converted into a Citadel to keep the Town in subjection. These considerations have induc'd me to throw down the North East and North West Bastions, with the communicating Curtain, so that being entirely open behind, and a commanding view thro' the two gates, it is impossible for the Enemy to lodge themselves in and repair the Fort. . . . New York from its circumstances can with difficulty be made a regular tenable fortification, but it may be made a most advantageous field of Battle, so advantageous . . . it must cost the Enemy many thousands of men.

The Streets must be traversed and barricaded, so as to prevent their coming on our Flanks. Three redoubts thrown up on the three eminences Judge Jones, Bayards Hill, and either Lippenards or Haldernam house on Hudson River, but these measures are not to confound to the Town, the whole Island it to be reduced. The regular steps are not to be taken, these redoubts redans or Fiches are easily thrown up and are no expence. The leading roads from Hudson River, whence the Enemy can alone approach must be obstructed to artillery. Kings Bridge must be strongly fortified to preserve the communication free and open with the Neck, on which you can alone depend for succours of men, for the Breast and depth of the North River renders the Communication with Jersey too precarious. The possession and security of Long Island is certainly of still greater importance than New York. . . .—Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford ed.), IV: 158.

Washington replied on March 15, writing from headquarters in Cambridge, and expressed satisfaction with Lee's plans for the defence of New York. As Lee had been sent south, Washington informed him he would order the commanding officer at New York to complete the preparations for defence.—Ibid., IV: 358. See also the Lee Papers, I: 544-59; and, for fuller description of the fortifications on Manhattan Island at this time, see Johnston's Campaign of 1776, 263-65, and the Landmark Map, Pl. 174, Vol. III.

"Horatio Gates, the adjutant-general of the patriot forces, publishes notice from headquarters in New York that, as the "Asia" has "quitted her station and left the harbour, the navigation between this city and New Jersey, by the Kills, is become quite safe."

—N. Y. Merc., April 15, 1776.

"The committee of the congressional congress appointed to confer with Gen. Lee regarding the defence of New York reports, and considers 10,000 men be needed for the defence of this colony; and that certain specified troops of Pennsylvania and New Jersey be ordered to march immediately to New York, and put themselves under the direction of the commanding officer there. On March 15, congress ordered that the militia of Connecticut, New York and New Jersey be held in readiness for the same purpose.—Jour. Cont. Cong. (1777), II: 91-92.

"Washington writes from Cambridge to the commanding officer at New York that, while it is given out by the British that Howe's army is bound for Halifax, he suspects their destination is New York. It is the object worthy of their attention, and it is the place that we must use every endeavor to keep from them. For should they get that town, and the command of the North River, they can stop the intercourse between the northern and southern colonies, upon which depends the safety of America." Washington sends regiments to New York from the camp at Cambridge, and a Battery for this purpose is placed in some from New Jersey and "the militia of the country called in."—Writings of Gen. Washington (Ford ed.), III: 473. See Mar. 21.

"Some troops across the river to the fortifications at Brooklyn ferry. One third of the citizens are ordered out to erect new works; they begin a fort on Mr. Bayard's mount near the Bowery, and another all around the hospital. On March 16, another third go out. Every street in the city is to be barricaded.—Penn. Jour. (Phil.), Mar. 20, 1776.

Gov. Tryon sends to Mayor Matthews for publication, addressed "To the Inhabitants of the Colony of New York." It is a Do. still open to such honest, but deluded People, as shall avail themselves of the Justice and Benevolence which the supreme Legislature has held out to them of being restored to the King's Grace and Peace, and that proper Steps have been taken for passing a Commission for that Purpose, under the Great Seal of Great Britain, by a Reso-...—W. Smith's Diary (MS.), Mar. 30, 1776. It appeared in the N. Y. Packet, March 24, and N. Y. Merc., March 25, 1776. On the 21st, William Smith recorded in his diary: "Notwithstanding our Difficulties at the last Council Mr. Tryon put a Paper into the Hands of the Mayor last Tuesday which I saw at Gaine's for the Press, informing that Commissioners were coming over & encouraging the Friends of Government to expect speedy Relief from Oppression. It shocked me and threw the Tories into Confession as it held them up to the wrath of the Populace who now carried about his Effigy with the Paper at his back. . . .—W. Smith's Diary (MS.), Mar. 21, 1776.

Frederick Jay writes to his brother, John Jay: "... This Day all our militia turned out with great spirit. They are throwing up entrenchments at the Hospital, Bayard's Mount, at the Furnace, Peck's slip, Beachman's slip, Ten Eyck's wharf, back of the Governor's House, & several other Places. Never did People in the world act with more Spirit & Resolution than the New Yorkers do at this present time."—Corres. and Public Papers of John Jay, I: 47.

Gen. Howe evacuates Boston, with a force of about 11,000 men and about 5,000 refugees—Robinson's Private Jour., 1775 (MS.); Winsor, Nat. & Crit. Hist. of Am., VI: 158. An account, amounting to £23,756, of John Simms, the tavern-keeper, for liquor supplied to the common council between Sept. 16, 1774, and Feb. 27, 1776, is ordered paid.—Original note to M. C. C, Mar. 17, 1776. A sub-committee appointed by the general committee for the city and county of New York, by direction of the committee of safety of the province of New York, makes report of its inspection, and presents an account of the quantity of provisions and bar-iron in this city.—Col. Hist. MSS., (Rev. Papers), I: 250.

"General Washington has detached six regiments [see Mar. 14] for this place [New York] who are already advanced 100 miles towards it; 2000 men from Connecticut are coming thirteen other regiments will soon be here, so that we shall in a few days have an army of at least 20,000 men to oppose our enemies, and we shall have a train of 200 pieces of cannon ready to salute them."—N. E. Chron. (Cambridge), March 28, 1776. See Mar. 23.

"General Washington by a Letter of the 19th advises General Lee of Mr. Howe's abandoning Boston on Sunday 17 Ins [p. 24] & then laying in King's & Newington. This had such a fresh alarm, and the Inhabitants flew out of Town with the utmost Precipitation," because they believed Howe would come to New York, a belief that was strengthened the next day by intelligence "from the East End of Long Island that 20 Vessels were seen the 21st between Block Island & Montauk Point. The same day the whole Army of Long Island."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), March 23, 1776.

Congress authorizes privy.-Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford ed.), IV: 239-31; Winsor, Nat. & Crit. Hist. of Am., VI: 501; VIII: 83. See also Mclay (Edgar S.), A Hist. of Am. Privatists (1895). A report (or "Return") is made "of the Batteries in and near the City of New-York, their Cannon, with their weight of metal, 1776 and number of Men requisite to man them, as made to General Mar. Thompson. The names and locations of the batteries are as follows:

"Grenadier's Battery, ... Near the Air-Furnace, on the bank of the North-River."
"Jesse's Battery, A little to the northward of the first."
"Mc Dougall's Battery, ... To the westward of Trinity Church, and very near it."
"Broadway Barrier, ... Very near the Bowling-Green, or the King's Statue."
"Counts's Battery, ... On Ten Eyck's Wharf."
"Stirling's Battery, ... On Long-Island, and nearly opposite the Fly-Market (In the rear of this there is to be a Citadel, which will take up about five acres, and called The Congress)."
"Waterbury's Battery, ... At the Ship-Yards."
"Badlam's Battery, ... On Rutgers first Hill, just above the last mentioned."
"Thompson's Battery, ... At Hone's Hook."
"Independent Battery, ... On Bayard's Mount."

The foregoing, there is a breastwork or barrier at Peck's, Beckman's, and Bayard's, and Fly ships, as also at the Coffee-House, Old Slip, Counties Market, and the Exchange, and one about midway of Broad Street of this Construction, and the same was made in several of the streets leading from the North-River to the Broadway. There is also a line of circumscrip- tion, drawn from river to river, taking in the Independent Battery, on Bayard's Hill, or Jones's where there is also a fortifica- tion to be erected, called Washington, to which may be added a redoubt round the Hospital; as also a work to be erected on the Common, near the Liberty Pole."—Ibid., 480. A description of these batteries, with an indication of their location on the plan of the modern city, and the extent of their armament, was published by Mr. Henry P. Johnston, in The Campaign of 1776 around New York and Brooklyn (1878), 84-90.

In this connection he prints the following note of explanation: "In loc. cit., he specifies a week, giving the number of guns in each; and Hills' map of the fortifications, drawn at the close of the war. The first list shows the works as they stood at about the time the Boston troops came down, and which Lee had planned. There are alterations and additions in Putnam's and Knox's lists, which are to be followed where they differ from the list of March 24th. Although many other works were erected, no names appear to have been attached to them, those only being dedicated which carried the most important points and were provided with guns and garrison.

"The Hills map is indispensable in this connection. John Hills, formerly a British engineer, surveyed the city and island . . . as far as Thirty-fourth Street in 1782, and in 1785 made a careful map of the same, which John Lozef, Esq. presented to the Common Council in 1847 [now in the N. Y. Hist. Soc.—see Man. Com. Coun. (1873), frontis.]. . . In addition to giving all the streets, blocks, docks, and squares, Hills added all the works thrown up in an around the city during the Revolution, giving their exact location and shape. Part of the lines have a confused appearance, but they become clear on referring to the following memorandum on the map: 'All the works colored yellow were erected by the Forces of the United States in 1776. Those works-colored Orange were erected by D0 and repaired by the British Forces. The works colored Green were erected by the British Forces during the War.' (See also British Headquarters MS. Map, Pl. 50). A map of New York accompanies Mr. Johnston's work, in which Hills' "yellow" line has been followed, showing all the American forts. He explains that "by projecting the present streets over Hills' plan, it is possible to ascertain where they stood in the plan of our maps."—Ibid., 84-85, foot-note.

Johnston also notes that Lossing gives a full list of the Revolu- tionary works in and around New York, differing in several particulars from Johnston's own list, which is based on Hills' map. —Ibid., 86, foot-note, citing Field Book of the Rev., II: 391. For other lists see April 17, and May 2.

Regarding Thompson's Battery at Horn's Hool, erected by Colonel Drake's Westchester minute-men soon after Lee's arrival, Johnston makes the following note: "This work stood at Mar. the foot of East Eighty-eighth Street. . . . Some ten years after the war, Archibald Gracie occupied this site, and it became known as Gracie's Point. The writer of a city guide-book in 1800, Dr. Samuel Mitchill, refers to this battery, 'his superb house and gardens stood upon the very spot called Horns-hook, upon which a fort erected by the Americans in 1776 stood till about the year 1791, when the present proprietor caused the remains of the military works to be levelled at great expense, and erected on their rocky base his present mansion and appur- tenances.'—Ibid., 89, citing The Picture of New York. This fort is shown in one of the series of 54 fine drawings made by Archibald Robertson now owned by the New York Public Library, Spencer Collection. For location of fortifications built in the lower part of the island at this time, see also the Ratten Map with MS. additions by Moorehead, described on Pl. 42, Vol. 1, and now in the Map Room of the N. Y. Pub. Library.

Congress orders that proper mechanics be employed to take the leads out of the windows of the city hall and the exchange; also that an account to be kept of the weight of lead taken out of each building separately.—Jour. of the Com. of Safery, I: 384.

"Brigadier-General Baron De Woesthe, the Hon. Benjamin Franklin, and several other gentlemen" arrive in New York from Philadelphia.—N. Y. Merc., April 1, 1776. They left on April 3 for Albany on their way to Canada.—Ibid., April 8, 1776.

About 1,000 riflemen arrive from Boston.—N. Y. Merc., April 11, 1776.

Washington writes from his headquarters in Cambridge to Maj.-Gen. Putnam that he has "detached Brigadier-General Heath with the whole body of riflemen and five battalions of the Continental army, by the way of Norwich in Connecticut, to New York." These, he believes, have arrived in New York. Six more battalions, under Gen. Sullivan, start this morning by the same route. The rest of the army will immediately follow in divi- sions. He directs Putnam to go to New York at once, and assume the command, "and immediately proceed in continuing to exe- cute the plan proposed by Major-General Lee, for fortifying that city and securing the passes of the East and North Rivers."

On this day, Brig.-Gen. Heath, with Stark's, Webb's, Bond's, Patterson's, and Grenton's regiments, numbering in all about 3,500 men, arrive at Turtle Bay. Here the troops disembarked, and marched into the city at noon. "The transports fell down to the city whareves, and lauded the baggage, etc. Gen. Thompson and Lord Sterling, with some New York and New-Jersey troops, were in the city; and works were constructing, in and around the city on Long Island, and at Horn's Hook. . . . The British, from Brant's-mad-war, then lay off in the Lady Cage, of 20 guns; but, on the arrival of the brigade, the Asie moved further down, just out of shot. Our General put a stop to the intercourse between the inhabitants and the ships, which had, until then, been kept up (see April 8).—Memoirs of Maj.-Gen. Heath, 44; N. Y. Merc., April 11; Penn. Exe. Post, April 2, 1776; N. Y. Packet, April 4, 1776.

On this, the day of Heath's arrival, William Thompson writes to the committee of safety: "A number of troops are arrived, and more are hourly expected, who must be quartered in the City; and as I understand that many of the inhabitants who have quitted the town have left part of their furniture in their houses, I must request that you will give such directions as you may judge best for securing the property of those people, whose houses are, or shall be, occupied as barracks for the troops."—Am. Arch., V: 8.

During this week, part of Col. Drayton's battalion from Eliz-abeth Town and several companies from Connecticut also came to New York so that by April 1 there were about 8,000 men in the city under arms.—Penn. Jour., April 3, 1776. See April 4. Gen. Sullivan arrived on April 10 (p. 21). The New York committee of safety issues a notice, stating that "The Provincial Congress of this colony having empowered this Committee to contract for a number of Muskets (to be manufac- tured in this colony)," they are ready to receive proposals from any persons for making "good muskets, or the locks, barrels, or any other parts thereof," and referring to Mr. Gracie, says "to be speedy in their proposals."—N. Y. Packet, April 11, 1776.

1 April. The Provincial Congress passes this resolution: “Whereas barracks are necessary for the troops now arrived and daily arriving in this city, and cannot be obtained without placing them in houses much too small to the comfort of the inhabitants remaining in the city, as well as with great detriment to the service. And whereas it appears to the Committee of Safety that the hospital in this city is a proper situation for troops, and that a number of troops must necessarily be posted there for the defence of the works there and of the city in general, Therefore, Ordered, That the governors of the hospital be requested to give directions to have the hospital put in a proper state for the reception of troops.”—Jour. Prov. Cong., I, 356. See also April 5. Later, “the house was occupied by British and Hessian soldiers, as barracks and occasionally as an Hospital.”—Account N. Y. Hosp. (1820), 4. When the war was over, and affairs had begun to be a little settled, the New York legislature, as before (see March 24, 1776), appropriated money for the support of the hospital (see March 1, 1788).

Col. Mifflin, quartermaster-general of the American army, arrives from Cambridge.—N. Y. Merc., April 8, 1776.

As it is thought imprudent to keep all the powder in any one place in the city, the provincial congress acts upon a suggestion which has been made to the committee of safety, that a second magazine be prepared, and “that the upper part of Mr. Henry Cruger’s sugar house will be a proper place for that purpose.” It is ordered “That whoever has the present care and direction of the said sugar house be directed to place the utensils and materials therein in such proper or convenient places in the said sugar house as may allow the upper part thereof to be used as a magazine.” Col. McDougall is authorized to execute the order. The building shall then “be used as a magazine, for such purposes as the commander-in-chief of the continental troops ... shall at any time direct.”—Jour. Prov. Cong., I, 356.

In order to prevent “the breaking out of fire in the city,” it is ordered that “the chimneys must be kept clean. Particular care must be taken that the sweepers are not obstructed in sweepings and when the chimneys of any barrack are swept, the Officers in such barracks will give the sweeper a certificate of his having performed that service.”—Glover Corresp. (MS.), I. This order was repeatedly renewed with emphasis after the British occupied the city.—See Feb. 24, 1777.

Wm. Leary, the town major, issues the following order: “As the army is considerably reinforced, by the troops lately arrived, the General returns his most sincere thanks to the officers and soldiers of the city militia, of the city constabulary, of Mr. H. Lott’s regiments, for their assiduity and vigilance in assisting in the fortifying the city.”—N. Y. Packet, April 4, 1776.

Maj.-Geo. Israel Putnam, who is on his way from Cambridge to New York with his brigade, lodges for the night at Kingsbridge.—N. Y. Packet, April 41. N. Y. Merc., April 8, 1776.

About this time a vessel arrived from France with a large quantity of gun-power.—Memoirs of Maj. Gen. Heath (1795), 44–45.

All those who “effected burning the buildings, defacing the works, & bringing off the entrenching tools, last night, on the Island, under the auspices of the Asia Man of War” are formerly thanked by the general in command at New York.—Glover Corresp. (MS.), 101.

Erasmus Williams has fitted up his house and garden, on the North River bank, opposite to, and distantly, a fine moderation of Gentlemen, and Ladies of reputation, and character . . . .” His advertisement states that, “as this town is now become the abiding-place of and through which many gentlemen pass, who do most undoubtedly meet with very great inconvenience in procuring suitable lodgings for themselves, this account of the great concourse of persons going to and from this city, and as his lodgings are “very spacious, and in a most healthy situation,” he “hopes for future good encouragement.”—Const. Gen., May 22, 1776.

The committee of safety is informed by Col. Mifflin, the quartermaster-general, that “in the course of 6 or 10 days, at
THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

1776: farthest troops will arrive in this city, which, with those already here, will amount to 12,000 men. He requests "that proper houses may be immediately provided for the reception of those troops;" also "that houses in any part of the city may be immediately prepared for a general hospital, capable of containing 800 sick, and within easy marching distance, and houses in a proper situation, and about the same distance, to contain 400 convalescents; that a suitable house or houses, in the city, will be necessary for General Washington; that proper stables will be speedily wanted for one hundred horses, and sheds or proper places wherein to put wagons; that it will be necessary to fix on a house fit for a guard house, for a guard and artillery, and four other separate houses for main guards; that to prevent inebriety and neglect of duty among the soldiery it will be absolutely necessary to limit the number of innkeepers, dramshops and retailers of strong liquors in this city and its environs, and that the names of the persons licensed to retail, and a description of their respective places of residence in the city be delivered to him, to the end that none others, except one suter to each regiment may be permitted."

Col. Mifflin mentions, further, that he has found in other places "that forestalling and engronging" (of provisions, etc.) has been "very detrimental to the Continental army. Dues, and sometimes necessary to prevent the same by military force;" and he requests the committee's advice as to what is proper to do.

The committee of safety orders "that the general committee of the city of New-York be requested to convene, without delay, and by an appointment of sub-committees for the purpose, or by such other methods as they shall think proper, to fix on so many houses for barracks for the reception of troops, as will contain (together with those now in the city) 12,000 men. That the said general committee be informed that the Provincial Congress, in the times of their resolution, have spared the dwelling-house, barn and stable where John Fowler did lately dwell, on the hill beyond Fresh Water, for hospitals, and that the said general committee be requested to fix on other proper houses for hospitals, so that the whole may be capable of containing 800 men; and also proper houses for 400 convalescents. That they be also requested to fix on stables to contain 100 horses belonging to the army."

It is also ordered that the general committee be requested to appoint sub-committees "to take the names of all innkeepers, and retailers of strong liquors in the city and its environs, with the description of the streets or places of their abode, distinguishing those who are licensed from those who are not, and to send such list of innkeepers and retailers of strong liquors to this Committee with all convenient speed."

The committee of safety is informed "that it is scarcely possible to provide empty houses, or barracks, for the reception of the troops, as there are already 4,000 of the enemy in these crowded in small rooms that it is not only inconvenient but dangerous to the health of the troops; that there is no probability of procuring barracks, or empty houses, for the troops speedily expected."

The committee is further informed "that there are at present very few, if any, students in the college in this city; that it is a strong edifice and finished in such a manner as to be very little injured by the reception of troops;" therefore, it is ordered "that the governors of the college in this city be requested to remove the college library, and every other matter in that building which might receive injury, and secure the same in such manner as they may think proper, and to have the edifice left only in a proper state for the reception of troops, within six days from this day, or as much sooner as will be convenient for the governors of the said college."—Jour. of the Com. of Safety, in Jour. of the Prov. Cols. and Prs., 399.

A list was prepared, dated April 22, giving the names and addresses of persons who had "paid Duty of the Excise for 1776 to Evert Bancker." Accompanying this in the printed Calendar is a "List of Liquor-Sellers in New York City." The originals of these documents are filed, with "Remarks thereon," (XXV: 606 and 68), respectively, in the sec. of state's office, Albany; and have been printed in full in Col. Hist. MSS. (Rev. Papers), 1: 287-91 and Man. Com. Coun. (1858), 564-84.

According to the second of these lists, there were 268 who retaile in this year. Many were undelivered. The following were "Opposite the grant" to Bancker: John Taylor, John Brandon, James Lentgh, Jr., Edward Welch, John Plint, and Patrick McQue.—Ibid., I: 288-89. Mary Apr. Montage (or Montagne) was at the present Nos. 252-254 Broadway. See April 23, 1776. John Taylor was proprietor of the Glass House at "Newfoundland" in 1768 (May 9, g. p.), but had evidently removed, before 1776, to a site near the present City Hall Park. See April 22, at the request of C. Brannocky, and in 1775, opposite the "New Brick Meeting." We have no other record of James Lengh, Jr. "Mr. Welsh," in 1759, was near Whitehall. John Plint is unknown, although his tavern stood, according to another list of tax-payers in this year, "near Liberty Pole." Patrick McQue (probably McGough) is unknown. If Hambden Hall still existed as a tavern, and dispenses liquors, one of the above mentioned dealers was probably its proprietor.

The dealers at the "Head of the Broadway" were William Williams, Erecy Lafay, Agnes Vanderhoof, Andrew Hopper, and William Linstwort. Of these, Andrew Hopper only was a licensed liquor-seller, and his name is the only one familiar to us. In 1772, Hopper had a smith's shop on the corner of Ann St. and Broadway, where the American Museum afterwards stood. Apparently he combined this business with that of a "vintner." In later years he was listed in the directories as a dry-goods merchant. Dues, in his reminiscences of the city in 1783, speaks of the little shop of Andrew Hopper.—Recollections of an Old New Yorker.

Washington writes from Cambridge to Richard Henry Lee: "... I am upon the point of setting out for New York, (by the way of Providence) for the purpose of meeting the Congress at New York, when the troops are at different stages, on their march from hence to New York; nor is it possible for me, till I get there, as the Congress have annexed conditions to my sending the four battalions to Canada, to tell whether they can be spared or not, as I am unacquainted with the number of men, or strength of the works at that place. No time shall be lost in forwarding three battalions if there is a possibility of doing it with safety; as no person can be more sensible of the importance of securing Canada than I am ..."—Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), IV: 13-14. Regarding his journey to New York, where he arrived on April 13 (P. V.), see ibid., IV: 17-19.

The following general orders are issued from head-quarters at New York: "The Soldiers are strictly enjoined to retire to their Barracks and Quarters at Tattoo bay, and remain there until the Reveille is beat."

"Necessity obliges the General to desire the Inhabitants of the City to observe the same Rule, as no Person will be permitted to pass any Encampment, after this Night, without the Countersign."

"The Inhabitants, where Business requires it, may know the Countersign, by applying to any of the Brigade Majors."—N. Y. Prov. Cols., April 8. 1776, 280-89.

Gen. Putnam, in New York, writes to the committee of safety that, while the continental congress imagines the new levies in this province "to be in great forwardness," he finds "that none of the four regiments to be raised in it are properly regimented and completed." He requests the committee to exert itself "to the utmost to accomplish this necessary service, and that the troops already raised be ordered to the city without delay."—Jour. Prov. Cols. and Prs., I: 401.

Tryon writes to Lord George Germain: "The whole North Front of Fort George is dismantled and Merlins erected on the walls of the fort that looks to the North and East Rivers. Also Merlins are constructed on the lower battery. I am told they [the rebels] purpose to intrench and fortify upon the Banks of the Narrows, that is on Staten and Long Island, and everywhere else that they think they can obstruct the approach of the King's Fleets and Armies."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 673.

In another letter to Germain written on the same day, he sends "Gazettes and other Papers" which, he states, give "much information of the unshaded vigor and desperate excesses with which the efforts of the enemy are carried on in Opposition to His Majesty's Government and Military Forces, at present in this City."—Ibid., VIII: 673.

"The Streets in the City of New York are barricaded with Breast Works, and every head land and commanding Spot of ground in its Environs, are fortified, or to be fortified, with Intrenchments, Redoubts, and Batteries."

General Putnam commands in New York about seven thousand men, and it is said will soon be joined by General Washington and five brigades.—Ibid., VIII: 674-75.
"A Captain's Company from General Heath's Brigade, properly officered," is ordered to march "to Horo's Hook to relieve the two Regiments of Minute Men now on that station." Capt. Baldwin is required to "examine the Fort at Horo's Hook, and make a return of what Artillery & ammunition is wanting for that fortress, & to order the two field pieces now there, into the City."—Glover Capt. (MS.), 102.

The treasurer of King's College receives a message from the committee of safety asking the governors of the college to prepare the building for the reception of troops. The students were accordingly scattered, the books, apparatus, etc. deposited in the city hall, and the college building converted into a military hospital. Many books, and almost all the apparatus, were thus lost; six or seven hundred volumes were recovered thirty years afterward, having been deposited in a room in St. Paul's chapel, where they had remained unknown to anyone except the sexton of the church. This action against the college was regarded as a blow at the crown, the college being considered as a "hotbed of Toryism."—Moore, Hist. Sketch of Col. College, 61-63. Until May 15, 1784, the college was closed to students.—Fine, King's College, 16.

Gen. Sullivan's brigade arrives from Boston.—N. Y. Merc., April 8, 1776.

A boat from the "Viper" goes ashore on Staten Island to get water. A party of riflemen attack her and take all hands prisoners. The riflemen return from the man-of-war.—Penn. Ev'n Post, April 9, 1776. Another account of this event explains that the king's ship "Savage" and the pilot-boat "James," on this Sunday morning, came in a thick fog to take in water at the watering-place on Staten Island. They each sent a boat on shore. Capt. Stevenson, hearing of this, prepared to attack them. The ship, being informed of the approach of the patriots, fired a signal gun for the boats to retreat, and this they attempted to do, "under a brisk and hot fire from the Savage, but being fired on by our men, and closely pursued, they left one of their cutters behind with thirteen men . . . "—Ibid., April 13, 1776. Still another account of the skirmish is found in the N. Y. Packet, April 11. See also Major Fish's letter of April 9, in Hist. Mag., 2d ser., V: 263.

The "Duchess of Gordon" conveys Gov. Tryon down the River to the "Phoenix," which lies below the Narrows. On the way, he sees, "by the help of a Spy glass,—the enemy firing upon the Seamen that were landed for water at the watering-place under cover of the Savage Sloop of War." Tryon gave an account of this in his letter to Germain on April 15. "All Communication between the Ships and the Shore," he states, "is now cut off. Even the Element of Water is denied us, which cannot probably henceforth be procured but under the fire of his Majesty's Ships."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 675-76, 677.

Major-Gen. Israel Putnam, commander-in-chief of the forces at New York, notified the inhabitants that he has ordered "that all communication between the Ministerial fleet and shore, should be immediately stopped." He has given orders that "the ships should no longer be furnished with provisions." Persons who go on board after this date, or are found near any of the ships, "will be considered as enemies, and treated accordingly." The order announces that: "All boats are to sail from Beechman's Ship; Capt. James Ainer is appointed Inspector, and will give permits for oystermen: It is expected and ordered, that none attempt going without a pass."—N. Y. Packet, April 11, 1776. The notice is published as a broadside proclamation.—See one of these in the N. Y. Pub. Library. Cf. Smith's diary under this date, where the statement is made that Putnam's order made impossible a meeting of the governor's council that had been called for the 11th. "The Ships quitted the Harbour," he adds, "& fell down below the Narrows" (see June 6).—Wm. Smith's Diary (MS.), V: March 29.

"Monday night [April 8] 1000 of the Continental troops stationed here, went over and took possession of the Governor's Island, and began to fortify it; the same night a regiment went over to Red Hook, and fortified that place likewise."—N. Y. Packet, April 11, 1776; Penn. Ev'n Post (Phila.), Apr. 11, 1776.

On or about this day (see April 17), the following secret intelligence was sent from New York, presumably to the British War Office, describing the defences erected by the American patriots in and around the city. The document is without date, and bears the endorsement, "State of the Fortifications at New York &c. No 17.

"The above where the Letter E stands are Batteries with Guns mounted as stands in the Columns. The Letter S is Breast Works for small Arms only. That Breast work on the Hill by the Jews Burying Ground will contain near 500 Men, it is made in an Angular form, with a large Trench all round; The Entrance into it on the back part facing Mt John's House on the Hill going to Conley's Hook. The Breast work around the New Hospital is in Squares with a Trench all round, 10 feet wide at the Top, and at Bottom one foot and half, this Breast Work will contain about 500 Men, and as they intend to Line the Hospital with Men to Fire over the Breast Works I know not how many Men it will contain.

"There is one thing I shall remark that their Embrasures are so narrow and confined, that should any ship pass, there is no one in New York, not having a canoe to damage any ship. That Battery on Long Island is so narrow and confined that it will not contain above 500 Men.

"I need not give the Names of the Streets in the Town that is Blockaded, as every Street facing both North and East Rivers has wooden Trunks made across to feet thick filled with Earth, in Order to intercept any Troops that may attempt landing. I cannot see any Cover for the Rear, only Mt Byrard's Hill, it will contain near 500 Men, One Gun points across to Greenwich and one over MT Delancy's House, Two directly up the Road to Kings Bridge, and four Guns over the Town, but I never saw any Works worse Plan'd on a Spot of Advantangeous Ground. The Numbers placed in the Total Column has not yet their Guns placed, but are to mount the Number as above Marked. In the Total Column, the half moon Battery on Black Sams Hill will contain about 400 Men; This Battery is Open on the Side next to the New Hospital as the Hospital Covers it.

"The Cock Pitt Battery behind Mt Harrius's Brew House will contain about 250 Men. The Battery behind the Governors House, it may contain about 200 Men or more. The Battery at the Ship Yards may contain 500 Men; they have begun a Redoubt about a quarter of a Mile behind the Battery on Long Island, which appears to be pretty large, but as they have not done any work at it for this two Days, I imagine they are going to alter the Plan of it. As to Fort George, they have pulled down all the Square, fronting Broadway and the Embrasures on the Ramparts not finished I shall leave that till another opportunity."—From a manuscript, in Library of Congress (box 43, pp. 334-40), from Public Record

Gen. Putnam issues an order from head-quarters, stating that, "As the city records are of the greatest consequence, and it being necessary that particular attention should be paid for their preservation the adjutant-general, commanded by Colo. Lasher, will undertake this guard."—Jour. Prov. Cong. I: 402. Another order of the same date reads: "The party this day sent on Governor’s Island must send for provisions &c, as they will not be relieved till tomorrow morning. The Forty Boats plying between New York, Pawls’ Hook & Long Island, are to pass un molested from their usual places."—Glover Corresp. (MS.), 103.

A printed handbill, signed by Joseph Winter, secretary of the general committee, is distributed from the committee chamber; it contains a transcript from its minutes citing the order of "the late Provincial Congress of the colony of New-York," on March 12, for a new election of deputies to represent the province in the provincial congress, and appointing April 16 for the voters to meet at the city hall, to elect by ballot 21 such deputies to serve 12 months from the second Tuesday in May.—From original handbill in N.Y. Pub. Library.

Maj. Nicholas Fish writes to Richard Varick: "... picture to yourself the once flourishing City evacuated by most of its Members, (especially the fair). Business of every kind stagnated—all its Streets that lead from the North & East Rivers blockaded, and nothing but military operations our present Employment. The Redoubt around the hospital, which was completed on April 4, is considered "the best work of the kind in the City." The hospital "it made an Arsenal for Provisions." On "Bayard’s Mount, now called Montgomery Mount, as a Monument to that great Hero,... there will be a Fortification superior in Strength to any my Imagination could ever have conceived. Several hundred Men have been daily employed there for upwards of four Weeks. The Parapet of the Old Battery is raised to a proper Height, with a sufficient number of Ammunition—as also the Parapet of the Fort Wall. There are two Fortifications on Long Island, opposite this City to command the Shipping, one on Govt Island, one at red Hook, and the City itself and Suburbs filled with them.

... We have Genl Putnam, Sullivan, Heath, Thompson, & L Sterling among us, with I believe about 14 Thousand Troops; fresh arrivals from Cambridge Daily. And Washington hourly expected with many more... Our Cont now Guards the Records of the Province which are removed to M’N. Bayard’s Farm.

Peter Elting writes to Capt. Richard Varick: "This day came to town five or six Betalions of Cont troops from Boston, I Reconn the Army in & about the town must now Comist of near twenty thousand men, they are fortifying on every side, night before last they began at Noten [Governor] Island, I hear they are Bussy at Staten Island, & the Asia is moved down as low as Robens Reef, the weare have allowed No Boats to pass of late, tho I think they Doutte feel Quite so bad as heretofore, and would be glad of moving out of the way of our two & thirty pounders...

Alexander Scammell writes to his brother, Dr. Scammell: "After a very fatiguing and merry march, we arrived at New York, the tenth of April. A very elegant City. But deserty by the Tories... Our men are billet in very elegant Houses... I expect to set out for Canada, with Gen. Sullivan and six Regents. Under his Command... we have got our works in great Forwardness here and a fine train of Artillery. New York will soon be rendered almost immoveable."—From autograph letter, sold in the Jolley sale (Lot V) at The Anderson Galleries, New York, April 18 and 29, 1915.

Col. Rudolph Ritner writes to Capt. Richard Varick: "... General Washington is expected here to Morrow. ... The Fortifications are nearly completed & I doubt not the Enemy if they here will meet with a warm Reception."—Hist. Mag., 24 ser., X: part 2, 111.
The clergy could not comply with, and told him further, that it was in his power to shut up our churches, but by no means in his power to make "the clergy depart from their duty." This declaration drew from him an awkward apology for his conduct, which I believe was not authorized by Washington . . ."—Doc. Hist. N. T. (4to ed.), III: 641.

The "Asia" goes to Sandy Hook—N. Y. Merc., April 15, 1776.

Adj.-Gen. Horatio Gates issues the following order from headquarters at New York: "Whereas the Asia has quitted its station, and left the harbour, the navigation between this city and New-Jersey, by the Kills, is become quite safe; the troops upon Staten-Island and Bergen Neck, are now coming to New-York, or returning to Jersey, to pass and repass without molestation."—N. Y. Merc., April 15, 1776. See also De Voe, Market Book, 119.

The following order is issued from the New York headquarters: "All persons infected with the Small-pox are to be immediately removed to a secure place to be provided for by the Quarter Master General, who will consult the magistrates of this city thereon. A proper guard, composed of men who have had the disorder to be fixed at this Hospital, to prevent any intercourse but such as the manager shall license."—Glover Corresp. (MS.), 105-6.

"We hear Maj.-Gen. Washington of Major's Ships Phoenix, Savage and Nautilus now on this Station, will fall down to Sandy Hook this Day or To-morrow."—N. Y. Merc., April 8, 1776.

Washington writes to the president of congress that he arrived in New York "on Saturday last" (April 13, p.r,c). All the British ships of war have left the harbour, "some of which including the "Asia" are now below the Narrows, and the rest gone to sea." He finds "many works of defence begun, and some finished," and he reports on the disposition of the troops—Writings of Gen. Washington (Ford ed.), IV: 171-173; Memoirs of Gen. Jeffrey, 45.

"The Poll" is opened at the city on the 17th, to receive nomination of Twenty-one Deputies, to represent this City and Country in the next Provincial Congress. It was continued by adjournment till April 18, when the following persons were elected for that purpose: Isaac Stuartouen, Henry Reesmond, John Eathey, James McKeen, Philip Livingston, John M. Scott, John Aholp, Francis Lewis, Logan Powell, Thomas Read, James Duke, Anthony Rutgers, Peter P. van Zadu, John Broome.

"N. Y. Merc., April 222: N. Y. Packet, April 25, 1776.

The following order is issued from headquarters at New-York: "The General being informed that many of the houses taken up for barracks are much abused by the soldiers, which is a grievance which might be prevented by the officers paying a proper attention to their duty, and more carefully observing the conduct and behaviour of their men, the Barrackmaster is therefore ordered to place a proper proportion of officers in the same houses with the soldiers, who are to be answerable for any mischief done, to prevent any soldiers going out upon the floors, or any water or filth thrown out of the windows, as all damages wantonly committed must be paid for out of the pay of the men quartered in the house where such damage is done. The offenders must also expect to suffer a severe corporal punishment for any breach of these orders. The above" demands moreover express orders to the above, two Brigs and three Sloops, are come down the Sound, with the remaining part of Washington's Army about 300 Men. It is a great pity that some method cannot be taken to stop the communication down the Sound to the Town; as it would certainly prevent the Rebels from receiving any supplies but by Land. The Feet... to the City, from the Top of the Brothers... is about 5 Rods distance and about... Feet perpendicular above the Top of the Well. At the Top of the Hill was an artificial Pond, whose... All this... I could easily understand; but the grand Question was how was the Machiensi in the Well first actuated and continued its-motion? This I was surprised to find was wholly done by the Power of Boil-

"It was a long time before I could discover even by seeing the Works how this could be effected, & the Man who showed the Works could give me no satisfaction as to this till at length I found that by Means of a large Copper (which is kept boiling when it is requisite for the Works to be set in Motion) the Steam or Vapour of the Water is conveyed from thence into a strong Copper Tube of about 18 Inches Diameter & about 10 Feet Long, which stands perpendicular. The lower part or end of this Tube is tight; but the Upper End bath in it a moveable Stopper which may move upwards or downwards with as much ease as possible, and at the same time to keep any of the Air from passing from entering into the Tube & to keep it as tight as possible another part of the Works constantly supply the Top of the Tube above the Stopper with a small stream of Water. The Steam of the Hot Water (as I take it) entering into the Tube rarifies the Body of the Air contained therein to a great degree, & the Stopper is kept in constant Motion by the Means of Steam or Vapour, & to this Stopper is fastened a stout Wooden lever by a bar of Iron. The Lever is Fastened in the Middle upon an Axia; and as the Stopper of the Tube moves upwards and downwards, it moves the Lever, which worketh the Engine in the Well, which forsooth (as I before described) the Water into the Pond at the Top of the Hill. This Engine has been tried & generally throws... Gallons in a Minute into the Pond. Thus have I given as particular discourse of this curious Engine as I possibly could, having viewed it but about 15 Minutes. I hope soon to see it at Work, when I can give a more particular discourse of several small parts of it for which I could see no use... [Under date of June 21, Dr. Bangs mentions such an engine at the cedar swamp of a Mr. Schuyler in New Jersey, which cost £3,000, and would "cast out of the earth 80 hogsheads of water per minute." These works, he said, "were greatly superior in magnitude to those... In the present age, the reign of the Middle Ages, we can conceive nothing comparable to..."

"[May 4] Took a survey of the City Goal, which the Gealer showed us. The Prisoners here are as well treated as in any Prison I ever visited. The Goal itself is a very magnificent Building (upon the North side of the Common), having more the appearance of an elegant Mansion House than of a Common Gaol; the inside is regularly built, and is as convenient, both for the Prisoners & Jailors, as I can possibly imagine any could have been."—Jour. of Lieut. Isaa Bangs (Apr. 1 to July 29, 1776), ed. by Edward Bangs (Cambridge Univ. Press, 1890).

Tyron writes to Lord Germain... "The general Assembly of this Province is now dissolved. The Council, by whose advice it was prorogued to the 27th Instant not having been permitted to wait on me agreeable to my Summons in Order to advise concerning the further prorogation of it. A strong evidence of the little attention that is now paid even towards preserving the Torn of a legal and constitutional Representation of the people..."

The governor states that he has ordered a detail of men... "to act as night guard at the Light House on Sandy Hook, to prevent the Seamen from insults when watering at the well near the Light House... Y. Col. Disc., VIII: 677.

"...a considerable number of troops have arrived here from New-England. As great numbers of the inhabitants have... the number of his force about 4000 men, & several hundred soldiers. The behaviour of the New-England Soldiers is decent, and their civility to the inhabitants very commendable: They Apr. attend prayers, with the Chaplain, evening and morning regularly, in which their officers set the example. On Lord's day they attend public worship twice, and their deportment in the house of God, is thus as becomes the place."--N. Y. Packet, April 18, 1776.

"Though the season is so far advanced, yet the number of troops that have lately arrived, and the uncommon severity of the weather, have occasioned such a demand for fuel, that oak wood sells for 30s. per cord, and nut for 40s."--N. Y. Packet, April 18, 1776.

Gov. Tryon, sends a letter from the "Duchess of Gordon," which is at Sandy Hook, to Mayor Mathews, stating that, it has been found "expedient for his Majesties service, to burn down the Pilot-house at the Hook," but that care has been taken of Adam Dobbs, the keeper, and his property. He states that if the mayor "will send down a stool to the Hook, it will be suffered to bring up to New-York, Mr. Dobbs, his servants and effects."--Penn. Jour. (Phila.), May 1, 1776.

The common council orders that John Moore be paid £1185.16 "in full for the balance of his Account for Work done at the Bride-

The common council authorizes the payment of £131319. to Christopher Colles, "on Account of the Water Works."--M. C. C., VIII. 156. Washington proposes "to establish out of the Continental Forces, good lookouts on the Heights and Head Lands at the Entrance of the Harbor, who, upon the appearance of a Fleet shall make such signals as being answered from place to place shall convey the earliest intelligence to Head Quarters of the strength and approach of the Enemy."--These signals for greater Certainty to be followed by Expresses," etc.--Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), IV: 31.

Col. Rufus Putnam, Washington's chief engineer in 1776, states in his memoirs: "On my arrival at New York, I was charged as second in command, to laying out and overseeing the works which were erected during the campaign at New York, Long Island and their dependencies with Fort Washington, Fort Lee, King's Bridge, etc., most of which, but not all, appear in a plan of New York island etc., and obstructions in the river, which accompanies Map and plan of Hudson River, his "whole time was taken up from daylight . . . until night . . . besides going in the night by water from New York to Fort Washington."--Campaign of 1776, part 2, 156. 25 The following order is also issued: "Complaints having been made to the General, of injuries done to the farmers, in their crops and fields, by the soldiers passing over and trampling upon the young growth, in a wanton and disorderly manner, he expressly orders the officers commanding, either upon duty or in quarters, in the country, to take especial care to put a stop to such practices, and to order the men that they come to protect, not to injure the property of any man."--4 Am. Archives, V: 1071.

"The Quarter Master General, assisted by Colp. Putnam, Chief Engineers. These Officers, to have under command two men from each Regiment of the 1st, 2d, 4th, 5th & 6th Brigades are at sunrise to morrow morning to be at the Redoubt on Byard's Hill, to mark out encampments for the four Brigades."--Glover Corresp. (MS.), 110.

The following letter, from Abraham van Dyck, commander of the "Grenadier Company," is sent to Lord Stirling, "after completing the Grenadier Battery." The Circular Battering, under my command, have for some time past been employed about, is now completed, and I am requested to acquaint your Lordship therewith . . ." Stirling replied to this with complimentary sentiments on the 29th, referring to it as "to the North-West of this City."--N. Y. Merc., May 6, 1776; Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), IV: 55; Glover Corresp. (MS.), 112-13. See April 29.

The general in command at New York (Washington) condemns the "riotous behaviour of some of the soldiers of the Continental army, yesterday & the evening before," and issues a warning that hereafter the "authors" of similar actions "will be brought to the severest punishment."--Glover Corresp. (MS.), 111.

Jane Wielensburg, writing to Capt. Richard Varick, states: "our City is in A Short time Will be Very Well Fortified the Streets are so Blocked up there is hardly any Passing They are Erecting A Fort on the Governors Island, they have A Very fine one they Say on Long Island & several in town I hope they May Be of Service to us if of Occasion Requires."--Hist. manon is an "An Account of the Fortifications," M. C. C., VIII. 176. The plan of the Fortifications on Long Island for 13 Guns, Plan of the Breast wall inclosing the Hospital, & plan of work which lies about 800 feet from the East River not far from Brookland Ferry."--Stevens, Cat. Index of MSS., 1761-1781, in Library of Congress, citing the original in the Public Record Office, CXXXVII: 685.

Dr. Isaac Bangs records in his diary: . . . I tried the Church of England in the afternoon. But the satisfaction I received from the substance of an excellent sermon was greatly abated by the pelagic behaviour of the priest, the irreverent conduct of the people and the foolish parade of ceremonies. I am determined next Sunday . . . to attend worship with the Dutch priest, whom I heard last week, choosing rather to worship where I understand nothing, than to hear and see such folly."--Hist. Mag., 2d ser., IV: 306.

The troops in New York are formed anew into four brigades, and assigned to their respective camps. "Heath's first brigade was posted on the Hudson, just without the city above the Canal street marsh and about Richmond Hill; Spencer's second, on the East River, around the Rutgers' farm and Jones' Hill; and Stirling's fourth, on the Hill near Bayard's Hill and the Bowery Hill; while Greece's third brigade was assigned to the ground marked out upon Long Island."--Campaign of 1776 around New York and Brooklyn, by Henry P. Johnston (1878), 65-64.

Washington writes to John Augustine Washington: "We have already gone great lengths [see April 27] in fortifying this city, and it would now be well if we put it in a very respectable posture of defence. The works we have already constructed, and which they found we were about to erect, have put the King's ships to flight; for, instead of lying within pistol-shot of the wharves, and their sentries covering with our, (which they received every necessary that the country afforded,) they have now gone down to the Hook, near thirty miles from this place, the last harbor they can get to . . ."--Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), IV: 56; Glover Corresp. (MS.), 112-13.

In a published order, Washington states that "an Intercourse and Correspondence with the Ships of War, and other Vessels belonging to, and in the Service of the King of Great-Britain [see Apr. 17], is highly detrimental to the Rights and Liberties of the United Colonies," and that such intercourse was forbidden by order of the committee of safety on April 18; but, nevertheless, "there is nothing to believe but what industrious Britishmen, under their own present private Emolument to their Country's Weal, have continued to carry on the same, particularly some who under Pretence of coming to the Market of this City by Water, have put themselves, their Vessels and Effects in the Way of the Ships of War, for the Purposes of giving Intelligence and furnishing them their own present private Emolument to their Country's Weal," have continued to carry on the same, particularly some who under Pretence of coming to the Market of this City by Water, have put themselves, their Vessels and Effects in the Way of the Ships of War, for the Purposes of giving Intelligence and furnishing them their own present private Emolument to their Country's Weal, have continued to carry on the same, particularly some who under Pretence of coming to the Market of this City by Water, have put themselves, their Vessels and Effects in the Way of the Ships of War, for the Purposes of giving Intelligence and furnishing them their own presents and Necessaries of any kind, that he or they so offending will be deemed and con-

Mrs. Eve Provoost, of New York, writes an appealing letter to the committee of safety in behalf of her son, David Provoost, "a passenger on board the Brig' Jamaica lately taken by the Men of war at the Hook," and who "is detained a Prisoner on Board the Asia Man of War." She asks the committee to use its influence with Gen. Washington "to Permit some Person to go on Board of the Asia in order to treat about my dear son's Release, as it is peculiar hard upon him who had nothing to do with the Vessel or Cargo to be detained a prisoner almost at my own Door." William Smith writes from New York to Gen. Howe in Boston:

"As I have not a doubt of my last letters to administration concerning them that this city and province is the only spot in America for carrying on the war without effect against the rebels. Therefore the consequences the expected spring as well as those now under your command, will be ordered either: It may be necessary and advisable to send the army thro' the Sound, between Connecticut and Long-Island ... The Long Island has a plain on it, at least 20 miles long, which has a fertile country about it, is 20 miles from the city of New-York; Connecticut opposite to it; New-Jersey about 30 miles distant; Philadelphia 110; Maryland 150; Rhode-Island 150: so that in this fertile island the army can subsist without any succour from Britain or Ireland and in 5 or 6 days invade and have the effect of the above colonies at pleasure. Add to these great advantages that the possession of the Narrows, and Nutton-Island would be the destruction of this city, but of this I think there would be no need, for all the principal inhabitants are at heart with the crown particularly all my brethren the members of the assembly but as the mob now commands prudence forbids them to declare without a military force. You have many with you who are acquainted with the navigation of the Sound. The spot which I advise you to land at is Cowboy."—Ind. Chron. (Boston), Sept. 26, 1776. A convention in Williamsburg, Va., with 112 delegates present, resolves unanimously: "That the Delegates appointed to represent this colony in General Congress he instructed to propose to that respectable body to declare the United Colonies free and independent states, absolved from all allegiance to, or dependence upon, the crown or parliament of Great Britain; and that they give the assent of this colony to such declaration, and to whatever measures may be thought proper and necessary by the Congress for forming foreign alliances, and a confederation of the colonies, at such time, and in the manner, as to them shall seem best;"—that a committee be appointed to procure a Declaration of Rights, and such a plan of government as will be most likely to maintain peace and order in this colony, and secure substantial and equal liberty to the people."—From Jefferson's printed copy of the Proceedings of the Convention of Delegates (1776), p. 32 (preserved in the N. Y. Pub. Library). Gross. Gen. (New London), June 6, 1776.

Richard Henry Lee, one of the delegates in congress from Virginia, presented such a resolution on June 7 (q. v.). A correspondent from Williamsburg to the N. Y. Journal, of June 6, declared that this resolution was "the result of most mature deliberation ... It was followed in the afternoon by such military expressions of gladness and exultation, as the condition of our troops here would admit, and the evening was closed with illuminations, &c. The procuring of foreign assistance was the immediate object of this Resolution, as the alternative of separation or submission was the assigned ground of it. But a political connection on any terms, with a people who have exerted against us every species of barbarity and insult, would have had few advocates."—N. Y. Jour., June 6, 1776. See May 30.

Congress, which assembled in Philadelphia on the 13th, passes a resolution recommending "to the respective Assemblies and Conventions of the United Colonies, to unanimously and in such manner as they shall think proper, to declare the Rights of British Subjects and of the People of this Province in particular, and America in general."

The preamble of this resolution anticipates the principles expressed later in the Declaration of Independence—4 Am. Arch., 1: 34.

A DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE

IN CONGRESS, July 4, 1776.

The Representatives of the United States in General Congress assembled,

Resolved, That the Declaration of Independence, which was submitted to the Congress on the 8th of July, 1776, contains a true and just representation of the circumstances under which the United States have erected themselves into an independent State, and is therefore a just and necessary instrument of their independence.

JOHN HANCOCK, President.

1776: VI. 466; Winso, Nar. Crit. Hist. of Am., VI: 272. Referring to May this resolution in his diary of May 22, Smith says: "It is easy to see a Disposition in the Congress to encourage the rising Bias towards the British, which has been the general Independence."—Smith's Diary (MS, V).

16 In accordance with the order of the continental congress, the commander at New York declares that "the Battalion of the Militia of this city are dismissed."—Glover Corresp. (MS), 122.

17 This day (Friday) having been "appointed by the congress as a day of public fasting, prayer and humiliation," a sermon is preached [probably at Trinity] by Rev. Dr. Inglis on the subject of "peace and repentance." He declares, however, "having any thing to do with politics." The fleet of the country of England were in a critical position. They were threatened by the "rebels," because they prayed for the king and royal family. One Sunday, some time between this date and July 4, when Dr. Inglis was officiating, "a company of about one hundred armed rebels marched into the church, with drums beating and fifes playing, their guns loaded and bayonets fixed, as if going to battle. The congregation was thrown into the utmost terror, and several women fainting, expecting a massacre was intended. . . . The rebels stood thus in the aisle for near fifteen minutes, till being asked into pews by the sexton, they complied."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed., III: 641.

18 Capt. Paul Jones arrives in New York from his first naval cruise. On the following day he wrote a letter to Joseph Hewes of the continental congress, sitting in Philadelphia. Hewes was a member of the congressional committee on naval affairs. He was very friendly to Jones, who secured through him his first appointment, as first lieutenant of the "Alfred," flag ship of the first American squadron. The fleet had just returned from its foray against the British in the West Indies, and Jones' letter to Hewes is a report of some of the events of the cruise. He writes from on board the sloop "Provindence," in New York harbour, having been assigned to command its captain's vessel, she had been dismasted. He says: "I now enclose you the Minutes of two Court Martials [Whipple and Hazard] held on board the Alfred. . . . In consequence of the last trial I was ordered to take command of this vessel the 10th curt. I arrived here yesterday afternoon in 36 hours from Rhode Island with a return of upwards of 100 men besides Officers which Gen. Washington sent to the Fleet in N. London." He refers to the sickness of the men in the fleet, and expresses the opinion that "the unfortunate engagement of the Gloucester [British man-of-war] seems to be a general reflection on the officers of the Fleet, but a little reflection will set the matter in a true light."—Lett and Letters by John Paul Jones, by Mrs. Reginald de Koven (N. Y., 1913), 102-7.

19 The following signals are to give an alarm to all the troops, as well regular as Militia, & the inhabitants of the City—that is—\[in the day time, two cannon fired from the rampart of Fort George, and a flag set on the top of the Great Quadrant. In the night time, two cannon fired as above, from Fort George, & two Lanterns hoisted on the top of Head Quarters, as aforesaid.—Glover Corresp. (MS), 122.

21 Washington, summoned by congress to Philadelphia, leaves military instructions with Gen. Putnam to guide his conduct in the event of congress deciding to seize "the principal Tories and disaffected persons on Long Island, in this City [New York], and the country round about."—Am. Arch., VI: 533-34. See also Van Tyne, The Loyalists (1905), 213.

22 He also leaves instructions with Gen. Putnam regarding the completion of the works at Long Island, Governor's Island, New York, Paulus Hook, and the Narrows; also the placing of alarm signals along the Long Island shore, the repair of fortifications in the Highlands, and the proper placing and securing of powder magazines.—Ibid., VI: 574.

23 Towards the Battery George, and on the Batteries are to keep a sharp lookout towards the narrows, Staten Island, Red Hook, &c—to observe if any signals are given from thence, and acquaint the Officer of the Guard immediately therewith.—Glover Corresp. (MS), 125.

This is the last date, until after the Revolution, of the recorded minutes of the common council.—M. C. C., VIII: 138.

26 Christopher Colles is granted £6 "for his Attendance in taking Care of the Water Works for one month due to him the 16th day of May inst.," and one Hornblower is granted £32 "in Consideration of the Trouble he was at in inspecting & examining the Water Works in this City and making a Report of the State of the Same."—M. C. C., VIII: 139, 140. This is the last entry in the Minutes concerning the water works prior to the Revolution. At the outbreak of the war the enterprise had to be abandoned.—Man. Gem. Coun. (1865), 759. The condition of the work at about this time is perhaps best explained by Lieut. Bang.—See April 17.

27 The common council authorizes the payment to Robert Andrews of £109.17s. 4d., "in full for the Balance of his Account against this Corporation." The account originally amounted to £481:3:9, and was for "the whole weight of Iron Delivered . . . and weighed on the workhouse Schales and Used at the New bridge-well."—Original voucher in box 1, comptroller's office; M. C. C., VIII: 138.

28 Abraham van Geller is paid £379:16, the balance due to him according to his "Settlement 1776 for the City Lamps."—Original voucher in box 4, comptroller's office; M. C. C., VIII: 138.

29 An account of Gerard Bancker, city surveyor, against the corporation for £5510 is ordered paid.—M. C. C., VIII: 159. Bancker's itemized bill of 57 items (see June 14, 1774), covering a period from Aug. 28, 1772, to May 11, 1775, it preserved in the comptroller's office, in box 1, 1750-1815. It has pianographical value because so many landmarks are mentioned and because so many actual or proposed city improvements are shown. Among items other than those to which reference has already been made (see June 14, 1774) are:—

(Aug. 28, 1773) "To Surveying Col. Moore's Lots & the White Hall, & making a plan of the Lots 5 in Number."—(Sept. 16, 1772) "To levelling White Hall Ship when to be filled in."—(Oct. 22, 1772) "To levelling the Broad Way from the Lutheran Church to Verletonberg."—(Oct. 24, 1772) "To a Survey and plan of the Negro burying Ground."—(March 23, 1775) "To a large Map of the Corporation Lots configured to the New Goal, compiled by order of Mt V. 14 "To numbering about 15,000 tickets in Bridgwell lottery 3 times over."—[Nov. 1, 1774] "To levelling from beyond the Reservoir down to S't Paul's Church in Co. with Andrew Marschak."—[Nov. 29, 1774] "To a Survey & Plan of the Shore at Corlars Hole from Cheemsman, Easterly as far as the Corporation's Right to the Soil under Water extends."—[May 13, 1775] To fix in Bridgwell in order for the Congress to fix the heights for the lower floor of the Building."—Washington arrives in Philadelphia, and attends the sessions of Congress.—Jour. Cont. Cong., IV: 389.

26 "The General" (Washington?) thanks the provincial congress and general committee "for their care in endeavouring to prevent the spreading of the small-pox (by inoculation or any other way) in this City, or in the Continental Army," and he orders that strict inspection of the troops be made. "Any officer in the Continental Army who shall suffer himself to be inoculated, will be cashiered and turned out of the Army, and have his name published in the New-England throughout the continent as an enemy and traitor to his country."—4 Am. Arch., VI: 653-36.

The Committee of Mechanics in Union, of the city and county of New York, present an address, dated "Mechanick-Hall," May 29, to the representatives of this province in the provincial congress, stating that if these representatives "think proper to instruct our most honourable Delegates in Continental Congress, to use their utmost endeavours in that august assembly to cause these United Colonies to become independent of Great-Britain," it would give the mechanics "the highest satisfaction," and they "hereby sincerely promise to endeavour to support the same with our lives and fortunes." The provincial congress replied, on June 4, that "the Continental Congress alone, have that enlarged view of our political circumstances, which will enable them to decide upon those measures which are necessary for the general welfare." They therefore cannot instruct the delegates to the continental congress, as desired in the address.—N.Y. Merc., June 10, 1776. A second address was presented by the mechanics on June 14 (p. 90).

Charles Loosley and Thomas Eims, of New York, paper makers, petition the provincial congress for exemption from military service, owing to the need of keeping their business in operation for the public good. They claim they have carried the art of paper-making to higher degrees of perfection than any other place in America; they "have been the means of increasing the number of Paper Mills, improving their construction, and moderating the price of paper." Their work, they say, is "being carried on at a great expense, no less than 201 per day for rent and a number of hands who require constant oversight and direction ..." They have been supplying paper for "provincial money," and for "Weekly publications."—Cal. Hist. MSS. (Rev. Papers), I: 310.

A Virginian writes to a London correspondent: "The original Plan of Lee, Henry, and others of the Faction, has at length taken Place: The Convention of this Colony have declared themselves 'independents of Britain' [see May 15], and have passed some Resolutions for confounding the Estates of the Deserters of their Country's Liberties," (as they call those Gentlemen whom they obliged to leave the Colony).—St. James Chron. (London), Aug. 3-6, 1776.

The continental congress authorizes Washington "to direct the building as many fire rafts, row galleys, armed boats, and floating batteries as may be necessary, and suitable for the immediate defence of the port of New York, and the Hudson's river."—Jour. of the Cont. Cong. (Ford ed., 1906), IV: 406-7.

The vestry of the city and county of New York present a petition to Congress for a line of forty thousand pounds for the support of the poor. They now are about 400 poor in the almshouse and adjoining buildings. The most opulent of the inhabitants of the City "have retired to the Country." The poor include all classes of dependents.—Cal. Hist. MSS. (Rev. Papers), I: 311; and see ibid., I: 465; Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 467. In response to this appeal the provincial congress passed a resolution, on June 8, "That the sum of $5000 be ... lent to the Justices and Vestrymen of the City and County of Great Britain for this purpose, "to be repaid at such time and in such manner as this or some future Congress or Legislature of this Colony shall direct."—4 Am. Arch., VI: 1391.

"General Washington has wrote to General Putnam in the most pressing terms, to go on land, and all the Colonels to have colours immediately completed for their respective Regiments."—Glover Correspond. (MS.), 111.

The provincial congress adopts the following resolutions: "Whereas the present government of this Colony by Congress and Committees, was instituted while the form of government under the Crown of Great Britain existed in full force, and was established for the sole purpose of opposing the usurpation of the British Parliament, and was intended to expire on a reconciliation with Great Britain, which it was then apprehended would soon take place, but is now considered as remote and uncertain, "And whereas the great importance of extending the said mode of government by Congress and Committees, as of necessity in many instances legislative, judicial and executive powers have been vested therein, especially since the dissolution of the former government by the abdication of the late Governor and the establishment of this Colony from the protection of the King of Great Britain ..." And whereas doubts have arisen whether this Congress are invested with sufficient power and authority to deliberate and determine on so important a subject as the necessity of erecting and constituting a new form of government and intercol. police, to the exclusion of all foreign jurisdiction, dominion and control whatever [see June 7] ... Therefore "Resolved, That it be recommended to the electors in the several counties in this Colony by election in the manner and form prescribed for the election of the present Congress, either to authorize their present Deputies, or others in the stead ... to take into consideration the necessity and propriety of instituting such new government as ... is described and recommended. And if the majority of the counties by their Deputies in Provincial Congress, shall be of opinion that such new government ought to be instituted and established, then to institute and establish such a government as they shall deem best calculated to secure the rights, liberties and happiness of the good people of this Colony, and to continue in force until a future peace with Great Britain shall render the same unnecessary. And, "Resolved, That the said elections in the several counties ought to be held on such day and at such place or places, as by the committee of each county respectively shall be determined ..."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 468-69. William Smith refers to this resolution in his diary, under June 8 (q.v.).

The following notices, dated May 15, is published: The House of Leonard Lispenser, Esq. in Wall-street, is now occupied for the Purposes of a College. The Students of King's College in the City of New-York, are desired to attend on Friday the 31st Instant, at which Time the Senior Class will be examined by a Committee of Governors, and such will be graduated as shall be found properly qualified. The Examination of Candidates for Admission will be held in the same Place the First week in the Month of June."—N.T. Merc., May 20, 1776. See June 2, 1777.

Nineteen twenifts at least of the inhabitants with their families & effects had left that city [New York] between the latter part of the year 1775 & the month of June 1776, and these persons may be distinguished under the following heads.

First. Rebels or persons in opposition to his Majesty's government & in civil or military capacities.

Second. Those who feared the consequences of remaining in a besieged town.

Third. Those who were loyalists & availed themselves of that opportunity to avoid military duty (which without distinction all the male inhabitants between sixteen & sixty [see Aug. 24, 1775, Colenda] years were subject to) & retired into different parts of the Country—and May

Capt. Ethan Allen, of the Green Mountain Boys, comes as a prisoner on a British vessel, which anchors "at the Hook, off New York." The frigate remained three days, "in which time Gov. Mangle Minthorn, a shopkeeper in Batteau (Dey) St, being repeatedly guilty of violating the resolve of the continental congress against the sale of tea, the general committee of the city publishes its unanimous declaration that he is "an enemy to the American Cause, and consequently ought to be precluded from all trade and intercourse with the inhabitants of these United Colonies."—"N. Y. Merc., June 10, 1776. Congress certified, however, that he acted through ignorance and inattention, and voted that he "be restored to the favour and protection of his fellow citizens;" and, by the solicitation of Col. Jay, his commission as captain in the Second N.Y. Regiment was restored to him.—Ibid., June 17, 1776.

A guard is ordered to be posted at Kingsbridge, "in order to prevent any soldier of the army passing that way, unless they have it in writing from the Commanding Officer of their respective Corps;" and "All masters of Vessels, Ferrymen &c are strictly enjoined not to carry any soldier of the army, without leave in writing from the Commanding Officer of their respective Corps, as a guard for the hospital at Kingsbridge."—Ibid., June 17, 1776.

In the continental congress, Richard Henry Lee, of Virginia, introduces these resolutions:

Resolved

"That these United Colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent States, that they are absolved from all allegiance to the British Crown, and that all political connection between them and the State of Great Britain is, and ought to be, totally dissolved."

"That it is expedient forthwith to take the most effectual measures for forming foreign alliances."

That a plan of confederation be prepared and transmitted to the respective Colonies for their consideration and approbation."

From original in Lib. of Congress. See reproduction in Hazeldon, Decl. of Independence: Its History, insert between pp. 108 and 109. These resolutions were in conformity with the instructions of the Virginia convention, of May 7 (5th), to her delegates. Committees were appointed by congress, to consider these matters, on June 10 (p.2).

The New-York committee issues the following statement and appeal: Whereas doubts have arisen in the Provincial Congress [Ibid., June 6, 1776] that "there is not sufficient me[an] to vest with sufficient power and authority to deliberate and determine on so important a subject as the necessity of erecting and constituting a new form of Government and internal police, to the exclusion of all foreign jurisdiction, dominion, and control whatever, agreeable to a late resolve of the honourable the Continen tal Congress [see May 31]; . . . The General Committee of the City and County of New-York, . . . earnestly request and entreat all the freemen and freemen, and also all the other inhabitants of the said City and the County of the said City, to take upon themselves, and in their own right to the amount of forty pounds, to attend at the City-Hall of the said City, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, on Monday, the 17th day of this instant June, then and there to invest their present Members of Provincial Congress with the power aforesaid, or to elect by ballot others in their stead, or in the stead of any of them, with such power to continue to represent the said City and County in Congress, until the second Tuesday in May next, or until a reconciliation with Great Britain, or the establishment of a new form of government shall render the same unnessa-

Gen. Howe writes to Lord Germain that the admiral has given orders to the cruisers off the northern coast to direct all the troops from Europe to proceed to New York. The plan is to make a landing on Long Island, etc.—MS. letter, cited in Writings of Gen. W. Washington (Ford ed.), IV, 931.

"The Mercury Man of War, and an armed sloop, sailed for Halifax, from Sandy-Hook, last Friday [June 7], having 5 Vessels under convoy."

"There now remains at the Hook 7 Ships, and some small Vessels."—N. Y. Merc., June 10, 1776.

The provincial congress pass this resolution "That the thanks of this Congress be presented to his Excellency Genl Washington, for the important services he has rendered to the United Colonies, and for the attention he has paid to the interest and civil authority of this Colony; and that he be assured of the readiness of this Congress to afford him all the aid in their power to enable him to execute the important trust reposed in him." The president of the congress waited on Gen. Washington the same day, communicated this resolution to him, and received the following reply addressed to the congress (which was entered in the journal on the 9th): "I am extremely obliged for the high sense you entertain of my services, and for your promises of every possible assistance in the discharge of my important duty. You may rest assured that every attention to the interest and happiness of this Colony shall not be wanting, ooe my regard to its civil authority remitted, while I am honoured with the command I now hold."—Jour. Prov. Cong, I, 436.

William Smith writes in his diary: "The Clouds grow very dark. My Hopes of a conciliatory negotiation almost fail me on advice of the Resolution of the motion to stop the foreign Troops from Brunswick Hesse & Hanau & the King's Answer to the London address in March last. On the 31st May [1776], the N. Y. Congress called our People to the Question respecting the Erection of a new Government—Virginia has cast off all Dependance."—Wm. Smith's Diary (MSS.), V.

"The army in New-York was now growing sickly; and there was not a sufficiency of hospital, room, or of medicines."—Memorials of Maj-Gen. Heath (1798), 46.

The continental congress resolves "That the consideration of the first resolution [bide Infal] be postponed to this day, three weeks [July 1], and in the mean while, that no time be lost, in case the Congress agree thereto, that a committee be appointed to prepare a declaration to the effect of the said first resolution, which is in these words [see June 7]: That these United Colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent states; that they are absolved from all allegiance to the British Crown; and that all political connection between them and the state of Great Britain is, and ought to be, totally dissolved."—Jour. Cont. Cong., IV, 428-29 (see also 425-26, footnote). See July 2.

Washington writes to the president of congress that circumstances indicate that British troop ships "are hourly expected at the Hook."—Writings of Gen. Washington (Ford ed.), IV, 130.

"He writes to Gov. Trumbull: 'Our works are extensive and many, and the troops here but few for their defence, being greatly reduced by the regiments detached on the Canada expedition.' He asks Trumbull to send militia.—Ibid., IV, 138.

A letter written by John Varick, Jr., to Capt. Richard Varick states that "there is not sufficient means invested with sufficient power and authority to deliberate and determine upon so important a subject as the necessity of erecting and constituting a new form of government and internal police, to the exclusion of all foreign jurisdiction, dominion, and control whatever, agreeable to a late resolve of the honourable the Continental Congress [see May 31]; . . . The General Committee of the City and County of New-York, . . . earnestly request and entreat all the freemen and freemen, and also all the other inhabitants of the said City and the County of the said City, to take upon themselves, and in their own right to the amount of forty pounds, to attend at the City-Hall of the said City, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, on Monday, the 17th day of this instant June, then and there to invest their present Members of Provincial Congress with the power aforesaid, or to elect by ballot others in their stead, or in the stead of any of them, with such power to continue to represent the said City and County in Congress, until the second Tuesday in May next, or until a reconciliation with Great Britain, or the establishment of a new form of government shall render the same unnecessary."—Jour. Am. Arch., VII, 744.
1776 Rebellion, & reduce his Subjects to a Sense of their Duty.—

Jn. N. Y. City during the Am. Revolution, 96.

Gov. Trumbull, of Connecticut, relates to the letter of the New York provincial congress (see March 8). His delay in answering him attributes to the necessity of laying the matter before the state assembly, which body failed to act under the "stress of Affairs". He assures the writer that the delay "was not from any disregard to your respectable body, nor for want of inclination to cultivate the utmost harmony between this and the Province you represent ... Your candor in imputing the intrusion of a number of our people into your capital, (in the manner they did,) to an impudent pretense of this Province, gives me real pleasure; and can give you the strongest assurance that this Colony by no means approve their conduct, yet a severe censure at this time, ... might be attended with such inconveniences as you will readily apprehend ... and which, I dare say, will suggest to you at once a satisfactory excuse for our not taking such measures, as might have been expected, in times of peace and quiet; though in such happy seasons the proper resort for the private injury must have been to the courts of law, which are the only jurisdiction who can legally take notice of violations of those rights which you have assumed to be your own, and which are of importance prompt to the public safety. The whole transaction was a respectable member of the whole transaction as imputable, and who belongs, and is amenable to your jurisdiction alone; and, therefore, the affair cannot be considered as an intrusion of our people into your Province, but as a violence or disorder happening among yourselves.—Jour. Prov. Cong. I: 491-92. When Rivington went to England, early in 1776 (Jan. 19, q.v.), the matter seems to have been dropped without further official action.

The Guard at the Breverly, North River, to be reinforced with men, who are to furnish two sentinels at the Paymaster General's Office, at the house of Mr. Lepinerard.—Glover Corresp. (M.S.), 117.

The continental congress resolves "That a committee be appointed to prepare and digest the form of a confederation to be entered into between these colonies."—Jour. Cent. Cong. (Ford ed.), IV: 431. See July 2.

John Hancock, president of the continental congress, writes from Philadelphia to the New York convention: "The Congress have this Day received Advice, and are fully convinced, that it is the Design of General Howe to make an Attack upon the City of New York. I am sensible, the Assembly believe will be made within 10 Days; I am therefore earnestly to request you, by Order of Congress, to call forth your Militia, as requested in my Letter of the 4th Instant, and to forward them with all Dispatch to the City of New York; and that you direct that they March in Companies, or any other Way that will hasten their Arrival there. The important Day is at Hand that will decide not only the Fate of the City of New York, but in all Probability of the whole Province. On such an Occasion there is no Necessity to use Arguments with Americans; their Feelings I well know will prompt them to their Duty, and the Sacredness of the Cause will urge them to the Field. The greatest Extortions of Vigour and Expulsion are requisite to prevent our Enemies from getting Possession of that Town; I must therefore again most earnestly request you, in the Name, and by the Authority of Congress, to send forward the Militia, agreeable to the Resolution of Congress, and that you will do it with all the Dispatch which the Infinite Importance of the Cause demands."—N. T. Merc., June 1776.

"Citizens of the City of New York Gathered together a number of them and went round among them which they supposed to be the leaders of them and afterwards made them stand and carry them about the Streets, on a Rail, and then confined them in Gaol others they Visited and they appeared to be so Humble they Let them alone after making Promise to comply with their Directions (I happened to have Command of the Picquet that Day) the Government sent in the New York Volunteers in order to Surpress them but seeing So many under Arms they Dispensed Quick."—From "Diary of Ensign Caleb Clap," in Hist. Mag., 3d ser. (1874), III: 115.

Similar riots occurred the next day, and Gen. Putnam and Millin complained to the provincial congress about them. The congress, therefore, passed the following resolution: "That this Congress by no means approve of the Acts that have happened this day; they flatter themselves, however, that they have proceeded from a real regard to liberty and a detestation of such persons who by their language and conduct, have discovered themselves to be inimical to the cause of America. To urge the warm friends of liberty to decency and good order, this congress assures the public that effectual measures shall be taken to secure the enemies of American liberty in this Colony; and do require the good people of this city and colony to desist from all riots, and leave the offenders against so good a cause to be dealt with by the constitutional representatives of the colony."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 491.

In a letter to Capt. Richard Varick written on June 13, Peter Elting mentioned the riots and congress's resolution. He said that among the Tories carried through the streets were "Capt. Theophilus Hardenbrook, Mr. Rem. Rapole, Mr. Queen the Potificary & Lestly the barber. There is hardly a toosy face to be seen this morning."—N. Y. Hist. Soc. Although we know no more as to his name, or the name of the person, for whom he would be mistaken; or who would justify the people of this Colony taking any part therein; but the same candor you have expressed in your letter, I presume will induce you to view the matter, so far as it respects this Colony or any of our people being concerned therein, in the still more favourable light, when you reflect that the heyday of the whole transaction was a respectable member of this city and Congress, who we consider as the proper person to whom the whole transaction is imputable, and who belongs, and is amenable to your jurisdiction alone; and, therefore, the affair cannot be considered as an intrusion of our people into your Province, but as a violence or disorder happening among yourselves.—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 491-92. When Rivington went to England, early in 1776 (Jan. 19, q.v.), the matter seems to have been dropped without further official action.

The Guard at the Breverly, North River, to be reinforced with men, who are to furnish two sentinels at the Paymaster General's Office, at the house of Mr. Lepinerard.—Glover Corresp. (M.S.), 117.

The continental congress resolves "That a committee be appointed to prepare and digest the form of a confederation to be entered into between these colonies."—Jour. Cent. Cong. (Ford ed.), IV: 431. See July 2.

The following resolution is enacted by the committee at New York: "Although all such persons as are above the age of fifty years, are, by Congress, exempted from bearing arms, the imminent danger to which this city and county are exposed, renders it necessary that every healthy, tho' aged friend, should have an opportunity of rendering assistance by voluntarily forming themselves into a regimentary body in the city and county. No gentleman as are willing to step forth, as aforesaid, are requested to meet at the house of the Widow Vanderwater near the New Brick Meeting-House, on Monday next [June 17] at 4 o'clock in the afternoon."—N. Y. Packet, June 13, 1776.

The New York provincial congress distributes handbills announcing that the province will soon be invaded, and recommending that the officers of the militia review their commands, and be ready to march when called upon.—From broadside in archives of the N. Y. Hist. Soc.

From the headquarters at New York comes this order: "The great extensiveness of the fortifications & works requiring a greater number of artillerymen than are at present in the Artillery Regiment; the General, in order to remedy the deficiency, and forward the service, directs that four able bodied men be pitched upon in each Company of every Battalion now here (the Kille Corps excepted) for the purpose above mentioned."—Glover Corresp. (M.S.), in Columbia Univ. Library, 139.

John Hancock, president of the continental congress, writes from Philadelphia to Gen. Washington: "The establishing a War Office is a new and great event in the history of America, and will doubtless be attended with great advantage in carrying on the business properly conducted and inspected. I hope the Committee will be ready in a few days to enter upon the execution of their duty. You will see the outlines of this office in the enclosed resolves. Some further regulations, it is more than probable, will be necessary in the course of time. The Congress have only laid a foundation at present; it will remain, a great measure, to erect a system of rules and
The continental congress resolves: "That it be recommended to the convention of the colony of New York, to make effectual provision for detaining, restraining, and punishing disaffected and dangerous persons in that colony, and to prevent all persons from having any intercourse or correspondence with the enemy; and that General Washington afford his aid therein, when necessary."

The provincial congress resolves: "That the clergy and licensed physicians be exempted from drafting [see May 10] for the militia to be raised in this city," also "That such of the firemen be exempted as will agree to form a separate company for the preservation of this city, in case of invasion, and be under the command of the General [Washington] until the further order of this Congress."

A "Committee to Detect Conspiracies," appointed by the provincial congress, begins proceedings for the trial of persons suspected of "disaffection" or of "equivocal character." —Col. Hist. MSS. (Rev. Papers), I: 339-47, as seen June 21.

The continental congress resolves: "That letters be written to the conventions of New Jersey and New York, and to the assembly of Connecticut, recommending to them to authorize the commander in chief in the colony of New York, to call to the assistance of that colony, when necessity shall require it, such of the militia of those colonies as may be necessary; and to afford him such other assistance as the situation of affairs may require." —Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford ed.), IV: 452.

The provincial congress resolves: "That Captain Hamilton's company of artillery be considered so many and a part of the quota of militia to be raised or furnished by the city and county of New York." —Jour. Provins. Cong., I: 497.

"Colonel Magaw's and Col. Shea's Battalions are this Day expected from Pennsylvania, and a great Number, of the Militia from the different Parts of New-Jersey, Connecticut and this Province, so that in the Course of this Week we may expect to have here an Army of at least 25,000 Men." —N. Y. Merc., June 17, 1776.

The provincial congress gives an "elegant entertainment" to "His Excellency General Washington, and his suite, the General and Staff Officers, and the commanding officers of the different regiments in and near this city." In the published reports toasts of the number of thirty-one are mentioned. —Const. Gan., June 19, 1776; Virginia Gan. (Williamsburg), July 13. A court of inquiry is held at the house of Mrs. Montagne "to examine into the conduct of Capt. Copp, upon complaint of Lieut. Col. Zedwitz for assaulting and striking him." The court acquitted Copp the next day. —Const. Gan., June 26, 1776. Regarding Zedwitz's character, see Aug. 24.

The Pennsylvania regiments, commanded by Colonels Shea and Magaw, were the first of the day they had the appearance of fine troops. The day before, Gen. Wooster arrived from Canada. —Memoirs of Maj.-Gen. Heath (1778), 47. On the next day, the remaining divisions of the battalions of Shea and Magaw arrived from Philadelphia. They marched to Kingsbridge on June 21, where they were examined. —Const. Gan., June 24, 1776.

The continental congress resolves: "That 100,000 dollars be sent to the pay master general at New York, for the use of the army." —Jour. Cont. Cong., IV: 465.

Ensign Caleb Clap records in his diary: "A Gentleman Frenchman Arrived here from Paris, what his business is I cannot inform, but it seems the General met him with the Greatest Pleasure and that he will be Glad." —Hist. Mag., 5d ser., III: 115. This was evidently the Chevalier de Kermoava whom, with Monse. de Vermont, Washington introduced by letter of June 21 to the president of congress. —Fitzpatrick, Col. of Corresp. of Gen. Washington (1806), 59.

The New York congress the same day from its minutes: "Whereas it has been represented to this Committee that printed tickets are circulating in this City for small change, which, if permitted, in our estimation will have a tendency to depreciate the Paper currency emitted by Congresses, Committees, of Corporated bodies," it is resolved that they "will not receive as payment any tickets issued by any individual; and they recommend to the publick not to encourage, by any means, the circulation of any such tickets for the future." —Am. Arch., VI: 966.

That Washington was at the Mortier house on this date is evident from testimony (see June 21) which states that one Corbél keeps a tavern "to the southeast of General Washington's house, to the westward of Bayard's woods, and north of Lippesnard's meadow." —Am. Arch., VI: 1571; Johnston, Campaign of 1776, 86.

Viscount Howe, having been appointed a commissioner for the granting of pardons, issues a proclamation declaring that "Due Consideration shall be had to the meritorious Services of all Persons, who shall aid and assist in restoring the public Tranquility in the said Colonies, or in any Part or Parts thereof; that Pardon shall be granted, dutiful Representatives received, and every suitable Encouragement given, for promoting such Measures as shall be conducive to the Establishment of legal Government and Peace, in pursuance of His Majesty's most gracious Purposes." The proclamation is issued from "on board His Majesty's Ship the Eagle off of the Coasts of the Province of Massachusetts Bay." —From original Ms. in Ennion Collection, No. 6076.

A plot against the lives of Washington, Hamilton, and others is discovered. One of Washington's body-guard, Thomas Hickey, was found guilty and was hanged. The plot became known as the "Hickey Plot." Although Mayor Mathews and others were accused and arrested, the conspiracy was supposed to have been organized by Gov. Tryon, on "The Dutchess of Gordon," and aimed at a delivery of the city and the army to the royal forces.—See the correspondence relating to it in N. Y. City during the Am. Rev. (1841), and authorities there cited. See also Minutes of the Trial and Execution of Certain Persons for Conspiracy against the Liberties of America (J. Buns, London, 1780).

Gen. Samuel B. Webb, Washington's aide-de-camp, entered in his journal on June 21 the following statement regarding this plot: "Some days past, the General received information that a most horrid plot was on foot by the vile Tories of this place and the adjacent towns and villages. He has often threatened exemplary punishments, at two o'clock in the morning a number of officers and guards went to different places and took up many of their principals among whom was David Matthews, Esq., Mayor of the City; and to our great astonishment we found five or more of the General's life guard to be accomplices in this wicked scheme; which was at a concerted time, to assassinate His Excellency, and the other general officers, blow up the magazine, spike the cannon, etc. It was to be put in execution as soon as the enemy's fleet appeared, if no proper time offered before; but, thank God, they are discovered, and many of them in close custody; where, I hope, they will receive the due punishment of such infamous wretches." —Correspondence and journals of S. B. Webb (ed. by W. C. Ford), I: 1750; N. Y. Herald, Aug. 28, 1786.

Ensign Caleb Clap entered in his diary on the same day the following account of it: At evening the Mayor of the City of New York was taken up and a large number of the officers of General Washington Life Guard, and some others belonging to Different Regiments, it is Reported to the amount of 40 are now taken, some are now in Irons, other Confined in the State House, the Mayor is confined in A Publick House by the state House, this morning from a Chest of Arms Gen. J. Townsend, who was encamped with the patriot army "about one Mile N.W. of the City upon the north River in a very Pleasant Place," wrote to his father on June 22: "Lt Col. Clap has just Come out of the City and gives information that the Mayor of the City and about twenty of the Citizens were taken into Custody this morning, who are found out in laying a plan to take our General Officers and Convey them to the Asia Man of War, and when any attack should be made for to blow up our Magazines in order to Effect this they bribed a number of our Soldiers and put them (old Country men) all under pay who receive their pay weekly and were to execute the foregoing, one of which men belongs to the Genl Ld. I find the plan went rather than I have mentioned, that they were to set fire to the Town in nine places if required—the plan if it had succeeded must have proved fatal to our Army here—the one belonging to the Genl Guard mentioned before, belonged formerly to this Regt. On June 24, Ezra Stiles recorded in his diary: "a Plot—was lately discovered, and the Mayor of the City, David Matthews, Esq. & a number of others were seized and taken into Custody. The Plot was to blow up the Magazine, assassinate G. Washington & a number of capital Characters in the Army, pull up Kingbridge, set fire to the City and give signals to the Kings Fleet & Army for Landing & taking possession."—Literary Diary of Ezra Stiles, II: 18, 20.

A letter written on June 21 from New York to Philadelphia stated: "Since Friday last a most barbarous and infernal plot has been discovered among our Tories, the particulars I cannot give you, as the Committee of examination consists of but three, who are sworn to secrecy. Two of Gen. Washington's guards are concerned, a third who they tempted to join them made the first dis-cove-

ry and reported to the Mayor he has since been taken, between 20 and 30, among them our Mayor, they are all now in confinement. Their party, it is said, consisted of about 500."—Penn. Jour. (Phila.), June 26, 1776.

Gen. Samuel B. Webb, Washington's aide-de-camp, recorded in his journal, also on June 24: "The guard at the City Hall has in Charge those traitors to their country who were concerned in the late rebellion plot."—N. Y. Hist. Mag. (1874), 3rd ser., III: 347.

Mathews was made a prisoner on June 22—ibid., I: 347. He was examined on June 23—ibid., I: 356-6. See also Oct. 17, 1776; and Winsor, Nat. & Crit. Hist. of Am., VI: 316.

Being a decided Loyalist, Mayor Mathews's name had been entered on the list of the suspected, as early as May of this year. When arrested by order of the committee of safety (June 22), he was lodged in the New York jail, but was soon removed to Connecticut. The charge against him was that he was cognizant of, or concerned in, Gov. Tryon's plot to assassinate Gen. Washington and blow up the fort. He escaped from Litchfield, Conn., in 1777, and is represented by Sabine as in N. Y., in 1778, and as register of the court of common pleas in 1782. By the act of 1779, he was attained and his property confiscated. He left the United States in or about 1785.—Foot-note by O'Callaghan in Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), III: 642-41. He died on July 26, 1800, at Sydney, Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, where he had resided for fifteen years, and having been made general of that island shortly before his death—Com. Adv., Sept. 25, 1800. Regarding the proceedings taken with Hickey, see June 26.

Col. Benjamin Tupper writes from Sandy Hook to Gen. Washington: "I landed here the evening before last, and by reason of several inconveniences, could not make an attack until this morning at four o'clock, when I advanced within one hundred and fifty yards of the Light-House, in so secret a manner that my party were not discovered. I advanced with an officer, and, after a few words, he fired several shot at me, but, as God would have it, missed me. I returned to my party and ordered the artillery to play such const that hour, but found the walls so firm I could make no impression. I retired towards the shipping, not thinking, but, as there were two men-of-war arrived yesterday, that they would have been so complaisant as to send a party on shore to have attacked me, but could not provoke them. I occupied the ground about two hours and a half between two smart fires; viz: from two men-of-war on one side, and the Light-House on the other: but, what is remarkable, I had not one man killed, nor one wounded so much as to apply to a surgeon."—4 Am. Arch., VI: 1011. Col. Tupper was in command of "a motley little fleet, made up of schooners, sloops, and a few 'flop-lid boats.' He had distinguished himself "by a naval exploit or two in Boston Harbor during the siege."—Johnston, Campaign of 1776 around New York and Brooklyn, 91.

Warrants are issued against the Tories in New York, a list of whom is prepared—Cal. Hist. MSS. (Rev. Papers), I: 357-53. Their examination follows.—ibid., 1074.

Aaron Burr is appointed aide-de-camp to Gen. Putnam.—Glover Correp. (M.S.), 144.

Mayor David Matthews is apprehended at Flatbush. He is "dragged out of Bed at Midnight by an Officer and twenty Men belonging to the Rebel Army. By Order of the provincial Congress [see June 23], he was committed to close Confinement in the common Jail among Felons, during a Month in the hottest Time of the Year, and afterwards sent under Guard to the Committee at Litchfield, with an express Order from the President of the said Congress to detain him in Prison."—N. Y. Merc., Dec. 9, 1776. See further, Dec. 22.

27. Deserters from the man-of-war "Liverpool" report that the fleet from Halifax, with Gen. Howe's army, is hourly expected to arrive at New York (see June 28). "Every exertion was now in exercise to complete the works, and to obstruct the river. The latter was near Fort Washington, and prosecuted by sinking a number of large hulls, and frames called chevaux-de-frise, composed of large and long timbers framed together, with points elevated, to pierce and stop the way of vessels meeting of them. These were boxed and fastened together to contain a vast weight of stones, which were put into them, and with which they sunk. A line of these, and hulls, was formed across the river; some of them sunk very well; others, rather irregular; and some of the hulls, which were strapped together with large timbers, separated in going down. A passage was left open for vessels to pass through; and the British, as it was proved afterwards, found the means of knowing where it was, and of passing through it."—Memoirs of Maj.-Gen. Heath (1798), 47-48.

28. The provincial congress issues the following warrant for the confinement of Mayor Matthews: "To the Goeater appointed by the Colony of New York, to keep their Prisoners in the Goal of the City and County of New York.

Whereas David Matthews, of the City of New-York, Esq; stands charged before us, with being concerned in danger and mutual confidence perpetuated the union of the colonies, and Liberties of America; We do therefore in Pursuance of a certain Resolve of the Congress of this Colony, order you to take and keep the said David Matthews in your Custody, till you shall receive further Order concerning him, from us or the Congress."-Governer under date of the 25th June, 1776.

33. There is executed, "in a field between the Colonels McDougall and Huntington's camp, near the Bowery-lane (in the presence of near twenty thousand spectators) a soldier belonging to his Excellency General Washington's guards, for mutiny and conspiracy; being one of those, who formed, and was soon to have put in execution, that horrid plot of assassinating the Staff officers, blowing up the magazines, and securing the passage of the towns on the arrival of the hungry ministerial myrmidons."—Penn. 34. The British fleet under Admiral Shuldham arrives "in this port."—N. Y. Col. Docs., VIII: 681. Signals on Staten Island announce the arrival.—Gen. Webb's Correspondence, I: 150-51. The British engineer, Robertson, writes that the fleet, coming from Halifax, "at 6 in the morning discovered land the heights callf the Nethersinks close by sandy hook the Entrance into N. Washington writes to the president of congress: "For two or three days past, three or four ships have been stopping in; and I just now received an express from an officer appointed to keep a look-out on Staten Island, that forty-five arrived at the Hook to-day; some say more; and I suppose the whole fleet will be in, within a day or two."—Writings of Gen. Washington (Ford ed.), IV: 145; Johnston, op. cit., 94-95; N. Y. Packet, July 4, 1776. "The transports were coming in, during the whole day. At evening, nearly 100 sail had arrived, Col. Durker's regiment was ordered over to Paulus Hook. The General Officers were in Council."—Memoirs of Maj.-Gen. Heath, 48. A newspaper account reads: "Last Saturday arrived at the Hook (like the breeze from the bottom pin,) a fleet said to be 150 sail of ships and vessels from Halifax, having on board General Howe, &c. sent out by the Tyrants of Great-Britain, after destroying the English constitution there, on the pious design of enslaving the British Colonies and plundering their property at pleasure, or murdering, or committing the most horrid murder, as Ahab did of Naboeth's vineyard."—N. E. Chron. (Cambridge), July 11, 1776. In a letter to Geo. Clinton, Washington states: "Would have you make all possible preparation in case the enemy should have in view to push some of their Frigates up the North River, to give them a proper reception."—Letters of Geo. Washington to Geo. and Jaz. Clinton, 19.

35. Capt. Francis Hutcheson, assistant secretary to Sir William Howe, wrote on July 10 to a friend in England regarding their arrival at Staten Island: "We found Governor Tryon at the Hook on board the Duchess of Gordon; he has with him Mr. Barrow, Mr. Kemp, Oliver Delaney, Mr. Apthorp & Major Beyard. The three last Gentlemen made their escape in a Canoe from Apthorp's house to the Asia lying below the Narrows, about ten nights ago. He explained likewise where various other prominent New York Tories were at this time.—Johnston, Battle of Harlem Heights, 217. July 12.

"lately left their usual places of residence and secreted themselves in woods and swamps, and other places, in all probability with a design to join the enemy, when an opportunity shall offer, which, if not prevented, will greatly endanger the peace, quiet and safety of the inhabitants," passes a resolution recommending the committee of the several towns and cities, masons, precincts and districts in the colony, to apprehend and imprison such persons. The Congress empowers these committees to order the officers of militia in their respective districts to execute this resolution.—Journal, Prov. Cong., I: 512.

The congress also passes the following resolution: "Whereas the great resolution to apprehend that an attack will soon be made upon this city: And whereas during the tumult and confusion incident upon such an attack, it may be difficult to assemble a sufficient number of members to form a Congress: And whereas the minutes and the other necessary publick papers and records of this Colony, ought to be removed from this city: And whereas the present or future Congress of this Colony, as well by reason of the removal of the papers aforesaid as for other causes and considerations, will be unable to deliberate and determine in this city on the several important matters submitted to their consideration: Resolved, therefore, That the Treasurers of this and the several Treasurers of this Colony be and they hereby are directed forthwith to repair with all and singular the public papers and money now in their custody or possession, unto the White Plains, in the county of Westchester, and that this Congress be, and it hereby is adjourned unto the Court House in the White Plains aforesaid; there to meet on Tuesday, the 2nd day of July next, and proceed upon business, and that the next Congress of this Colony do meet at the same place on Monday, the 8th day of July aforesaid, unless otherwise ordered by this Congress."—Ibid.

Capt. Stephen Brown is directed "to go immediately to New York & apply for assistance in procuring and fixing boats near the Nereus for facilitating the passage of troops from the Jersey to New York."—Gloster Correspond. (MS.), 150.

Following the records for June, in the printed Calendar, is a "List of the Elements of the City of New York under the Command of Jacobus Stoughtenburgh Engenheimer. 1776." This list shows that more than half the freemen were in military service or out of town.—Cal. Hist. MSS. (Rev. Papers), I: 517-16.

The "resolution respecting independency" (see June 10) is taken into consideration at the session of the continental congress.—Journal, Cont. Cong. (Ford ed.), Vol. 940. No record of the discussion appears in the Journal. From letters of contemporaries written long afterward, it appears that John Adams took the leading part for the resolution, and John Dickinson against it. Many other members have joined in the discussion, for the debate seems to have been prolonged.—Channing, Hist. of U. S., III: 201. "After some time," the Jour. of the Jour., "the previous motion, the choice and the determination thereof was postponed, at the request of a colony, till tomorrow" (p. 9.)—Journal, Cont. Cong., Vol. 950-5.

The events of this day in the congress, and those leading up to it, are presented by Bancroft, from whose Hist. of the U. S. (author's last revision, 1856, chap. 23) the following extracts have been taken:

"On the morning of the first of July, the day set apart [see June 10] for considering the resolution of independency, John Adams, confident as if the vote had been taken, invoked the blessing of heaven to make the new-born republic more glorious than any which had gone before . . ."

"At the appointed hour, the members, probably on that day fifty in number, appeared in their places; among them, the delegates lately chosen in New Jersey. The great occasion had brought forth superior strangers—men who joined moderation to energy. . . . Every colony was found to be represented, and the delegates of all but one [New York] had received full power of action. Comprehensive instructions, reaching the question of independence without explicitly using the word, had been given by Massachusetts in January, by Georgia on the fifth of February, by South Carolina in March, North Carolina in the words of Col. John Harnett, on the twelfth of April, led the way in expressly directing their representatives in congress to concur in a declaration of independence. On the first of May, Massachusetts expurgated the regal style from all public proceedings, and substituted the nomenclature of the colonies and people; and more explicitly renounced allegiance, and made its delegates the representatives of an independent republic; Virginia on the fifteenth, the very day on which John Adams in congress carried his measure for instituting governments by the sole authority of the people, ordered her delegates at Philadelphia to propose independency, and by a circular letter communicated her resolve to all her sister colonies. The movement of Virginia was seconded almost in her words by Connecticut on the fourteenth of June, New Hampshire on the fifteenth, New Jersey on the twenty-first, the conference of committees of Pennsylvania on the twenty-fourth, Maryland on the twenty-eighth. Delaware on the twenty-second of March had still hoped for conciliation; but on the fifteenth of June she instigated her delegates to concur in forming further compacts between the united colonies, concluding treaties with foreign powers, and adopting such other measures as should be deemed necessary for promoting the liberty, safety, and interests of America. The vote of the eleventh of June showed the purpose of New York; but, under the accumulation of dangers, her statesmen waited a few days longer, that her voice for independency might have the direct authority of her people."

"The business of the day began with reading various letters, among others one from Washington, who returned the whole number of his men present and fit for duty, including the one regiment of artillery, at seven thousand seven hundred and fifty-four. . . . With this force the general was to defend extensive lines against an army, near at hand, of thirty thousand veterans. . . ."

"A more cheering letter, which Chase had forwarded by express from Annapolis, brought the first news of the unanimity of the Maryland convention, whose vote for independency was produced and read."

"The order of the day came next, and congress resolved itself into a committee of the whole to take into consideration the resolution respecting independency, . . . In the absence of the mover of the resolution [Richard Henry Lee—see June 7] the eyes of every one turned toward its second, John Adams . . . Of his sudden, impetuous, unpremeditated speech, no minutes ever existed, and no report was made. It is only remembered that he set forth the justice and necessity, the sensibility and the advantages of a separation from Great Britain; he dwelt on the neglect and insult with which their petitions had been treated by the king; and on the vindictive spirit manifested in the employment of German troops whose arrival was hourly expected. He concluded by urging the present time as the most suitable for resolving on independency, inasmuch as it had become the first wish and the last instruction of the communities they represented."

"Dickinson of Pennsylvania rose, not so much to reply as to justify himself before congress. . . . These were his words: . . . The declaration will not strengthen us by one man or by the least supply, the liberty of their country, the national cruelties and outrages. Without some prelusive trials of strength, we ought not to commit our country upon an alternative, where to recede would be infamy and to persist might be destruction. . . ."

"It is singularly disrespectful to France to make the declaration before her sense is known, as we have sent an agent expressly to inquire whether such a declaration would be acceptable to her, and we have reason to believe he is now arrived at the court of Versailles. . . ."

"The formation of our governments and an agreement upon the terms of our confederation [see June 11] ought to precede the assumption of our station among sovereigns. A sovereignty composed of several distinct bodies of men, not subject to established constitutions and not combined together by confirmed articles of union, is such a sovereignty as has never appeared. . . ."

"The confederation ought to be settled before the declaration of independency. . . . The boundaries of the colonies ought to be fixed before the declaration, and their respective rights mutually guaranteed; . . . When things shall be thus delicately rendered firm at home, and inviolable abroad, then let Americans, bearing up her glory and the destiny of her children, advance with majestic steps and assume her station among the sovereigns of the world."

uniformly declared in his place that he never would vote for it contrary to his instructions, . . . But, now that their authority was communicated by the conference of committees, he stood on very different ground.

"Before the end of the debate rose Witherspoon of New Jersey. In a short speech he remarked . . . that, in his judgment, the country was not only ripe for independence, but was in danger of becoming rotten for want of it, if its declaration were longer delayed. . . . Before the vote was taken, the delegates from New York read to the committee a letter which they had received from the provincial congress, explaining why their formal concurrence must, for a few days longer, be withheld. The resolution for independence was then sustained by nine colonies; two thirds of the whole number; the vote of South Carolina, unanimously it would seem, was in the negative; so was that of Pennsylvania, by the vote of Dickinson, Morris, Humphreys, and Willing, against Franklin, Morton, and Wilson; owing to the absence of Rodney, Delaware was divided, each member voting under the new instruction according to his former known opinion, Mackean for independence and Read against it.

"The committee rose, and Harrison reported the resolution; but, at the request of Edward Rutledge, on behalf of South Carolina, the determination upon it was put off till the next day. [See July 2.]"

A letter from Washington, of the twenty-sixth of June [1776], was read to the committee, in which forty-five ships or more, laden with troops, had arrived at Sandy Hook, and that the whole fleet was expected in a day or two. . . .

"No one knew better than the commander-in-chief the exceedingly discouraging aspect of military affairs; but his serene and unfaltering courage in this hour was a support to congress. His letter was referred to the board of war which they had recently established, and of which John Adams was the president."

"The Number of Transports now at Sandy-Hook, we hear amounts to 111 Sails, and we have not the least Reason to doubt, that General Howe is in this Fleet. From the Number of Troops now here, and those on their Way, from different Parts of the Country, it is computed our Army will soon amount to 25000 Men."

The British fleet leaves Sandy Hook (see June 29 for the Narrows), and three hours later anchors about two miles off Gravesend.

"There was orders for the troops to be ready to embark at 4 next morning—but after a long Consultation of Genl. O'Gara it was agreed not to be proper consider the country we had to march thro' & the Difficulty of keeping up our Communicat.' &c &c &c—Robertson's Jour. (No. 4). See July 2.

About this date, Capt. Alexander & Capt. Magan were employed on the construction of Fort Washington—Grayson, Memoirs of a Life (1823), 148.

The continental congress at Philadelphia resolves: "That these United Colonies are, and, of right, ought to be, Free and Independent States, and that the British Parliament have no right to legislate for them in any manner whatever; and that all political connection between them, and the state of Great Britain, is, and ought to be, totally dissolved."—Jour. Cong. 1774-6 (ed. of 1825), I: 392. Cf. Virginia resolution of May 15 see also June 7. The delegates of 12 of the colonies voted for the resolution, those from New York being excepted from voting on account of their instructions (see June 14). Bancroft describes the transactions of July 2 as follows:

"On the second day of July there were present in congress probably forty-nine members. Rodney had arrived from Delaware, and, joining Mackean, secured that colony. Dickinson and Morris stayed away, which enabled Franklin, Wilson, and Morton of Pennsylvania, to outvote Willing and Humphreys. The South Carolina members, still uncertain if Charleston had not fallen, for the sake of humanity, came round; so, though New York was still unable to vote, twelve colonies, with no dissenting one, resolved: "That these United colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent states. . . ."

"... The greatest question," he [John Adams] wrote [on July 3 to his wife], "was decided which ever was debated in America, and a state, perhaps, never was nor will be decided among men. When I look back to 1764, and run up to the series of political events, the chain of causes and effects, I am surprised at the suddenness as well as greatness of this revolution. Britain has been filled with folly, and America with wisdom. It is the will of heaven that the two countries should be severed forever; it may be the will of heaven that America shall suffer calamities still more wailing and distresses yet more dreadful. If this is to be the case, the furnace of affliction produces refinement in states as well as individuals; but I submit all my hopes and fears to an over-ruling Providence . . ."...

The hopes of reconciliation which were fondly entertained by multitudes of the honest and well-meaning, though weak and mistaken, have been gradually and at last totally extinguished. This, if happily seen for the whole people maturely to consider the great question of independence, so that in every colony of the thirteen they have now adopted it as their own act."

"But the day is passed. The second of July 1776 will be the most memorable epocha in the history of America; to be celebrated by succeeding generations as the great anniversary festival, commemorated as the day of deliverance, by solemn acts of devotion to God Almighty, from one end of the continent to the other, from this time forward forevermore.

"You will think me transported with enthusiasm, but I am not. I am well aware of the toil and blood and treasure that it will cost us to maintain this declaration, and support and defend these states; yet, through all the gloom, I can see the rays of light and glory; that the end is worth all the means; that posterity will triumph in that day's transaction, even though we should rue it, which I trust in God we shall not." [See Familiar Letters of John Adams and his Wife, July 1776, No. 4.]

"The resolution of congress changed the old thirteen British colonies into free and independent states. It remained to set forth the reason for this act, and the principles which the new people would own as their guides. Of the committee appointed for that duty, Thomas Jefferson of Virginia had received the largest number of votes, and was in that manner singled out to draft the confession of faith of the rising empire. He owed his distinction to respect for the colony which he represented, to the consummated ability of the state papers which he had already written, and to that general favor which follows merit, popularity, and a sweet disposition; but the quality which specially fitted him for the task was the sym pathetic character of his nature, by which he was able with instinctive perception to read the soul of the nation, and, having collected its best thoughts and noblest feelings, to give them out in clear and bold words, mixed with so little of himself that his country, as it went along with him, found nothing but what it recognized as its own . . .

"From the fulness of his own mind, without consulting one single book, yet having in memory the example of the Swiss and the manifesto of the United Provinces of the Netherlands, Jefferson drafted the declaration, in which, after citing the acts of government, he presented the complaints of the United States against England in the three classes of the iniquitous use of the royal prerogative, the usurpation of legislative power over the king by the king in parliament, and the measures for enforcing the acts thus committed. He submitted this to Franklin and to John Adams, accepted from each of them one or two verbal, unimportant corrections, and on the twenty-eighth of June reported it to congress, which, on the second of July, immediately, after adopting the resolution of independence, entered upon its consideration. During the remainder of that day, and the next two, the language, the statements, and the principles of the paper were closely scanned."—Bancroft, Hist. of the U. S. (1886), 441-46. A draft of the declaration in Jefferson's handwriting is in the Emmet Coll. (No. 1524). See July 4.

The following address is found from the military headquarters at New York: "The time is now near at hand which must probably determine whether Americans are to be slaves or freemen. Whether they can have any property they can call their own, whether their houses and farms are to be pillaged and destroyed, & they consigned to a state of wretchedness, from which no human efforts will probably deliver them. The fate of liberty or anarchy, (under God) on the courage & conduct of this army. Our cruel & unrelenting Enemy leaves us no choice but a brave resistance or the most abject submission. This is all we can expect. We have therefore resolved to conquer or die. Our own & our Country's honor all call upon us for a vigorous & steady exertion; and if we now shamefully fail, we shall become infamous in the whole world. Let us therefore rely upon the goodness of the cause and the aid of the Supreme Being (in whose hands victory is) to encourage and animate us to great and noble actions.

1776 "The eyes of all our countrymen are now open and we shall have our just rewards if we prove worthy of being the instrument of saving them from the tyranny meditated against them.

Let us therefore animate & encourage each other, and shew the Whole world that freemen contend for liberty on their own ground is superior to any slavish mercies on earth."—Oglethorpe Corresp. (MS), 175.

July 9 9 o’clock this morning the whole Army was under Arms at their several Alarm Posts, occasioned by large Men of War courting up thro: the Narrows—We supposed them courting on to attack our Forts—never did I see them more cheerfully; they seem to wish the enemies approach—they came up to the watering Place, about 10 o’clock, but the Narrows, and surge too.—Gen. Webb’s Correspondence (ed. by Ford), I: 151-52.

Gen. Howe disembarks his troops on Staten Island. Gov. Tryon, who has no special duties assigned to him in his military character, does all he can in his civil capacity "to promote his Majesty’s service," and gives all the information he possesses to Gen. Howe.—N. T. Col. Docs., VIII: 681. See also "Journal of the Operations of the American Army [British] under General Sir William Howe from the evacuation of Boston to the end of the Campaign of 1776" (transcript in Library of Congress from the original with the Egerton MSS. in British Museum), and John F. D. Appleton, Capt. Francis Hutchison. Gen. Howe’s assistant secretary, writing to a friend in England, on July 10, from the camp on Staten Island, described the circumstances on landing here. Among other things, he observed: "... Its immensity they did not fortify the Narrows, which would have annoyed a few ships to whose danger the ships as they came through from the Long Island side without doing any mischief. The Army is now [July 10] all landed and Cantonected all round the Island. The Head Quarters is on the Road to Elizabeth town [the House a Mr. Hicks formerly lived in, but lately occupied by a Mr. Banker of New York, who was a member of the Provincial Congress; he is treated to a Qr on board one of the men of war, and General Howe has taken care to give orders for his Reception..."—Johnston, Battle of Harlem Heights, 217-18, citing "Haldimand MSS., British Museum." See also Robertson’s Jour. (MS.), July 2 and 12 and for his views of the Narrows showing the British fleet, see July 12.

There was published in London, on Jan. 17, 1777, as part of the Atlantic Neptune (see Vol. I, p. 353), a map of the country around New York and up the Hudson entitled “A Sketch of the Operation of His Majesty’s Fleet and Army under the Command of Vice Admiral the Rt H[il]. Lord Viscount Howe and Genl Wm. Howe, K. B. in 1776." It is reproduced in Man. Com. Cen. (1864), p. 668. See also Pl. 45-b, Vol. I.

Ensign Caleb Clark records in his Diary: “Col. Nixon’s Regiment is ordered to March on to Governeris Island,...”

July 10 5 O’clock AM three large Men of war came up through the Narrows with two Tendrds and came to an Anchor, against Staten Island, about 12 o’clock—

"After those Ships appeared this side the Narrows A Signal was hoisted, two Guns fired from the North Battery, and the whole Army was immediately under Arms, ready to Receive them. About 5 O’clock P.M. the Ships was under Way and moved up Slowly fired several Shots on the People on Staten Island.

General Putnam with A Detachment of 5 or 6 Hundred Men is gone on to Long Island in order to prevent the enemy Landung this sudden alarm put the Citizens in the greatest confusion they are moving out of Town as fast as Possible.

I conclude almost all the Scoops and Craft that Lay about the Town are gone up the Rivers (North and south)." Other incidents of the day, on Staten Island, are described.—Hist. Mag., 3d ser., III: 136.

Capt. Abel writes: "The night before last, just after dark, there was an alarm that the fleet was under way and coming up; the drums beat to Arms. I sat up till I found that the Tide was spent, and wind wont not permit them to come up; then I went to bed. About 11 o’clock I was awakened by Col. Rensens, who came with an order to have our Regiment out by 4 o’clock in the morning. When I got dress’d & prepared to go away I was ordered to join the Captain’s to warn them; before long the alarm guns were fired, and the fleet appeared in the Narrows; the drums beat to arms, and every one was ordered to his post. Mine was at the New Brick Meeting House, where our regiment parades. I stayed till it was found that they were come to anchor under Staten Island. Capt. Randall has just informed me that they had only landed on Staten Island and drove the few Riflemen we had there to Elizabethtown point; shall be a little easier, as two thousand men are going over to prevent their marching into the country. If they had landed here they must have met with a warm reception, as I judge we had Monday by 12 o’Clock, 15,000 Men in the City and its neighborhood. To-morrow 7,000 Troops are expected from New England."—White-more, The Allid and Allied Families, 16.

The congress at Philadelphia "resolved itself into a committee of the whole to take into their further consideration" independency, the preliminary resolution concerning which was voted two days earlier (p.v.). The Declaration of Independence is read and "agreed to." The full text is represented in the rough Journal of Congress by a copy of the original broadside, printed by John Dunlap (doubtless on July 5) in accordance with an order of congress of July 4, and which was probably wafered on the page the day it was printed.—See reproduction in Hazelton’s Dec. of Ind., opp. p. 170. There is a copy of the Dunlap broadside in the N. Y. Pub. Lib, and a copy is preserved in the collection. For reproduction from a photograph, made in 1853, of the original parchment document, which is preserved in the Library of Congress, Washington, but no longer exhibited, see Aver’s Hist. of the U. S., V. opp. p. 398.

July 4 also required that copies of this printed issue of the declaration should be sent "to the several assemblies, conventions, and committees, or councils of safety, and to the several commanding officers of the continental troops" (see July 6), and that it be "proclaimed in each of the United States, and at the head of the army" (see July 9).—Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford ed.), V: 310-16.

The meteoric rise of the Declaration Jefferson writing to Madison, in 1825, said that the committee for that purpose consisted of Sherman, Livingston, Franklin, John Adams, and himself. The others "pressed on myself alone to undertake the draught. I consented; I drew it; but before I reported it to the committee, I communicated it separately to D. Franklin and Mr. Adams requesting their corrections; because they were the two members of whose judgments and amendments I wished most to have the benefit before presenting it to the Committee; their alterations were two or three only, and merely verbal. I then wrote a fair copy, reported it to the Committee, and from them, altered to Congress."—Hazelton, op. cit., 144, citing the MS. in Lib. of Congress. Jefferson wrote this letter because of some statements concerning the drafting that had been made by John Adams and Timothy Pickering. He says that their observations—"that it contained no new ideas, that it is a common place compilation, its sentiments hacked in Congress for two years before, and it’s essence contained in Otis’s pamphlet, may all be true; but that I am not the judge. Rich’d H. Lee charged it as copied from Locke’s treatise on government. Otis’s pamphlet I never saw, & whether I had gathered my ideas from reading or reflection I do not know. I know only that I turned to neither book or pamphlet while writing it."—Ibid. For the controversy in regard to the signing of the declaration on July 4 by the members of congress, see Hazelton, op. cit., chap. IX; "The authentication of the Declaration of Independence, July 4, 1776," in Mass. Hist. Soc. Proceedings (Nov., 1891), 279-98.

There is reproduced in Pl. 46, Vol. IV, the only known impres- sion of a broadside of the declaration printed in New York, "by John Holt in Water-Street" (see Hazelton, op. cit., 491).

Elbridge Gerry wrote to James Warren, on July 5, expressing his satisfaction that the declaration had been issued, although unannounced it had not been reached because the New York delegates
July 1776 were not "empowered to give either an affirmative or negative voice." —Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford ed.), V: 516 (footnote). New York's sanction to the declaration was given by the provincial congress on July 9 (q. s.), and on the same evening the declaration was presented to the General Congress, to the army drawn up for the purpose on the Common in New York City.

The declaration was first printed in a newspaper in the Penn. Eve. Post (Phila.), July 6, 1776. Its first publication in a New York newspaper was on July 11 (q. s.). It was officially "published" in the New York Gazette, July 18 (q. s.).

At the opening of parliament, on Oct. 31, the declaration moved the king to say: ... so daring and desperate is the Spirit of those Leaders, whose object has always been Dominion and Power, that they have now openly renounced all Allegiance to the Crown, and all political Connection with this Country: They have ... presumed to set up their rebellious Confederacies for Independent States. If their Treason should be suffered to take Root, much Mischief must grow from it, to the Safety of my loyal Colonies, to the Commerce of my Kingsdom, and indeed to the present System of all Europe. One great Advantage, however, will be derived from the Object of the Rebels being openly avowed, and clearly understood; We shall have Unanimity at Home, founded in the general Conviction of the Justice and Necessity of our Measures."—Daily Advertiser (London), Nov. 1, 1776.

Before the end of the year the declaration prompted the publication of an extraordinary number of pamphlets by way of reply. One was entitled Strictures upon the Declaration of the Congress at Philadelphia; in a Letter to a Noble Lord, &c. (London, 1776). It has been proven that Thomas Hutchinson, former governor of Massachusetts, was the author. The position is taken that "there were men in each of the principal Colonies, who had Independence in view, before any of those Taxes were laid, or proposed, which have since been the ostensible cause of resisting the execution of Acts of Parliament. ... Their designs of Independence began soon after the reduction of Canada" (1776). The several paragraphs of the letter are stated, but each is warmly refuted.

The second pamphlet is entitled An Answer to the Declaration of the American Congress (1776). One John Lamb was hired by the British government to compose this rejoinder; it attracted much attention, and went into several editions. In the introduction it is stated that "The Declaration of the American Congress is an insult offered to every one who bears the name of Briton. For in considering the present contest between Great Britain and America, it is a truth which deserves our particular attention, and which therefore cannot be too often repeated, nor too strongly inculcated, that the dispute is not, nor never has it been between the mother and child. The one is clearly between one part of his subjects and another. The blow given by the Congress appears indeed to be levelled at his Majesty; but the wound was intended for us." Roberton records: "Last night the Rebels brought two pieces of ordnance on the Ferry one 2 & one 9 Pt. Early The GeoL would not allow the Grasshoppers to be fried—This day we brought up 2—12 Pt. & 2 Royal Howitzers near Deckers Ferry—The Rebels fired from a field piece at our Transports coming up the Narrows—the Asia return'd the fire & drove them off—all the troops landed—This Night a Sloop came in from Shrewsbury in the Jerseys w 66 men in Arms to join the Army; under Mr. Morris formerly an Offi. in the 47th Reg. laded the extended tools w the Cudgels—The Uraldiard Arrived laden with Provisions from the Loyalists at New York—Sev. People came in, in Boats from Long Island & the town—most horribly persecuted by the Rebels."—Robertson's Jour. (MS.). Kemble states that the men came in from Shrewsbury on July 6 (q. s.). See also Clap's Diary, in Hist. Mag., 3d ser., III: 137.

The arrival of the Continental forces arrives, "commanded by the Hon. Brigadier Generals Waterbury and Wadsworth, and this day the remainder are expected to arrive—2000 men." —Const. Gen., July 6, 1776.

The continental congress resolves "That the post master general be immediately to have expresses established between this city [Phila.] and New York, and that General Washington be desired to send off despatches to Congress every day." —Jour. Cont. Cong. (Ford ed.), IV: 522.

The president of congress, John Hancock, sends the declaration (the broadside printed by Dunlap—see Hazleton, op. cit., 170–71, 476) to the New York convention, with a letter in which he says: "The Congress, for some time past, have had their attention occupied by one of the most striking and important events that could possibly come before them, or any other assembly of men. Although it is not possible to foresee the consequences of human actions, yet it is nevertheless a duty we owe ourselves and posterity in all our public councils, to decide in the best manner we are able, and to give an account to that end, of all the things, to bring about his own determinations. Impressed with this sentiment, and at the same time fully convinced, that our affairs may take a more favorable turn, the Congress have judged it necessary to dissolve the connection between Great Britain and the American Colonies, and to declare them free and independent states as you will perceive by the enclosed Declaration, Which I am directed to transmit to you, and to request you will have it proclaimed at the head of the army, in the way you shall think most proper. "The important consequences to the American States from this Declaration of Independence, considered as the ground and foundation of a future Government, will naturally suggest the propriety of proclaiming it in such a manner that the people may be universally informed of it."—5 Am. Arch., I: 33. The original MS. of this letter, formally in the department of state, is now in the Library of Congress.—Hazleton, op. cit., 170, 614.

A remarkable Sunday, July 6th, 7th, & 8th. Nothing extraordinary, but the Coming in, on the evening of the 6th, about 58 Men from Shrewsbury, with Lieut. Morris. Observe the Rebels have fortified Governors Island very strongly, as well as Red Hook and the Heights to Brookline Ferry. Paulus' Hook likewise defensible, with an Encampment of about 900 Men on it. Are told they have 5,000 encamped on King's Bridge under the Command of Mifflin, and 3,000 at Col. Morris's [see June 13, 1775], tho' the leaders are very suspicious of the Majority of their army and don't rely on any but the New England Forces, about 7,000 Men."—N. Y. Hist. Soc. The new "levies" from Connecticut and New Jersey are daily arriving in New York.—Glover Correspond. (MS.), 154.

The Fleet, from Halifax, we informed our Readers in our last [see July 4] was arrived at Sandy-Hook, to the Amount of 133 Sails. This difficult, from this Situation to ascertain their Number, but we suppose it does not exceed 150 Sails." Here follows a report of each day's movements of ships for the past week, at the Narrows and about Staten Island, stating, in part, that "by Thursday [July 4] Noon the whole Fleet was at Anchor in a Line from Kill Van Kull to Simonson's Island to the East Side of Long Island, and in a Line with the Asia brought up the Rear of the Fleet, and in the Narrows was fired at from a small Battery on Long Island, which Complement was returned by about Twenty-four Pounders ... The new provincial congress of New York, meeting at White Plains, was actuated by a desire to hasten the Declaration of Independence in the 1776 following resolution, the delegates having been elected with authorit y to form a government for the "State of New York."

"In Convention of the Representatives of the State of New York, White Plains, July 9th, 1776."

Resolved unanimously, That the reasons assigned by the Continental Congress for declaring the United Colonies free and independent States, are cogent and conclusive; and that while we lament the cruel necessity which has rendered that measure unavoidable, we approve the same, and will, at the risk of our lives and fortunes, join with the other Colonies in supporting it.

"Resolved, That a copy of the said Declaration and the foregoing resolution be sent to the chairman of the committee of the county of Westchester, with orders to publish the same, with beat of drum, at this place on Thursday next; and to give directions that it be published with all convenient speed in the several districts within said county; and that copies thereof be forthwith transmitted to the other county Committees within the State of New York, with orders to cause the same to be published in the several districts of their respective counties . . ."

"Resolved, That the Delegates of this State in Continental Congress be and they hereby authorized to convene and adopt all such measures as they may deem conducive to the happiness and welfare of the United States of America."—Jour. Prov. Cong., I: 518. The resolution was written by John Jay.—Corresp. and Pub. Papers of John Jay, I: 72 (footnote).

The following announcement is issued by Washington from "Head Quarters:—" "The Honorable Continental Congress, impelled by the dictates of duty, policy & necessity, have been pleased to dissolve a connection which subsisted between this Country & Great Britain, & to declare the United Colonies of North America free & independent States.

"The several Brigades are to be drawn up this evening on their respective parades at 6 o'clock, when the Declaration of Congress, shewing the grounds & reasons of this measure is to be read with an audible voice. The General hopes this important point will serve as a fresh incentive to every Officer & Soldier to act with fidelity & courage, as knowing that now the peace & safety of this Country depends (under God) solely upon the success of our arms; and that he is now in the service of a State possessed of sufficient power to reward his merit, and advance him to the highest honor of a free Country.—Glazer. Contres., (M.S.), 1776."

This order is also found in the "Varick Transcript" of Washington's general orders, I: 508, in Lib. of Congress, which volume is attested by Col. Alexander Scammell, adjutant-general, as having been copied by John Stagg, assistant adjutant-general, of the continental army. The following bibliographical note is supplied by the Division of Manuscripts of the Library of Congress: "The "Varick Transcripts" were made by Richard Varick, by order of Gen. Washington, in 1781-3. The work was begun in 1781, and finished in 1783. The general orders were copied in the spring or summer of 1781. The exact date of this particular transcript is not easily ascertainable; but it was before the army left New York on its march south to Virginia, in June, 1781. Col. Scammell's attestation is in the end of the volume, which covers the dates July 3, 1775, to Sept. 30, 1776, and was made prior to July 1, 1781. He was killed at Yorktown. The original orderly-book, from which this Varick transcript was made, is in the possession of the Library of Congress. See also Hazleton, Declaration of Independence (1906), 242.

The order is also found in the orderly-book of Capt. Lunt's company, kept by Nathaniel Mitchell, of Newburyport, Mass., owned by the late Joseph T. Brown, of New Rochelle, N. Y. To this order above added, in this orderly-book, which, when the book was owned by Mr. Brown, was copied as follows by Mr. Victor H. Pollits, to show the manner in which the declaration was distributed to the American army in New York: "The Brigade Majors are to receive at the Adjutant Gen' office Several of the Declaration to be delivered to the Brigadiers and Col of Reg'n the Brigade Majors are Excud from further attendance at Head Quarters Except to receive Orders of the Day that their time and attention may be withdrawn as little as Possible from the duties of their respective Brigades."

Win. Smith (now at Haverstraw) records in his diary: "My Brother John brought me this Day the printed Renunciation of the British Govt in Future. He says . . . That the New York Delegates did not declare any opinion upon this great Point for Want of Instructions—That Virginia Peninsulav Massachusets & Connecticut hesitated at first for a previous Settlement respecting their Limits—a Circumstance that have alarmed N Y and in which they should have joined to restrain the Aridity & Claims of the New England Colonies." Smith then ventures a prophecy which corresponds so closely to actual occurrences as to seem almost uncanny: "I think it now most probable that the Terms expected by Lord Howe, and which I suppose will be similar to those suggested by Lord Drummond, will be unfavorably rejected—That France will tamper with the Colonies tho' she will not declare for them till Great Britain is exhausted & that then those Domestic Quarrels may inkindle an European War—that this Province will become the main theatre of the civil connections of America in consequence of the access by Hudson's River & the Lakes—That opposition at Home will be compelled to fly or attempt to raise the collective Body in this Defence, & this is Reason to fear when Great Britain & France have worried each other, that a Peace may be patched up by a Partition of the Provinces.

"It strikes my Attention with some Amazement that the Declaration of the 4th Ins contains no Vindication from the Charge of having imposed Taxation without the Consent of & & & that Great Britain & France have partly wounded other, that a Peace may be patched up by a Partition of the Provinces.

"If the Peers Sufferings & Losses of the Nation create Troubles at Home and a Change of Men and Measures the two Countries may still be reconciled, but with great Advantages to America & this perhaps is the best Event the Empire can wish for—I dread France—She will be guided only by Motives of Interest—No Promises will bind her—She will perceive it more advantageous to her ambition to ferment our animosities, than hastily to plunge into a War. She will deceive both Parties that her Ends may be atchieved at our Expense."—Win. Smith's Diary (M.S.), V.

The Declaration of Independence is read "at the Head of each Brigade after which a part of the 80 Psalm was sang, and then Mr. Leonard made Prayers, after which the whole Brigade gave three Cheers."—From "Diary of Ensign Caleb Clap," in Hist. Mag., 1776, III: 117-18; T. Packer, June 11, 1776, Memoirs of Maj-Gen. Heath (1798), 390. The N. Y. Merc., July 15, 1776, is in error in giving Wed, July 10, as the date of this event. See also Gen. Webb's Correspondence, etc., I: 153. Benson J. Lossing states: "The brigades were formed in hollow squares on their respective parades. The venerable Zachariah Greene (commonly known as 'Parson Greene,' the father-in-law of Mr. Thompson, historian of Long Island, yet (1852) living at Hemstead, at the age of ninety-three years, informed me that he belonged to the brigade, then encamped on the 'Common,' where the City Hall now stands. The hollow square was formed at about the spot where the Park Fountain now is. He says Washington was within the square, on horseback, and that the Declaration was read in a clear voice by one of his aids. When it was concluded, three hearty cheers were given."—Pictorial Field Book of the Revolution (1852), III: 801.

Washington, writing to John Hancock, the president of congress, on July 10, acknowledging the receipt of the president's letter of July 6 (p.o.) (which contained a copy of the declaration and the request that it be proclaimed at the head of the army), says: " . . . Agreeably to the request of Congress, I caused the Declaration to be proclaimed before all the army under my immediate command; and have the pleasure to inform them, that the measure seemed to have their most hearty assent; the expressions and behavior, both of officers and men, testifying their warmest approbation of it. . . ."—Writings of Geo. Washington (Ford ed.), IV: 225.

At about this time was published the well-known and very interesting xylographic leaf found by Mr. Henry Stevens in 1870, and now belonging to the New York Public Library, Spencer Collection. This leaf, which measures 13 1/8 inches, represents "the people and island which have been discovered by the Christian King of Portugal or by his subjects" (Brazil, visited by Vespuccius in 1501). It has a German inscription taken for the most part from the first German edition of the Mundus Novus, prepared by Vespuccius, which suggests the possibility that it was drawn by Vespuccius on his voyage in 1501-2. This very important block-leaf is in all probability the earliest view of America and the American Indians. Only one other copy is known— that owned by the Königliche Hof- und Staats-bibliothek at Munich.

The print is fully described, and its origin and significance discussed, in a monograph by Mr. Eames, published in a folio edition of seven copies in 1920.

The John Carter Brown Library contains a unique map of the world showing the New World discoveries as well as the name America. This map, which was brought to light by Mr. Henry N. Stevens, shortly after 1900, is described in his Pedley's Geography, p. 15, as "evidently an earlier impression of the one found in the 1513 Strasburg Pedley," and was, Mr. Stevens thinks, "prepared by Waldseemüller at St. Dié prior to 1507 for the then projected edition of Pedley, but not used."

In this year appeared the first issue of Pedley to contain American maps, and a separate chapter on the American discoveries. The well-known Ruyssch map of the world is supposed to have been prepared for this atlas, although it is occasionally found bound up with the 1507 edition.

1513

In this year, Dei Commentarii Del Viaggio in Persia . . . Et Dello Scopimento dell' Isola Frislanda, Isola, Eguaguelanda, Estalunday & Itaria was published in Venice. It contained the first printed narrative of the voyages of Nicolò and Antonio Zeno to the west, and a map, said to have been reproduced from a contemporary chart left by them, of their discoveries in the last decade of the fourteenth century. —Church Catalogue, No. 110. For an account of the Zeno travels and a discussion regarding the authenticity of this work, see 1513.

The map referred to in Vol. II, p. 15, footnote 44, as reproduced in Remarkable Maps, Part I, No. 13, and given in outline on C. Pl. 17, Vol. II, is, I believe, one of the six (?!) folio sheets of a fine, large map of the world which I saw last summer (1921) in the possession of Mr. Chadenat, the Paris book-seller. This map, of which no other copy is known, is dated (?) 1560. Mr. Chadenat assigns it to Gastaldi, and considers it to constitute the first modern world atlas, antedating that of Ortelius by a decade. —See II: 14. This map differs materially from Gastaldi's well-known maps of 1546 (C. Pl. 17 and Remarkable Maps, Part IV) and 1556 (C. Pl. 14 and Ramusius, Vol. III), the latter of which is evidently taken from the same original as the map of Tierra Nueva in the 1548 Ptolemy. It seems, therefore, likely that it is based on data obtained or adopted by Gastaldi after the publication of his earlier maps. It is clearly more suggestive of the Verrazzano than of the Rhétero type.

On this day, Drake held a service for the Indians at Albion, the present San Francisco Bay, perhaps the first Protestant service held on C. S. soil. This day is shown, although not named, on the "Silver Map," issued probably in 1581, to commemorate Drake's circumnavigation of the globe. —The World encompassed by Sir Francis Drake, etc. (London, 1628), reprinted by Halskuyt Soc., 1854; Miller Christy, The Silver Map of the World (1900).

"The student of American colonial history of the seventeenth century is likely to be frequently perplexed by a confusion (and sometimes by an apparent contradiction) of dates unless he understands and keeps in mind the differences between the 'old style' and the 'new style' calendars. The ordinary year represents the mean time required for the earth to pass over its orbit around the sun. This passage requires 365 days, 5 hours, 48 minutes, 46.6 seconds. As only whole days can be counted in measuring the ordinary or civil year, the fractional parts of the day make a difference between the civil and the solar periods. To remedy this difference and to secure uniformity in time-reckoning, Julius Caesar decreed (B.C. 46) that the year should consist of 365 days and 6 hours, that the 6 hours should be disregarded for three successive years, and that an entire day should be added to every fourth year. This day is called the intercalary day and the year to which it is added the bissextile or leap year. Such was the origin of the Julian calendar. Dates reckoned according to the Julian calendar are called 'old style' abbreviated to O.S. The old style is still used in the Russian Empire. [The revolutionary government adopted the New Style in 1918.]

"But the addition of the intercalary day made the average Julian year a little more than eleven minutes longer than the solar year and, by 1582, the cumulative error of the calendar was about ten days. In the year 1525, the council of Nice, the first of the ecumenical councils of the Christian church, had determined when Easter should be observed. In 1582, all fixed ecclesiastical observances were falling ten days behind their proper seasons. To correct this error and to remove the consequent confusion, Pope Gregory XIII decreed that the fifth day of October, 1582, should be called the fifteenth. This suppression of ten days restored the vernal equinox to the twenty-first of March, the date on which it occurred at the time of the council of Nice, and thus brought into their proper seasons the fixed festivals of the church. To guard against future errors, it was decreed that years ending with two ephers should not be leap years except when the number is an exact multiple of 400. Such was the origin of the Gregorian calendar, the error of which is only one day in about five thousand years. Dates reckoned according to the Gregorian calendar are called 'new style', abbreviated to N.S. From 1582 to 1700, the difference between the old style and the new was ten days. The year 1700 being a leap year in the Julian calendar and a common year in the Gregorian calendar, the two styles differed, in the eighteenth century, by eleven days.

"Most Catholic countries adopted the Gregorian calendar soon after it was established. Great Britain, however, continued to use the Julian calendar until 1752. At that time the dates of the Julian
THE ICONOGRAPHY OF MANHATTAN ISLAND

1504 calendar were eleven days behind the dates of the Gregorian calendar. To secure uniformity in dates and time-reckonings, the British parliament decreed that eleven days should be stricken from the calendar and that the day following the second day of September, 1752, should be called the fourteenth. Prior to this time, the official English year began the twenty-fifth of March, Lady Day or Annunciation, so-called from the common belief that the incarnation of Christ was announced to the Virgin Mary by the angel Gabriel on that day (Luke, i, 26-33). In reckoning the months, March was called the first and February the twelfth, September, October, November, and December thus having the numerical rank indicated by their names. At the time of the correction of the British calendar in 1752, the beginning of the official year was changed, from the twenty-fifth of March to the first of January to conform to the common usage of the greater part of Christendom—a change that had been partly anticipated by writing dates from the first of January to the twenty-fourth of March inclusive as follows: January S., 1704-05, or January 8, 1704/5. As usual, English law was conformed to English custom.—Avery, Hist. of the U. S., II: xxxi—xxxii. See also Sept. 3/14, 1752.

The Expedition Francis Drashi in Indian Occidentals, published at Leyden in this year (Church Catalogue, No. 1134) contains four large folding views, one of which, St. Augustine, is the earliest known view of a North American city. The author's collection contains a copy of this rare view.

During this and the following year, Robert Dudley cruised with three ships in the West Indies, and on his return to England, while sailing the coast from Florida to Newfoundland, about April 15, 1595, was in 40° 10' N.L., "160 leagues distant by the great circle from the island of Bermuda, . . . counting 20 leagues to a degree," as recorded in the route of Abram Kendall, master of Dudley's flagship, the "Great Bear," in the Arcana del Mare, Book II, chap. v. p. 12. This account, as well as Dudley's own journal, printed in Hakluyt's Voyages, III, 1594, on the account of Capt. Wyatt, are all given, with explanatory notes, in The Voyage of Robert Dudley in the West Indies, 1594-1595, published by the Hakluyt Society. See also description of C. Pl. 35, 26, 37, Vol. II.

Samuel de Champlain left Seville in January, 1599, on the "armament of the King of Spain, which was accustomed to go every year to the Indies," and spent three years in the West Indies, Central America, and Mexico. On his return, he sailed along the east coast of Florida, and, having sighted the Bermudas, reached Seville in March. In 1602 several Merchants of Holland set out 17 Armadures for to seize, plunder and make prize of all Spanish ships and vessels in the West Indies or to burn and destroy any of the Spanish towns and villages in those parts, and for the better effecting their designe they received liberty of Queen Elizabeth to loan some harbour about the Island Manhattan, &c., betwixt the degree of 40 and 41 where they could finde the most convenient places for their cleaning and refitting their ships, here they built a large magazine for their purpose which they fortified with four bastions and called the place Stains Isle, settled 5 factories, one there, the 2nd on the south west point of the Manhattan Isle, where since was built New Amsterdam, a 3rd on a point of land called Paula Hook, where they drove a very considerable trade with the Native Indians for several sorts of Furs, and made bold with the Queens Grace, so far that they began a Colony there and called it New Netherland, and in the year 1605 forced an English ship under the Command of our Capt. Smith to strike to the States flag, which King James, there being a princeable prince, so considered that he despatched Sir Samuel Argal to sail thither with five men of war to destroy the said Colony, which was accordingly effected, and they engaged never to plant there again, and yet the West India Company of Holland in the year 1626 began a Colony there a second time, having made their post so strong in the English Court that they were not disturbed till the year 1664, at which time, such was the general complaint of the English Merchant, and also of the English Planters that live under their government, that although there was peace betwixt the Majesties of Great Britain and the States of the United Provinces, His Majesty commissioned Colonell Richard Nichols and some other gentleemen to dispossession the West India Company of the said Colony and to incorporate it into the English Monarchy as soon as the said ships arrived the Governor and Inhabitants quietly surrendered themselves and became subjects of England under the Government of His Highness the Duke of York."—From a MS. of c. 1675 in the author's collection.

The material regarding Hudson's voyage was in print before the author saw a copy of Naber's book on the voyage of the "Half Moon," issued by Niijhoff in 1621 as Vol. XIX of the Luchschoten Society publications, and entitled Henry Hudson's reis onder Nederlandsche Vlag van Amsterdam naar Nova Zembla, Amerika en terug naar Dariamth in England. Volgens het jaartal van Robert Jaet uitgegeven door S. P. L'heonere Naber. It is a satisfaction to note that Naber's conclusions are, in general, the same as those reached by the author, and outlined in Vol. II of the Iconographie, published in 1916, and developed in more detail in the present volume.

"In 1619—one year before the Pilgrim Fathers came to the land named New England by Captain John Smith—Sir Edwin Sands, president of the Virginia Company in old England, moved the grant of ten thousand acres of land for the establishment of a university at Henrico [in Virginia]. The proposed grant which was duly made, included one thousand acres for an Indian college; the remainder was to be 'the foundation of a seminary of learning for the English.' The very same year the bishops of England, at the suggestion of the King, raised the num of fifteen hundred pounds for the encouragement of Indian education. Thus, by the combined authority of church and state, was anticipated by more than two centuries the endowment of such institutions as are now represented by the Hampton School and by the University of Virginia."—Adams, The College of William and Mary, II.

In this year, Nicolaas van Wassenaer began the publication in Amsterdam of the Historisch Verhaal, or, "Historical Account of all the most Remarkable Events which have happened in Europe," etc. The first volume covered the months from Jan. to June, 1621, its preface being dated Aug. 30, 1621. Frederick Muller's catalogue of May 18, 1680 (item 1128) describes under the date 1680-84 two manuscripts (21-pages), one on the occupation of New Netherland by the West India Co., the other on the South (Delaware) River and the capture of Fort Casmir by the Swedes, bought by Westerman & Co., New York.

Frederick Muller's catalogue of the Van Cleef collection, sold Dec. 19, 1872 (item 1909), describes an "autograph letter signed P. Courten concerning New Netherland (1626)." Endicott arrives in New England and lays the foundation of the settlement at Salem, which lay within the grant obtained by him and his associates on March 4, 1626, and which extended from a point three miles north of the Merrimac to a point three miles south of the Charles River, and from the Atlantic to the Pacific. On March 4, 1629, a royal charter was granted, creating a corporation under the legal style of "The Governor and Company of Massachusetts Bay in New England." Six small ships were fitted out, and sailed under the command of Francis Higginson, with 300 men, 80 women, 16 children, 140 head of cattle, 40 goats, and
The Charter of Freedoms and Exemptions, granted by the West India Co. to those who will plant colonies in New Netherland, bears this date. It reads, in part (translated):

“Freedoms and Exemptions for the patroons, masters or private persons who will plant any colonies in, and send cattle to New Netherland, drawn up for the benefit of the General West India Company in New Netherland and for the profit of the patroons, masters and private persons.

I. Such participants of the said Company as may be inclined to plant any colonies in New Netherland shall be permitted to send, in the ships of this Company going thither, three or four persons to inspect the situation of the country, provided that they, with the officers and ship's company, swear to the Articles, so far as they relate to them, pay for board and passage, going and coming, six shillings a day (such as desire to mess in the cabin to pay 12 shillings) and agree to give assistance like others, in cases offensive and defensive . . . .

III. But they [patroons] are warned that the Company reserves to itself the island of the Manhattes . . .

XII. It shall also be permitted to aforesaid patroons, all along the coast of New Netherlands and places circumjacent, to trade their goods, products of that country, for all sorts of merchandises they may have there, excepters, otters, minks and all sorts of peltry, which trade alone the Company reserves to itself. But permission for even this trade is granted at places where the Company has no agent, on the condition that such traders must bring all the peltry they may be able to secure to the island of the Manhattes, if it is in any way practicable, and there deliver them to the director, to be by him sent hither with the ships and goods . . .

XVI. Whosoever shall settle any colonies outside of the limits of Manhattes Island must satisfy the Indians of that place for the land and may enlarge the limits of their colonies if they settle a proportionate number of colonists thereon . . .

XXXI. The Company promises to finish the fort on the island of the Manhattes, and to put it in a posture of defense without delay. And to have these Freedoms and Exemptions approved and confirmed by their High Majesties the Lords States General.”

Magsoi Brothers’ catalogue No. 412 (1914) contains a description of a series of 28 MS. maps (18 by 28 inches), drawn by Jodo Teixeira, cosmographer of the King of Portugal, signed and dated Lisbon, 1630. Inserted before the Portuguese title are two blank leaves, with the following inscription in Spanish on the first leaf:

“General Maps, Original and Universal of the Whole World, Together with the Principal Ports and Fortresses of Both Indies, and a Topographical Description of the Australian Magellanic Region, in the Year 1630. Offered to the King Our Lord, in His Supreme and Royal Council of the Indies, by Captain Don Francisco de Seixas y Lorena, Elected Chief Alcalde and Governor of the Province of Tacuba in the Kingdom of New Spain, for His Majesty; the President of that Council Being His Excellency the Marquis de Los Velez, Gentleman of His Majesty’s Bedchamber, and of His Councils of State and War, and chief Intendant of All the Maritime Armadas of the Monarchy. Presented on Behalf of the Governor by Don Manuel Garcia de Bustante.”

The second leaf has the following dedication (translated):

Firstly, On the First Map the Portuguese Show the Demarcation of the Conquests Between the Two Crowns (of Portugal and Spain).

This is the Map which the Portuguese Usually Show at the Congresses which Have Taken Place and Take Place Between Castile and Portugal. In Order to Cheat the Spanish Ministers the Portuguese Ministers Make Use of this Map, Because in this Said Map the Portuguese Have Introduced a Decree and Have Taken Away the Land of Brazil 100 Leagues More to the East from Where it Ought to Be. By This Means they Include in their Demarcation the Rio de la Plata, to which They Have No Right. Because in the Distance which There is from the Implied Boundaries to the Coast of Malagueta, in Guinea, on the Scale of that Map there are 410 Leagues Distance from One Coast to the Other. And So the Portuguese, by Showing this Map, Towards the West they Urp the Said 100 Leagues in Brazil by Cape Saint Vincent Constituting the Meridian of 360 Degrees from the Equator They Take Away More Than 8 Degrees Because These Said 8 Degrees Should be More to the East, and Also it is Seen Distinctly in this First Map that they Show the Coast of Brazil, which in the Fifth Map they Show Differently (From the Cape of Saint Augustin of Guinea and Malagueta, the Said 410 [sic] Leagues) and the Second Map Shows a Greater Distance, with Little Difference Between the Two Coasts, Because the Map which is Called Second Map is the One which is in this Book of the Demarcations Between the two Crowns, while the First is Suppressed; and the One which is Called Second is Really the Fifth Map of this Book in which the Portuguese Place the Coast of Brazil and Ethiopia Africa where they Really Should Be.

This Truth is Easily Seen Because the Distance which there is from the Rio de La Plata to the Cape of Good Hope in the First Map is 1,100 Leagues, and in the Second Map (the Fifth in this Book) the Portuguese Show that there are 1,200 Leagues from the Rio de La Plata to the Cape of Good Hope, which with the Difference of 100 Leagues Already Mentioned Have been Urpmed by the Portuguese in their Demarcation of the Rio de La Plata, which is Really 100 Leagues Outside their Line of Demarcation.

This is Manifest by the Said Maps which Have been Made by the Best Men Whom the Crown of Portugal Could Find, and by its Orders, and which Was Kept with All Possible Safeguards as a Book of Original Maps in the Library of the City and Royal Archives of Lisbon, whence in 1651, to Serve His Majesty, Captain Don Francisco Seixas y Lorena Removed it to Serve His Majesty (Using Intelligences and Money) and He Found its Importance for the Crown of Spain, Because it is an Original and Has the Maps of All the World and is Written Truly and by Hand. Nothing of it Has Been Printed Up to the Present Day, Moreover it Must Have Cost More Than 4,000 Silver Crowns to Make, and Many of It were Spent in Making it, and for which, After the Revolt of Portugal, its Owner, Don Geronimo de Ataíade, was Rewarded with One of the Highest Ranks of that Kingdom, He Who Had Before Been the Commander of the Naval Armadas of the East Indies.

With this Book Captain Don Francisco de Seixas y Lorena Began to Serve His Majesty, in His Royal and Supreme Council of the Indies. At the Time the President was the Marques de Los Velez. The Book was Presented by Don Manuel Garcia de Bustamente, of His Majesty’s Council, and Secretary.

“End of the Same Book is a Map of the Coast and Islands of the Australian Magellanic Region, which Don Francisco de Seixas Has Made from His Practical and Theoretical Observations.

The Contents of this Book have Been Given in Order that His Majesty May Use it in the Congresses Against Portugal, and

Moreover the Royal Council of the Indies May Keep this Original so as to Resolve their Doubts on Many Points when People pretend to Know what is Certain. In this Way the Truth Will be Known and His Majesty will Be Better Served, which is Desirable both in Small and Great Monarchies.

This important and interesting collection apparently forms a complete cosmography of the world, as known in 1630. (The catalogue descriptions are printed entirely in capitals.)

About this time Cornelis van Vorst returned with his family from New Netherland, which by our people has been founded in the Virginias; and about March, being again engaged to settle a new colony (plactae), he sailed there with his wife and children. — Arnoldus Buchelius, in "Koloniae Aanwisten," 2128, fol. 140 recto, in Rijksarchief at The Hague.

"Cornelius van Voorst till this time has been delayed by his masters at Amsterdam, while at the same time his wife and children were deemed to have already arrived in the Virginias [New Netherland]. He would follow with two ships." — Arnoldus Buchelius, in "Koloniae Aanwisten," 2128, fol. 110 verso, in Rijksarchief at The Hague.

According to a "certain new ship" which was at this time being built (see p. 77), the records reveal neither its name nor size. The Dutch West Indies Co. owned at different times, between 1621 and 1636, three ships named "New Netherlands," of 110, 150, and 400 last burden, respectively. — De Laet, in "Jaarleijck Verheft" (1644), mentions under date of Aug., 1631, a ship "Nieuw-Nederland," and under Sept. (same page) also a yacht "Nieuw-Nederland," possibly the same vessel. In the fleet of the company three ships of 300 lasts are recorded. — De Laet, "Jaarleijck Verheft" (1644), Appendix, entitled "Kort Verhaal," p. 7. We know that, of the three ships of the name, one was a "great ship." It could not have been the ship "New Netherland" which "was equipped in the spring" of 1642—a vessel of only 150 lasts (260 tons), "whereof Cornelis Jacobsz. May of Hoorn was skipper, and which was given over the first (C) colony." — Wansener, "Historiek Verhael," in Jameison's "Nav. N. Neth.," 75, N.Y. Col. Docs., I: 149. Moreover, De Vries, himself an able skipper, saw the ship "in the beginning." He wrote that, on July 12, 1631, there arrived at Coves from the Texel "the ship: Nieuw-Nederland," of the West India Company, a great ship which was built in New Netherland, which was bound for the West Indies, whereby I had [meaning with his own ship] a good company, — "Korte Historie" (Aldmaer, 1653), 96. Also, on April 2, 1632, John Mosco wrote, probably to Secretary Coke, a report of what the Hollander had done by way of setting in the territory claimed by Great Britain. He declared they had "built ships and men of war. Johan van Vorst was sent into these parts with 77 ships last and 400 last, or thereabouts," and he said this was done on the "river of Manhata." — N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 17. See also March, 1633, and Nov. 22, 1635. From the foregoing evidence it seems a safe assumption that the "great ship" was the one classed officially by De Laet as of 420 lasts (800 tons).

In the Representation of July 28, 1649, one of the complaints against the company was the "great expense" for unecessary things, among them the building of the ship "New Netherland," which was placed "in the beginning:" — Jameison, op. cit., 321.

In the year 1631, the ship "Nieuw-Nederland" was captured and carried into Dunkirk. — Van Rensselar Boston Manuscripts, 266, 275. What her subsequent fate was is unknown. Cf., however, N. Y. Col. Docs., XIV: 119 (Feb. 16, 1660).

On Aug. 26, 1629, "twelve gentlemen, among the most eminent in the Parliamert, held a meeting at Cambridge, England, and referred the question to New England, and provided the charter of the Massachusetts Bay Company, and the government established under it, could be transferred to that country." This resolution was the direct result of the intolerable situation brought about by the meddling disposition and wrong-headed obstinacy of Charles I., who, after getting the king's unsafe assurance, in June, 1628, to grant the famous Petition of Right,—a situation which resulted in the king's protracted experiment of governing without a parliamert. No obstacle being raised to the removal to America of the government of the Mass. Bay Co., John Winthrop was selected as the head of government. — Thomas Dudley, the leader of the expedition sailed in April, 1630, on the " Arboretum," and on June 13 landed at Salem. Before Christmas of that year, 17 ships, carrying over 1,000 passengers, had arrived in New England, and soon after the new colonists were engaged in starting settlements at Charlestown, Boston, Newtown, Watertown, Roxbury, and Dorchester. — Winthrop's Journals, (1790), 1:21; Fuller, The Beginning of New Eng., 93 et seq.

On Aug. 25, 1631, because of the unhealthfulness of Charlestown, John Winthrop and a number of colonists move across the Charles River, and settle at a place called by the Indians Shawmut. The colonists changed its name to Trimmountain, but, on Sept. 4, the court at Charlestown decreed that it be called Boston. — The earliest mention of this State by that name was, apparently, one found in a patent of the island granted on this date to Michael Pauw. The name was derived from the states-general, and followed upon the Charter of Freedoms and Exemptions of June 7, 1629, art. v. — N. Y. Col. Docs., XIII: 2; Van Rensselaer Bosvier MSS., 159-60.

Secretary Servatius Carpentier writes from Olinda de Pernambuco to the directors of the West India Co., chamber of Zealand: "The yacht den Bruynsichi, as it bore private instructions, I again despatched immediately on the 3d instant, sending with it 20 men and 30 women, negroes, who were captured in the last prize, and who, if he was necessary to convey the said blacks to Pavoria. . . . The instructions as to the coast of Africa and Pavoria it had carried out as desired." — Records of Old West India Co., No. 49, with Letters and Papers of Brazil, 1620-1632, in National Archives, The Hague.

"Cornelius van Voorst is in his colony across the River, outside of the jurisdiction of the Governor, with whom he can not get on very well. This colony, the lord of Tichlove, Pauw, at Amsterdam has furnished with all necessaries and he is eius fidei quidam lapidarius dominus.

"Johan van Voorst, a clever little fellow of fourteen years sailed this summer, 1631, to [join his father] in the colony of Pavoria. It is a pity that he should not be better employed, and educated for a more civilized life, for in those places nothing but barbarism is found." — Arnoldus Buchelius, in "Koloniae Aanwisten," 2128, fol. 111 verso, in Rijksarchief at The Hague.

Then, without a break, but evidently entered at a later date [1625, p. 4], follows: "Johan, coming hither with a ship from New Netherland and arriving in England, was detained there more than four months and arrived at Amsterdam in principii Juli, new style. With [the same ship, the Eendrecht—as Apr. 5, 1631] came also all the authorities, governor director, secretary, minister, not being able to get along together very well and other arrangements will be made. Niefen [little cousin, evidently referring to Jan van Vorst] brought a letter from his father and cousin van Wyckersloot, in which he sent us and other relatives greetings and wrote that his son Hendrick had sailed as Assistant around the north [am de noorden, meaning, perhaps, up the Hudson, or along the Conn. and Mass. coast]; that he was no longer in his service, but must make some trips (maar moest beste waarhagen), and that he was reasonably proficient in the language [of the savages]." — Ibid.

Then, again without a break, follows some news about Brazil, and then this: "From New Netherland or the Virginias there come several thousand bearer and otter skins. Jan van Voorst, Cornelis' son, having come with the ship from New Netherland or Vergine, was detained all summer in England. He came over in June and brought a letter from his father and two eagle's talons and a sea spider (seaspinne). The officers there not being able to get along together, they all came back and other arrangements will be made, in order that the new colony may be better managed and promoted, as otherwise through their mismanagement (disordre) it would be entirely ruined. As the ships stayed away long beyond the usual period, the colonists there suffered greatly for want of grain and other necessaries which they expected from Holland." — Ibid.

It will be noticed that Buchelius states in one place that Johan van Vorst arrived at Amsterdam in the beginning of July and in another that he was detained all summer in England and came over in June. According to Eelkoff, Michalissieu appeared before the Amsterdam Consistory on March 4, 1632. It is not unlikely therefore that Johan van Vorst was detained in England from the first of February to the end of March when he arrived at Amsterdam in the beginning of July, as stated. — See also 1650.
1611 Addenda. The foregoing translations from Buchelius's notes were made by Mr. Van Lwec. The translations which were used in the text prove to have been somewhat carelessly made.

Feb. 5-15 Roger Williams arrives at Boston from England. On April 12, he became teacher in the Salem church. He was the first in America or Europe to proclaim the doctrine of full religious toleration; holding that the state should leave matters of religious opinion and worship to the conscience of the individual, and confine government to secular affairs.—Winthrop's Jour., II, 57, 61-62; Bancroft, Hist. of the U. S., I, 241-42.

— In this year, the erection of the first church in Boston was commenced.—Winthrop's Jour., I, 89.

— Johan van Voorst, youthful son of Cornelis van Voorst, manager of the colony of Poyanoia, doubtless in this year returned to Holland on the "Eendracht" (see April 5, 1632), as described by Arnoldus Buchelius in a note which, because of its close connection with other earlier items, has been printed under 1631 (p. v.). This note contains the important but hitherto unknown information that "On the same ship also arrived all the magistracy—the director-governor [Peter Minuit], the secretary [Johan van Remmude], and the clergyman [Jonas Michiach],—"Koloniaal Aanwinsten," 212 B, fol. 111 verso, in Rijkarchief at the Hague.

Mar. 10-19 The added connection to Buchelius narrates: "As ships were detained longer than usual, the colonists there [in New Netherland] suffered greatly for want of wheat and other necessaries, which they expect from Holland."

Apr. 16 De Vries arrives before Fort Amsterdam—Korte Historial, 115. Hendrick de Forest sailed with De Vries, but left him at St. Martyn, and entered the service of the West India Co.—De Forest, A Walloon Family in Am., II, 353; Van Rensselaer Boerier Manuscript, 197. He may have secured his grant from Van Twiller shortly after this time. — Cf. Sept. 11, 1636.

June 16 In a memorial drawn up by the Amsterdam chamber of the West India Company, at the request of the States of Holland, and presented on June 16, 1633, to the states general, for their information in connection with the discussion of colonial questions at the peace negotiations then entered upon between Spain and the Netherlands, the directors state in regard to New Netherland:

"This part, which according to the climate [read: latitude], ought to be as warm and suitable for the cultivation of fruit as the extreme limits of France, toward Spain, is in fact almost colder than these, yea, even more northerly countries, so that the people sent thither by us have thus far been able to find but barely enough food to live and have not been a source of profit, but of detriment to the Company. It is true, the trade in pelts which is conducted there, is advantageous, but one year with another it can at the most bring home but between fifty and sixty thousand guilders" (in de veijftich duytgen guilders, or fully fifty thousand guilders).—From Handlenghe met die van d'andere zijde 1632/33/34, in National Archives, The Hague; pub. by Dr. M. G. de Boer, in Historisch Genootschap te Utrecht, Bijdragen en Mededelingen, 1899, 542.

Nov. 25 A memorial of this date, addressed by Kiliaen van Rensselaer to the Assembly of the XIX of the W. I. Co. (from Van Rensselaer-Boerier MSS., 235, citing Letter Book, 141-538; printed in Dutch in Oud Holland, 1895, VIII: 55-69, as Appendix A to Mr. De Roever's articles on the colony of Rensselaerswyck), shows clearly the various selfish interests at work within the company from the very beginning, and their serious effect upon the prosperity of New Netherland. It reads (translated, footnotes being inserted in brackets):

Noble, Honorable, Wise, Prudent and Very Discreet Gentlemen: Kiliaen van Rensselaer, in the capacity of patron of his respective colonies situated within the jurisdiction of New Netherland, shows with all due reverence how he, the remonstrant, formerly director of said Company and commissioner of the aforesaid regions, found the affairs of New Netherland in the beginning of his administration, namely, that sundry colonists, as early as 1623, had been conveyed thither with instructions to dwell there as free persons and to carry on trade, principally in the furs abounding in that country. And considering that the country was not only very fertile, but actually fruitful and highly productive, all without restriction, the fur-bearings animals would be too much hunted and the furs would be sold here below their value, to both the damage and the loss of the Company, which had as yet no other source of income from those regions to meet the expenses connected therewith, he therefore so influenced his fellow commissioners that they deemed it advisable to curtail this trade somewhat for a time; in the meanwhile planning how the Company, according to the charter, might settle the said regions at the least expense and with the greatest benefit to the country, considering that the same is a subservient and fertile land, situated from about 35° to 45° north latitude, being provided with an extraordinarily fine climate and many beautiful, deep rivers, embracing within its limits more land and coast, sea and river than all the seventeen provinces of the Netherlands, from all of which, in time, much good may result to the Company; being, moreover, an excellent rendezvous for all ships, which can arrive there in 14 days from the West Indies, and being also well adapted for raising all kinds of grain and animals which could thence be sent here or at least within other limits of the charter, as Cape Verde, Guinea and Brazil. Following this, it was found good, with the advice of the Assembly of the Nineteen, to send a large number of farmers, animals, horses, cows, sheep and other necessaries, in order thus to relieve the Company of the heavy expense of transporting all sorts of provisions needed by the people in that land. This intention was diametrically opposed to the views of those who had no other aim than to send their ships here to trade in the aforesaid places, notwithstanding that it was clearly pointed out to them that such trading could bring no profit to the Company but rather decided damage and continual loss, since the amount of furs coming thence—seeing that the trading places are so distant from each other—could bear no heavy outlay; besides, that other nations of adjoining regions, when our ships should be away from there, would immediately seize and occupy these and keep us out, as they now do in Virginia, Canada, New England and elsewhere.

"Now when the aforesaid farmers and animals had been sent thither and when, as is generally the case with new undertakings, everything did not succeed at first as might be wished, certainly not nearly so well but that the contrary minded could find occasion for fault-finding, the Company proceeded after this fashion: on the one hand, since there were now farmers and animals, they decided that little or no provision should be sent, not restraining that it was too time to clear the land before it can be plowed or cultivated and that in the beginning several horses and cows perished which they would not replace, whereby the people were forced to take the merchandise and trade it for provisions, thus damaging the Company to an incalculable number of pence; on the other hand, the Company having an ordinary freighter [een ordinairi vreeman] of large hold which would need to sail only once a year, they have sent usually two, three and more small vessels, so overloaded with skippers, officers, provisions and ammunition that the three together could not take in hale as much for the country as the larger alone [while the latter would have cost [much more] than each of the small vessels to view of the fact that usually many people sail back and forth who could man the large ship but would overload the small ones, which error has cost the Company no less than the other.

"By these means and many others, too long to be here related, the condition of New Netherland continuously deteriorating, all the blame was laid mainly to the account of those who favored the colonization, and especially to the commissioners for that region, who to clear themselves asserted that they were willing to undertake the colonization at their own expense and without cost to the Company, if the Company would only save the matter a little and render some assistance and that they would make no objection and would be satisfied if all participants should be thereunto invited and public freedoms and exemptions framed concerning it. This proposition, though as just as anything in the world can be, nevertheless met with great difficulty before it could be brought about. The contrary minded, seeing that they could no longer prevent it directly, began indirectly under pretext of economy to curtail these freedoms, finding no other way than to exclude the fur trade, which had formerly been granted to others who had been sent there and were supported by the Company, asserting that this colonization had no other intent than to lay the expenses to the Company’s charge and have the trade in furs away from it, which was pure calumny, as the following will clearly show, since several of the Colonies were registered before the Freedoms were extended to include the fur trade.
And now when the contrary minded could no longer prevent action against the Freedoms and the reverse finally took place by the Assembly of the Nineteen, March 10, 1628, with the exclusion of the fur trade however, which was the only objection of the opponents and amounts to little, as will later appear. That the Freedoms were too much limited and the patroons too much restrained caused great content among the chief participants, and on January 1, 1629, this grievance was publicly stated (not by him, the remonstrant, who was director elected by the chief participants, but by Mr. Charles Looften and others), and request made that a committee he appointed to amend the Freedoms which had been granted, who, being nominated the third of the same month, took the matter up and drafted several articles, which, however, through his refusal [to serve on the committee] because he was himself in favor of the colonization, were never communicated to him, the remonstrant; and in order to give no one any cause for reproof, although at liberty to do so, he would accept no appointment, either from the directors or freely to investigate this matter and also refused to be present at such investigations even when the Assembly of the Nineteen by resolution of October 25, 1628, thereto invited him and opened the door, but charged his associate [i.e., the remonstrant] with the direction thereof which he would confide to him, which he was obliged to add here, since the chief participants have been made to believe, in order to vindicate him, that he, the remonstrant, is the greatest cause thereof (although the very opposite is manifest and, even if it were true, it would be no disgrace to him but praiseworthy). Hereupon he appointed delegates of the chief participants setting out the 21st of February following and presenting themselves in person in competent numbers before the Assembly of the Nineteen, requested that the Assembly would make an agreement with them, since they intended to organize colonies and were not satisfied with the former Freedoms. (Alas, how have these men now changed!) And doing all they could, they were unable to bring the matter to a conclusion in the Assembly, since the contrary minded (with whom they are now on such good terms as the following will prove) objected them, yet they accomplished this much that the Assembly of the Nineteen saw fit on the 26th of the same month to pass a resolution making the propositions of the chief participants a subject for discussion at the next meeting and to this end ordering the points of difference to be set forth and sent to the Chambers; whereupon it followed that the leading Chamber of Amsterdam issued a call for a meeting on April 18, 1629, article 4 of which reads as follows: They proceeded to consider all the foregoing exceptions granted the respective colonies in several former meetings and the matters connected therewith, and to deliberate whether the same might be amended by the accompanying articles requested by several influential participants and amended as the occasion requires.” To consider which articles, a committee was appointed the 26th of May following, who after long many debates finally decided the matter and presented the amendments to the Assembly, who read them several times, voted upon them and finally approved them in full, June 7, 1629, as they stand recorded in the Resolution Book and were afterwards issued in public print; and these have never been revoked or retracted.

“Hereupon several registrations were immediately made, and the work was undertaken with great courage by many. However, it did not last long for the opponents rested not but watched all transactions sharply, finding a pretext in the remonstrant and Godijn, some time before, viz in December 1628, sent two persons thither with the consent of the Chamber of Amsterdam and knowledge of the chief participants, according to the report of February 1, 1629, provided with merchandise, to buy and pay for the places appropriated to them, with further consent that he might exchange his remaining merchandise for furs, but the Company in regard to this matter, since at the time of sending his people the Freedoms had not been extended to the fur trade, all done in conformity with the letter of December 1628 [day of the month commencing with H, left blank in the Letter Book], addressed to the director of New Netherland.
These persons on receiving the pay he, to the great satisfaction of the inhabitants, though in spite of the opponents, they had purchased, paid for and obtained title to the lands; that, furthermore, they had exchanged the remaining merchandise for furs and sent these with bill of lading and with knowledge of the director to their patroon. The returns of the sale of these furs, amounting to about 15,000 (from which must be deducted the merchandise given in exchange, the interest, the insurance, and the expenses incurred) were so magnified by the contrary minded, who had their supporters as well among the directors as among the chief participants, that [it seemed that] two individuals with but a small quantity of merchandise had purchased a large quantity of land and had besides obtained immense profits which these opponents took octasion to proclaim that the patroons were not contemplating colonization at all, but only the securing to themselves of the fur trade and depriving the Company of the same, which would be total ruin to the Company as regards [profit from] these regions, not knowing or else intentionally ignoring that the expenses of the late Mr. Godijn would first come in when he should be obliged to send with his own ships at his own expense so many people, animals, provisions and other necessaries, that these 15,000 would not even enter into consideration; yet by their calumnies they brought it about that they angered many sympathizers who were opposed to the contrary side. Thus they injured Mr. Godijn exceedingly, withholding from him this day the aforesaid 15,000 (which he must yet seek to obtain by suit), furthermore constraining him to dismiss the people whom he had undertaken to convey thither and surrender them to the Company, also to part with his merchandise and provisions which he had bought with difficulty and put the same in the hands of the Company. They did not stop even here but sought to make the remonstrant also odious (although he, as above stated, had acted so imperfectly in the matter), asserting that he and the other patroons had taken possession of the best places and that those who followed would come too late, though the contrary is true since not a hundredth part of the land has as yet been trodden by Christian foot, and daily and even by the latest letters new places, far excelling the first, are revealed, where there is room enough for directors, chief and lesser participants and all the inhabitants of these lands. By these means, however, in addition to the former slanderers of the late Godijn, they brought it about that several chief participants, yes, even some of those who had so fervently supported the affair now became prejudiced and opposed to it, siding with the contrary minded, who, being now strengthened, sought means to insult the remonstrant publicly at the meeting of the chief participants, insomuch that five or six of them came together two hours before the meeting in order to devise some way of accomplishing their ends in the meeting, which they would also have carried through had not the remonstrant been warned of it and been on his guard, returing with sound arguments their slanders which, with your permission, they still should not be left out of mind. For the contrary-minded he and the other commissioners of New Netherland, who were pa-троons, had damaged the land by some hundred thousands for the sake of their own designs (of which damage not they, but the contrary minded are the cause, as has already been mentioned). They proceeded with such bitter injuries against others who had also registered colonies, that they thereby intimidated several, who were obliged to abandon the work already begun because others who shared therein declined to go on. And thus was undermined the necessary, laudable and good work which had been undertaken with such exertion and had taken so many years and had been discussed at so many meetings of the Nineteen and examined by all the Chambers, in and before its beginning, by so little an occasion as the return of the furs, concerning which of a truth it may be said, that instead of shearing the sheep when they had wool, they were skinned at birth when they had no wool, and all this under the pretext that the patroons had no other design than to deprive the Company of the fur trade and charge the expenses to them, as has been heretofore mentioned.

“In order now to prove what a shameful slander this is, and on the contrary to show the diligence in the matter of colonizing the aforesaid region of the patroons and the whole remonstrant shared and was included, and also what the remonstrant himself has accomplished in his colony and what expenditures they together have made in face of the opposition they received, the following brief statement is given. In December 1630 they equipped a certain company of ships with all kinds of materials, such as lime, brick and tiles, also put

Boats on board four large horses, twelve cows with calf, also several pairs of oxen, for whaling, all kinds of ammunition, provisions and merchandise, and over 80 persons, casting all together, including the yacht de Sales, of which mention will hereafter be heard, out of which many sailors, which indeed, is ten times more than the f.g.600 which in the beginning they received for their returns, upon which all their calumnies were founded. With this ship and people, they, the remonstrants, took possession, settled and peopled the fertile and well-nourished land, located thereon at the western cape of Hispaniola, placing thereon over 25 able-bodied men, well fitted out, besides the people (Haddo os decht eenig volk om te zitten aan ’t Eiland van Tortuga in West-Indies daer wij met seetich Franse fregatten of brikken hare voltse Eiland en te houden als een Colonie onder den H. M. H. Staten ende West-Indische Compagnie. We also had on board some people to land at the island of Tortuga in the West Indies, having contracted with sixty Frenchmen to hold the said island for us as a colony under the High and Mighty Lords the States General and the West India Company. De Vries, Korte Historische, p. 93 of the Frenchman Francois Roulland, and several negroes, supplied with provisions, arms, ammunition and other necessities, besides proper instructions, all in accordance with the consent of the Chamber of Amsterdam, of date August 28, 1630, which was given for one voyage only. And although the remonstrants would afterwards in accordance with their request of May 20, 1631, have either annexed or consented that the Company should do so itself, they could by resolution of the 25th of the same month obtain no other action than that the said [second] voyage was refused them notwithstanding the Company did not undertake it, and so this beautiful island fell into the hands of the English losing all that had been expected on it, scattering half the people and causing the rest to perish, for which damage they will seek redress at the proper time.

With this aforesaid ship de Walvis, they also in 1631 took possession of the bay of the South River in New Netherland, occupying the place of the colony with 28 persons engaged in whaling and farming, and made suitable fortifications, so that in July of the same year their cows calved and their lands were sown and covered with a fine crop, until finally by the error of their commissaries all the people and the animals were lamentably killed, whereby they suffered incalculable damage, which damage the remonstrants attempted to repair in the year 1632 with the former ship de Walvis and besought the Company to lend a helping hand, who neither by word nor deed would render any assistance but forbade them by resolution of April 26, 1632, to take with them more than 300 guilder worth of merchandise, for which they obtained about 200 beaver and other skins, while they would have obtained much more from nations who had never traded with the Company if they had had more merchandise, from which the Company would have realized the duty of one guilder per skin, which [profits] both now lost. And the most intolerable of all is, that after the remonstrants had given these 200 skins they were compelled to bring the other people to the hands of the Chamber of Amsterdam that it might levy its duty on the same, this chamber threw them among and mingled them with its own skins and also sold them with its own goods, contrary to the will of the remonstrants, just as if all the goods of the patroons were free booty or confiscated (who is so perfect, that he can hear all this wrong!), and still they must hear that they intend nothing else than at small expense to deprive the Company of the trade.

Furthermore, he, the remonstrant, in December 1630 [sent] the yacht de Sales, accompanied by the aforesaid ship de Walvis, to his granted colony, the island du Sable, in order that this yacht, being supplied with people, provisions and all necessities, might take possession of said island and settle it, since it was uninhabited and abandoned by the French, which yacht, to his misfortune, was captured and brought into Dunkirk.

de Sales.

What the remonstrant has further done towards the promotion of the population of his colony called Rensselaerswyck, on the North River of New Netherland, may be seen from his declaration of December 2, 1630, submitted to the Chamber of Amsterdam, and so continuing from year to year, until in July 1632 he was provided with people and animals enough to continue the work, and have done had not the Company by resolution of July 30, 1632, refused him carpenters, smiths and other mechanics, when these were not working for the Company, although he was willing to pay their expenses to the Company; this is quite trivial a policy, not only hindering him in his good undertaking, but doing so to the damage of the Company which would otherwise have had the benefit of the wages, while they on the contrary, according to the last letter written from him, do employ his carpenters and others of his people for their service.

"The Company has never attempted to make room in their ships, according to the tenth article of the Freedoms, for the transportation of animals and such like, only allowing him to place a few calves on the upper deck, and they were all thrown overboard in the entrance of the Company. He also prevented him from conveying his animals from the Manhattan to his colony, and most of them died from rough treatment and the like, which loss he also means to recover from the Company. It has likewise happened lately that the director of New Netherland has held his people idle for a long time at the Manhattans and would not let them travel further up the river unless they took an unlawful oath, given him by the Chamber of Amsterdam, although these people had already here taken the usual oath and had besides given bond and security to the satisfaction of the Assembly.

"The Company by the above resolution of July 30, 1632, also refused to give him any merchandise in that country to purchase the rest of his territory, notwithstanding his reasonable request, and by the same resolution declined to furnish his people with any provisions or victuals in exchange for grain, butter, cheese and the like with which they would pay, although their people would have suffered from hunger if biased the Company had not also taken an oath and rye, ground in his mill (as the Company has none at that place); and what is worst of all and most to be regretted, instead of the servants of the Company being on good terms with the patroons and their servants, they on the contrary have appointed as commis at Fort Orange, situated in his colony, against the wishes of the remonstrant, a person who has publicly slandered the Company, has helped those sailing into that region from other kingdoms to buy the smuggled furs and is disliked by the savages, who complain that years ago they treated them cruelly, so that they will not deal with him but on the contrary try to annoy him, to the Company's injury, as by way of revenge they have already burned the yacht de Beter which was anchored there, and according to rumor (as the remonstrant is informed by letter) they seem to have killed all the remonstrant's animals, horses, cows, sheep and hogs, apparently also on account of the hatred they bear towards him [the commis]. This person is also highly antagonistic to the remonstrant, since he has been told what reports of him the remonstrant made during his administration, although he and others to whom the administration was committed reported nothing but the truth. What trouble trouble of this may come from this can be easily understood, for either his colony will be ruined by the savages in order to avert the commis at Fort Orange or, if this does not happen through the savages, then the commis himself will do his best towards it. So the case stands thus, that probably the whole trade of Fort Orange will be lost to the Company and the remonstrant's colony will be destroyed without hope of redress, against which the necessary precautions should be taken.

"All this strife is caused solely by the opponents of the colonization and of the patroons who, when the latter as a result of the change had retired from the administration, obtained full power to carry out all their plans (upsetting the existing order of things and calling home all the officials, who having no other occupation will spy out the land, this one on behalf of France and that one on behalf of England, as has already happened and will happen again); it was even decided by resolution of March 25, 1632, with the advice of lawyers and counselors, despite the opposition of the patroons, to deprive them of the Freedoms and Exemptions which had been granted and given to them with so much difficulty by the Assembly of the Nineteen.

"Now the main cause of all these differences is nothing but the trade in furs or peltries found in that country and the question by whom it shall be conducted. The contrary minded maintain that it will be most profitable for the Company to have only the directors of the Company trade in furs, excluding all patroons, colonists and others. The patroons, on the other hand, maintain that this trade can be carried on, but farms without leases in the Company, but in all cases, with less expense and more profit to the Company, by their servants than by those of the Company, and that they can make a profit and pay duty to the Company where the Company must suffer loss. As to the first alternative, instead of this course being the most profitable for the Company, it is really true that it will bring not profit but loss, considering that out of all New Netherland only 60,000 or 70,000 guilders at the most can be obtained in returns, which by their methods will not be increased but diminished, as will be further shown. In order to get these 60,000 or 70,000 guilders, it is necessary that at least once a year a well equipped ship, say of 500 tons, be furnished with merchandise for trading, especially if the colonies were gone, since then the provisions for the employees in that country must be sent along from here. Hereto must be added that in case the vessel should perish, not only would all the trade for that year be lost but their people in that country would be in great danger. Besides, that to ship and hire vessels to trade one year would diminish the fur trade and perhaps divert it entirely. Moreover the fur trade in New Netherland is carried on, not in one place (as on the river of Canada), but what is much more costly in many places, and there not only many convenient but also many inconvenient places far distant from each other, as the bay of the South River, 30 leagues from the Mahantango, not up the river, but from bay to bay over the open sea. The Sankechans, a trading post on the South River, is in addition to the aforesaid 30 leagues, 35 leagues further up the river, making 65 leagues from the aforesaid Mahantango, up the North River to Fort Orange is quite 40 leagues. To the north, up to the Slees-bay [Om de noot tot aan de Sleesbey], Slees-bay was the Dutch name for Narragansett Bay, in Rhode Island] is also fully 40 leagues, so that the distance for a single trip would be about 157 leagues going and as much returning, making 350 leagues for an entire journey. Besides, that few fur animals are to be found at these places but are scattered about among many rivers and brooks, which must be sailed up and down, sometimes to 10 or 20 leagues, and the savages are at enmity with each other almost everywhere and do not allow each other to pass to and fro. Moreover, since it sometimes freezes three or four months continuously in that country, the rivers are closed, not only by storm and wind but also by ice, and all the trading posts are cut off from the Mahantango, the place of rendezvous. All this being true and perhaps unknown to many, it follows of necessity that these places must be provided with forts, and also with sloops to furnish the garison and forward the goods. That is also the case that yachts or sloops touch at these places and do the trading. It must also be taken into consideration that, the best season of the year being the winter time when most fur-bearing animals are caught, these yachts and sloops would have to leave their trading posts and go to the place of rendezvous, so that instead of the aforesaid distance of 350 leagues, going and coming, at least 700 leagues would have to be covered in two journeys. And then there is the sailing back and forth to furnish each other with supplies and information of everything, in addition to the risk of perishing in the ship, and not being able to reach the coast, because of attack on land by the savages (as they have attempted more than once). All this being well considered, it will be found, no matter how economically it may be managed, that the ship which must go with merchandise from the fatherland and return—not counting the interest, risk and ill usage—the garrison and fort at the Manha- tango, the garison and fort at Fort Orange, the yachts and sloops for the trade on the South River and the northern regions, besides the sloops plying between, counting all the expenses of building, mounting, equipping, keeping up, manning and victualing, will cost so much that the aforesaid 60,000 or 70,000 guilders, which are the utmost to be expected thence, will come far short by many thousands; besides they must also expect and withstand general uprisings of the savages; all of which the remonstrant offers to prove and establish and has often maintained for many years. But they would grant him no hearing and even accused him of doing it all for his own advantage, and to take away the profit. Although he, as stated in the beginning, was the sole cause of this trade being restricted which formerly stood free and open. He argues that the nature of those regions being well examined, the case stands thus, that nothing can be accomplished there by poor peaceful means, as by building plant or house, and although he and well-to-do will not go there themselves, but that a good work can be accomplished by the two, just as the blind can carry the cripple and the crippled can show the way to the blind, so the rich may stay at home and send their money thither and the poor may go and provide all the tools of the work, with the money out of their hands and exemptions were needed in order to raise up patriots who should send out many laborers, as it appeared that the remonstrant and his associates have done, and many others would have followed their example had they not been treated so indirectly and been forced to suffer loss, with loss also to the Company.

"But to return to the subject, in order to dispose of the objections of the contrary mind who may say that much more than 60,000 or 70,000 guilders could be obtained by the colonists who so defraud them were gone and if attention were devoted entirely to the benefit of the trade, it should be stated that the remonstrant gives much the highest figure, and that during the ten years that the Company has traded there, taking one year with another, there has never been nearly so much received, but ordinarily only guilder six or seven for the guilders. But it is also true that the fault of the colonists, the contrary appears; for instance during the two years when the late Mr Godijjn and his people were trading in Swansandeel, the Company received from the South River through their servants a so less quantity of skins than in former or later years, but he obtained his furs in addition to these by bartering with other tribes. This caused so much jealousy that the Company or- dered their director to send a commis there, which was done [with the result that the Company's servants], trading close by the people of Godijjn, deprived him in one year of over 500 skins in Swansandeel alone, for which the Company is justly bound to pay, since they had never obtained more than 20 to 30 skins a year in that region before this colony was started. It is maintained with insufferable imperti- nence that the Company has excluded all but themselves, not only from the fur trade, but even from the whale fishery, etc., just as if they had High Mightinesses, having the trade to the exclusion of all others, had not shut out themselves, but were alone allowed to send merchandise and to trade for gold through one or two commisien, while the Company was obliged to pay for all the other expenses of forts and fitting out of ships. It is evident that many with the patroons to found colonies to their own loss, and then to have [the Company] send a commis or "assistant," who under their sheltering wings and protection may buy in the furs at small cost and deprive the patroons of them, notwithstanding the fact that all the game and the free right of hunting within their territory has been granted to the patroons by the 23d [should be 22d] of April 1653.

"It is further to be considered that the Company, to protect them against attacks of the savages, must keep their forts, yachts, and sloops manned by many idle people, who must cost much more than the people of the patroons, since they send not idlers but laborers who in some degree must earn their bread and need not one commis and "assistant" to do all the business for which the Company needs at least 25 persons; besides, the servants of the Company, serving for hire, are only seeking to make a good deal of money and then get away; they will not trouble themselves to make perilous jour- neys, or to send back when they have completed their work, the patroons, people, on the contrary, having families of women and children, who after some time will become established there, try to make terms with the savages and, pushing far inland for their own profit, discover much more than do those who only lie in garrison. So that it is far more profitable for the Company to have no expenses, turn over the trade to the patroons and draw a clear profit than to deprive the patroons of their privileges and on the other hand encumber themselves with the maintenance of forts, sloops, yachts and people, the which expenses, as before stated, amount to so much that they suffer loss where they otherwise might draw a clear profit. Besides this loss, which must be borne, the colonies also will be ruined if they are shut off from the fur trade. The farms which now af- ford them sustenance will at the same time fail and all provisions must then be sent over from here as before at ten times the expense. To go on doing this, added to the loss, would be double folly, while the other had the Company are treated the same. If the trade were granted to the patroons, who have money and means to send every- thing at their own expense, which right of trade, as stated above, was formerly with good intentions (though too soon for the time) fully granted to the poor people, who having no means had to be supplied by the Company with every thing. Is it not better that the Company should draw a clear profit than make themselves trouble and loss?

"Are not the contrary minded well aware that their course will never increase the trade because the savages, who are now stronger than ourselves, will not allow others who are hostile and live farther away and have many fur towns to come among them. It would be quite different if we had stronger colonies? Yes, that the Maypaas, who will not allow the French savages who now
In a letter written on April 23, 1654, from Amsterdam, by Kiliaen van Rensselaer to Wouter van Twiller, reproduced in Van Rensselaer Brother MSS., 270, Van Rensselaer says: “They have secretly tried to make Isaac de Raisière, who married the niece of Ray [a director of the West India Co., director in your place, as I have only lately found out. . . . It was not until lately that Alidrich could get rid of the suit of clothes for you (since they were busy with Raisiere . . . )."

The king places the superintendence of the English colonies in the hands of a commission led by William Laud, Archbishop of Canterbury. The members of the commission have power to impose penalties and imprisonment for offenses against their duties; to remove Governors, and require an account of their government; to appoint judges and magistrates, and establish courts; to hear and determine all manner of complaints from the colonies; to have power over all charters and patents; and to revoke those surreptitiously or unduly obtained.—Cal. of State Papers, Colonial, 1594-1660, 177.

The Council of New England agrees upon "several divisions of lands upon the sea coasts of New England, to be immediately held of His Majesty, which were granted to the Patience, Adventurers, and Council of New England by charter, by King James I." On April 18, leases for 5,000 years were granted, and on April 23, several deeds of feoffment were made to the several proprietors. Capt. John Mason received certain lands, "to be called the province of New Hampshire," and an additional 10,000 acres “to be called Masonian William, Lord Alexander, received that part of the main land from St. Croix along the sea coast to Pemaquid, and up to the Kennebeck River, and "the island of Matawock, or Long Island . . . to be hereafter called the Isle of Sterling," and the Marquis of Hamilton received certain lands "to be hereafter called the county of New Cambridge."—Cal. State Papers, Colonial, 1574-1660, 195, 204. On April 25, the members of the council drew up a petition to the king stating that, as "their endeavours to advance the plantation of New England" had been "attended with frequent trouble and great charges," and as they had been "assailed with sharp lighous questions before the Privy Council by the Virginia Company," they had decided to surrender their charter to the king, "with reservation of their lawful rights." They now ask that "particular grants of the proportions of land they have actually granted to and been passed to them, that having been called the county of New Cambridge"—ibid., 204-5, 206. The charter was surrendered on June 7.—Ibid., 209.

The directors at Amsterdam make the following minute: "A June petition of [Pieter Pietersen] Blyveldt is presented, requiring recompense for the loss which he has sustained by his recall from New Netherland, the same being estimated at about 7,000 guilders. Resolved to request the gentlemen who were Commissioners at the time of his recall from New Netherland to inform the present Commissioners of New Netherland of the reasons for his recall."—Records of Old West India Co., No. 14, fol. 3590.

Pieter Pietersen Blyveldt was recalled from New Netherland in 1631, and sold his cattle on farm No. 3; to Kiliaen van Rensselaer on July 20, 1632, when he was in Amsterdam. He probably returned to Holland with Director Peter Minuit, on the Eendracht, in the spring of 1632.—See Van Rensselaer Brother MSS., 190, 225, 291; and A. Eikelh, Basaiana Jansen Krol, 41.

"Crispyn de Forest requests permission from [the directors at Amsterdam] to go as a free man to New Netherland, and to that end asks for 100 morgens of land."—Records of Old West India Co., No. 14, CXVIII, fol. 178, in National Archives at The Hague.

Buchelius (Kol. Annae, 212B, fol. 129-129 verso) transcribes a letter, dated Amsterdam, Oct. 2, 1636, from Charlet, director of the West India Co. (It would seem as this name must be intended for Pieter Varleth. Buchelius gives after the name Charlet "dir. of the W. I. Co. for the prov. of Utrecht, who took the place of . . . Pauw." Buchelius, however, must have known the name of Varleth. He was himself a shareholder in the West India Co.) This letter is addressed to:
There colonists, however, the year in question was 1636. In the capacity of secretary, he rendered valuable service to the colony, and it is said that a few days after he was appointed, the vessel returned, and two of the passengers swore 'for the purpose of shooting geese.' On May 1637, the ship anchored off Manatans... The yacht, after all the business connected with it was completed, sailed up the river to Rensselaerswyck with the patron's colonists, and was gone nearly the whole of June. [van Rensselaer, Register MSS., 275-79.] Meanwhile Hendrick and Isaac [de Forest], the former now thirty-one years old and the latter ten years his junior, lost no time in seeking a favorable situation for a plantation. They came prepared to earn their living by raising tobacco, for which it was said the soil of Manhattan island 'on account of its great fertility was considered well adapted.' A stretch of rich bottom land in the northern part of the island was soon selected. This tract was called 'Muscoota' (the flat land) by the Indians, who had doubtless already cleared and cultivated a considerable part of it. Hendrick promptly secured it from the director van Twiller a 'grant.' A verbal grant was all that was necessary in the very earliest days, but settlers were led to expect that a ground brief would be given to them after they had held and improved their land for two years. The period was often, however, much longer. Of one hundred morgens of land (about two hundred acres) on this fertile plain, extending between the river and the hills, they give approximate boundaries, from the high land we know as Morningside Heights to a little stream now called Harlem Creek, which rose not far from the present Mount Morris Park and ran in a southerly and easterly direction until it emptied into the Harlem River. The northern boundary of the tract was at about 124th Street, while on the south it included the high land in Central Park at about 109th Street. Near this latter boundary was a copious spring, or, as the Dutch called it, 'footeyn,' which still flows almost as it did then, a rippling brook with little waterfalls, until it empties into Harlem River in the northern part thereof. 'To build a house on such property was not an easy matter in 1637. The land had first to be cleared and many logs prepared, for not only were they to be used for the frame of the house and barn, but also for a heavy stockade or palisade which must be erected to surround all the buildings. This was to serve as a protection from wild beasts for the settlers and their live stock, and also as a defense against the Indians, whose trail ran near the house. A great deal of arduous labor was involved, but for this it was possible to secure the services of the 'werkbaas' (workboss) and certain slaves who were owned and maintained in New Amsterdam by the West India Company and used for the purpose of clearing the land for habitants. Indeed, there is little doubt that the werkbaas was so employed on Hendrick's land, for in a deposition of March 24, 1659, concerning buildings erected and work done in New Netherland through official aid during van Twiller's time, there is the statement, 'Much work has been done at la Montague's Bouwerie.' [La Montague owned this tract later.] Besides this it was afterward shown that the werkbaas knew all about Hendrick's original contract with Tobias Teunissen and Willem Bout, who undoubtedly helped in the cultivation of Hendrick's bouwerie and in the building of his house; for Tobias was a good practical farmer and Willem, we know, was an excellent carpenter. 'The house is said to have been '42 feet long, 18 feet wide with 2 doors.' [N. Y. Col. MSS., 1: 59.] This description (the original of which was destroyed in the fire that damaged the State Capitol at Albany in 1911) is taken from O'Callaghan's translation, but is not always quite accurate. The Dutch farmhouse of that period was a combination of dwelling-house in front and barn in the rear. Judging from O'Callaghan's translations of the specifications of other houses, there is very little doubt that the term which he translates as 'doors' was the original text 'uydleten,' literally outlets or extensions, 'through which he was able to extend the length of the house, to make long narrow compartments, usually extending the full length of the barn between the outer walls and the posts which supported the roof, as indicated in the plan below [see p. 952]. The width, eighteen feet, refers to the open floor in the centre, which was used for threshing the spaces over the 'doors' and the 'doores' were for stapling purposes, and the open lots above them for fodder. [ Cf. July 18, 1641.]

"The house had a thatched roof made of reeds, for the construction of which nine hundred bundles were used: it had also a brick chimney, which it took 'Dirck the mason' ten days to build. A brick chimney was an unusual thing in those days; chimneys were frequently 'catted'; in other words, a square chimney was made of short logs crossed at the corners, all the interstices of which were filled in and covered with clay. Of course such a method of construction was the cause of many fires. "Hendrick's house may have been 'half timered', that is, the frame built of heavy timbers and the wall spaces between them filled in with clay or stone. On the other hand, it is not unlikely that it was clapboarded. Many farmhouses were so built even in those early days. After the carpenters had put up the frame, the farmers themselves would often nail on the clapboards. Jasper Donckaerts, who travelled through this part of New Netherland in 1679, gives a graphic even if a cheerful account of the clapboarded houses, as follows:"

"The dwellings are so wretchedly constructed, that if you do not keep so close to the fire at almost to burn yourself you cannot keep warm, for the wind blows through them everywhere. Most of the English, and many others, have their houses made of nothing but clapboards, as they call them here, in this manner: they first make a wooden frame, the same as they do in Westphalia and at Altona, but not so strong; they then split the boards of clapwood, so that the inside of the gable is open, except they are not bent. These are made very thin, with a large knife, so that the thickest end is about a pinck (little finger) thick, and the other is made sharp, like the edge of a knife. They are about 5 or 6 feet long and are nailed on the outside of the frame, with the ends lapped over each other. They are not usually laid so close together, as to prevent you from sticking a finger between them in consequence either of their not being well jointed or the boards being crooked. When it is cold and windy the best people plaster them with clay. Such are most all of the English houses in this country, except those which have which were built by people of other nations."

"The house for curing tobacco on Hendrick's land was put up by an English carpenter, John Morris (Morris?), and it could not have been very well built, for it blew down four years later, to the great injury of the tobacco which it contained. This goes to prove Donckaerts' statement about the workmanship of English carpenters."

"Hendrick had other duties besides those connected with his bournery, for he was still the mate and trader of the Reusselaerswyck. When he had been only three months on shore, the yacht returned from her cruise up the river and he was summoned to sail with her for the English colonies in Virginia. Isaack, only twenty one years old, was too young to have all the responsibility of the bournery laid upon his shoulders and so his brother-in-law, La Montagne, was sent for and given command at Muscleo."

"Had it not been for this unfortunate voyage, on which Hendrick was summoned to sail with his brother Isaack, would probably have become the founder of the de Forest family in America."

"... and it was... on July 26, 1657, that Captain Schellinger with painful brevity made the following entry in his log: 'About two o'clock in my morning my heindrick de forest died.' Van Rensselaer Bouwer MSS., 338a."

The inhabitants of the Connecticut colony convene at Hartford to frame "an orderly and decent Government established according to God, to order and dispose of the affaires of the people at all seasons as occasion shall require."—Pub. Recs. Of Conn., I: 20-25.

Fiske says it is "worthy of note that this document contains none of the conventional references to a 'Godly King,' nor the slightest allusion to the British or any other government outside of Connecticut itself, nor does it prescribe any condition of church-membership for the right of suffrage. It was the first written constitution known to history that created a government, and it marks the beginnings of American democracy."—Fiske, The Beginnings of New England, 127.

In August, the leading men of New Haven adopted the Bible as the constitution of the state. They excluded from the rights of citizenship non-church members, and so administered the government for 20 years. Bancroft, Hist. of the U. S., I: 271-72.

At a general court held at Portsmouth from March 16 to March 18, a new constitution for Rhode Island was adopted. This stated that the government was "a democratic, or Popular Government. It guaranteed civil and religious liberty, provided for a "State" seal, and secured justice and equality to all citizens.—Arnold, Hist. of Rhode Island, I: 147-51.

"The words 'transom window' are O'Callaghan's usual translation of croci cosyn, meaning literally cross-casing, the typical Dutch window of that period; and "round windows" stands for holcosyn, meaning windows having two swinging sashes below and one stationary sash above. The word used in this connection is of uncertain derivation and does not mean round, or convex, as usual. Cf. transk. in De Forest's A Wilson Family in Am., I: 112. See also sketch under Dec. 6, 1642, Addenda. Cf. July 25, 1638.

The word "entrance" probably stands for uystaat, meaning an extension, or row of bays and stalls outside the posts, on one or both sides of the barn. A "barrick of four roods" means a hay barric (baunberg), composed of four posts (roeden) and a sliding roof; usually there were five posts, one at each corner and one in the centre.

1642 During this or the preceding year, Jan Stevensen began his career as schoolmaster in New Amsterdam. The date is indicated by a letter, of Sept. 2, 1648, written by Domine Backerus to the classis of Amsterdam, in which occurs the statement "Master Jan Stevensen, who has served as a faithful schoolmaster and reader for six or seven years, so that now he has left, and is now left for home."

—Eccles. Rec., I: 257. Kilpatrick believes O'Callaghan (Hist. of New Neth., I: 438) to be in error in terminating Roelantsen's teaching career in 1639, and argues for 1642 as the more probable date, allowing Stevensen to be his immediate successor.—Kilpatrick, Dutch-Schools of New Neth., 53-55. Regarding the building of the Dutch church in the fort, De Vries says:

"As I was daily with Commander Kieft, generally dining with him when I went to the fort, he told me that he had now had a fine inn built and of stone, in order to accommodate the English who daily passed with their vessels from New England to Virginia, from whom he suffered great annoyance, and who might now lodge in the tavern. I replied that it happened well for the travellers, but there was a great want of a church, and that it was a scandal to us when the English pass here, and saw only a mean barn in which we preached [The first church, built early in Van Twiller's administration, stood near the East River, where now stands N. Y. Pearl Street]; that the first thing which the English in New England built, after their dwellings, was a fine church, and we ought to do so, too, as the West India Company deemed to be a principal means of upholding the Reformed Religion against the tyranny of Spain, and bad excellent material therefor—namely, fine oak-wood, good mountain stone, and good lime burnt of oyster shells, much better than our lime in Holland. He then inquired who would undertake the work. I answered, the lovers of the Reformed Religion of whom there were enough. He then said that I must be one of them, as I proposed it, and must give an hundred guilders. I told him that I was satisfied, and that he must be the first to give, as he was commander, and then we chose Jochem Pieterz. Kuyter, a devout person of the Reformed Religion, who had good workmen who would quickly provide a good lot of timber, and also chose Damens [not Jannes Dam or Damens, a prominent colonial], because he lived close by the fort. And so we four, as churchwardens, were the ones to undertake the work of building the church. The commander was to give several thousand guilders on behalf of the Company, and we should see whether the rest would be subscribed by the community. The church should be built in the fort, to guard against any surprise by the savages. Thus were the walls of the church speedily begun to be laid up with quarry-stone, and to be covered by the English carpenters with over-lapping shingles cleft from oak, which, by exposure to the wind and rain, turn blue, and look as if they were slate."—"De Vries's Notes" (from the Korte Historische en Joumalen der Nytseychen), in Jansen's N. N. Neth., 213-15.

The "Representation" of 1650 gives the following amusing account of the method adopted by Kief, who spurred on by De Vries, of collecting subscriptions for the erection of the new church by taking advantage of a convivial occasion. This incident was inadvertently omitted from the text of the Chronology:

"The Director then resolved to build a church, and at the place where it suited him; but he was in want of money and was at a loss how to obtain it. It happened about this time that the mayor, Everardus Bogardus, gave his step-daughter in marriage; and the occasion of the wedding the Director considered a good opportunity for his purpose. So after the fourth or fifth round of drinking, he set about the business, and he himself showing a liberal example let the wedding-guests subscribe what they were willing to give towards the church. All then with light heads subscribed largely, competing with one another; and although some well repented it when they recovered their senses, they were nevertheless compelled to pay—nothing could avail to prevent it. The church was then, contrary to every one's wish, placed in the fort."—"Representation of New Netherland." in Jansen's N. N. Neth., 316. Jansen observes: "The result was a stone church in the old fort, 72 feet by 59, erected at an expense of 2,500 guilders—equivalent in specie to $1,000."
1644 Dec. 15 did not experience any special increase until the year 1639, when the fur-trade with the Indians, which theretofore was reserved to the company, was thrown free and open to everybody at which time the inhabitants there resident not only spread themselves far and wide, but new colonists came thither from Fatherland, and the neighboring English, as well from Virginia as from New England, removed under us. So that in place of seven bouwarres, full thirty were planted, and full one hundred more expected in a short time from the plantations which were taken there. There was every appearance, in addition, that in two or three years' time provisions could be furnished for ten thousand men.

"Although the hope was now entertained, that by such means the conquered province would come to a flourishing state, it nevertheless appeared that the abuse of the free trade was the cause of the said ruin. Firstly, the colonists thereby, with a view, each to push forward his own advantage, separated themselves from one another, and settled far in the interior of the country, the better to drive trade with the Indians, whom they therewithforward sought to allure to their houses with excessive familiarity and treating; whereby they brought themselves into contempt among the Indians, who, not having been always treated alike, made this the cause of enmity. Secondly, in consequence of their proximity to the Indians, whose lands lay unfenced, the cattle belonging to our people, straying without herdsmen, seriously damaged the corn or maize of the savages. The occasioned much complaint, and no retorts following, they revenged themselves, killing the cattle and even the horses. Thirdly, not only the colonists, but also the free-traders proceeding from this country in consequence of the large profits, traded away with the Maquass, arms for full four hundred men, such as muskets, powder and lead, which, having been refused to the other tribes, when demanded, augmented the hatred and the enmity among the latter. Fourthly, it happened that the Director, a few years after, imposed a contribution of maize on the Indians, whereby these were totally estranged from us. Fifthly, the various expectations and occasional encounters, which finally broke out into acts of hostility, so that first the Raritan Indians attempted to make way with one of our sloops, and afterwards killed some hogs on Staten Island; whereupon the Director dispatched eighty soldiers thither to avenge this, who burned their corn and killed three or four of their people. Both sides then desisted from further proceedings.

"It further happened that a Weshquaeksenc savage murdered, about the year 1640, an old man with an axe, in his own house, for which, having received no satisfaction from the tribe, the resolution was taken afterwards, in the year 1642, by Twelve Men chosen from the commonalty of the colony, to take the murderer, but nothing was done at the time in consequence of missing the enemy, who, observing what was designed against them, sued for peace.

"Some time afterwards the Hackengisach Indians designedly shot with an arrow a Dutchman sitting on the roof of a house, which he had raised on the foundation of the old one. This, however, nothing was done at the time in consequence of missing the enemy, who, observing what was designed against them, sued for peace.

"Then, in the same year, the Indians, who, having been offered a number of presents, returned with a large quantity of corn, and killed some of our people. This obliged the Indians to fly to their people to the Manhattans, where they were received into the houses, and fed by the Director during fourteen days. Shortly after this they were seized with another fright. They fled with the Hackengisach, full a thousand strong in the neighborhood of the fort, and over the river of Povoa. Some of the Twelve Men having noticed this, the Director, at the request of three of these, namely, of Jan Janz. Damen, Abraham Ploack, and Mary Adriaensz., who signed in the name of all their board, authorized an attack on the above-mentioned Indians, in the course of the night between the 27th and the 28th February, 1642, by a party of soldiers and burghers, who, with cruel tyranny, slew eight of them, and took thirty prisoners. And although the commonalty protested against the Director and the aforesaid three persons on account of these hasty and severe proceedings, as having taken place without their knowledge or understanding, obliged to declare open war against full eleven tribes of Indians, who rose up in arms on that account. The consequence was, that about one thousand of these, and many soldiers and colonists belonging to us, were killed. All the bouwarres almost were moreover destroyed, so that only three remained on the Manhattans, and two on Staten Island, and the greater part of the cattle was destroyed. Whatever remained of these were obliged to be kept in a very small enclosure, except in Rensselaer's situation, on the North River, in the neighborhood of Fort Orange, which experienced no trouble, and enjoyed peace, because they continued to sell fire-arms and powder to the Indians, even during the war against us.

"The company thus experienced the greatest loss and destruction, both by the abscondment of their ammunition, and the money expended in the purchasing this at a dear rate, as well as by reinforcing the garrison by the enlistment of as many Englishmen as could be hired in that country, fifty of whom the colonists solemnly engaged to pay, but the payment not having followed, it remained as a charge on the company. Those indebted to the company were hereby finally reduced to such a state, that they had no means to pay their debts.

"To remedy this great decay, various suggestions were proposed by the Director and Commonalty:

"Firstly, that to restore peace and quiet throughout the country, the Indians, who waged war against us, should, by force of arms, be utterly destroyed and exterminated. The Director demanded for that purpose, one hundred and fifty soldiers, armed with arquebuses and coats of mail, and provided with sufficient munitions of war, as he estimated the numbers of the Indians, our enemies, to be a hundred strong. The Commonalty, maintaining their force to be some thousands strong, considered their extermination impossible, and were of opinion that it would be wiser to establish universal quiet by a general peace. Of this they have but little hopes, so long as the present administration remains there, because the Indians will no way be pacified, as they themselves declare to some of ours, until the Director be removed; for their daily cry everywhere is—Wouter, Wouter,—meaning Wouter van Twiller.

"Secondly, in order to prevent future wars, the colonists should be settled in a proper situation, near each other, so as being brought everywhere into villages and towns, they would be in better circumstances, in time of need, for self-defence. Thus being separated from the Indians, the cattle would not cause any injury to the crops of the Indians, whereby, heretofore, trouble has frequently arisen; and too great familiarity with the savages avoided, none of these being employed in domestic service.

"Thirdly, for better defence against enemies, and to ensure respect from neighbors, that it would be advisable to construct, of stone, Fort Amsterdam, which is now in such a state of decay, that men, without using the gate, pass over the walls. This, according to the estimate of the Director, would cost but from twenty to twenty-five thousand guilders.

"Fourthly, that the boundaries between the English and our nation, should be arranged by the crown of England and this state, so that all difficulties with the former people may be prevented. Whereas the present boundary treaty, made since the year 1613, notwithstanding the company had previously taken possession of the whole thereof, and on the 8th June, anno 1633, when no Englishmen had ever been on, or in the neighborhood of that river, had purchased twenty miles of territory from the Indians, and erected Fort Good Hope thereupon, and maintained possession of it with our people. After which, namely, on the 16th September, the English first came from New Plymouth and Matheus Bay before the said fort, and declared that they would erect a house three miles above the same. This company residing there, opposed this so long as they could, but was forced to permit the same, according to instructions, under protest. In the mean time, sundry letters, protests, and summons, passed on both sides between their governor and our director. It finally came to pass, that they arrived on the above-mentioned river in the years 1635 and 1636, with numbers of families and cattle, establishing themselves there, far and near, even on the land situated around and by our fort, and belonging to us. Which land they have divided amongst themselves, endeavoring to prescribe laws to us, because they having built a house or two at the mouth of the river, pretended thereby to have the key thereof.

"Fifthly, that it would be advisable for the benefit of that country all around, to facilitate emigration to New Netherland, as has been done heretofore for a long time, or at least to credit the emigrants for a time, in order to allure colonists thither, and afterwards to introduce a considerable number of farm-servants and Negroes.

into the country, through whose labor agriculture would be so much promoted, that a large quantity of provisions could be transported thence to Brazil.

Sixthly, that a rendezvous for vessels of war should also be established in New Netherland, which is better adapted than the island of Curacoa, in consequence of the abundance of provisions and building-timber there; besides, that men can proceed thence safer and quicker to all the points in the West Indies, and discover the designs of the enemy.

Seventhly, that it would be profitable for the company to keep a well-furnished store and cellar there, from which the inhabitants around them might be accommodated at a reasonable price, which will otherwise be overvalued and exhausted through private traders. But as private individuals have been permitted to carry on trade, let their imported wares be fixed at a certain price.

Finally, it is proposed by them, that the council be composed of four to five persons, in order to maintain justice and the authority of the company, together with the respect of neighbors.

From all which is to be seen into what confusion and ruin New Netherland is now fallen, such being caused by the rash Undertaking of so precarious a war, within the order of the Nineteen, and against the will of the Commonwealth there—what excessive expense is now required from the company both for succor and redress. There does not seem that any apparent profit can be expected from there for some years. On the contrary, it is found by the company's books in the Deportation of Amsterdam, that in place of being a source of profit, this district of New Netherland has cost the company from the year 1626 to the year 1644 inclusive, over 550,000 guilders, deducting the returns which have been received from there. It would, therefore, be worthy of consideration if it would not be better for the company to rid themselves, by the abandonment of New Netherland, of such heavy expenses altogether, than by retaining it, to continue them.

But inasmuch as the company has promised, in its conceded Freedoms, to take all colonists, as well freemen as servants, under its protection, and to aid in defending them against all internal wars; and as the improvement of matters by good management here, and better direction there, is not beyond hope, so that this place may be maintained in the first instance with small profit, or at least without loss, it is therefore our opinion, under favor, that the company cannot decently or consistently abandon it.

In order to introduce such regulation and improvement, we submit to the consideration of the Noble Assembly the following points:

Firstly, The establishment of the boundaries with the English should speedily and first of all be agreed upon, for it is found that they lay their great profit on the usury duties of our territory. This being first settled, it should be conditioned, that the English who fix themselves in our district, or should come in there, should be subject to our government, and not be acknowledged otherwise than as original subjects.

Secondly, The country should be brought, in every respect, into peace and quietness; and the advice of the present Director utterly to exterminate all enemies by force, by no means be adopted, not only because such is impracticable and unchristian, but it would be injurious to the company, necessitating, as it would, so heavy an expenditure on so uncertain an event, and so little appearance of profit. It would not be impolitic, therefore, to adopt the advice of the Commonwealth, and to endeavor by all means to appease and satisfy the Indians, and to order either the Director and council, who are responsible for that bloody exploit of the 22d of March 1643, to justify and vindicate their administration before the Noble Assembly of the Nineteen. In place of whom a person should be sent back as Director, sufficiently qualified to promote the interests of the company and the prosperity of the commonality on the one hand, and to maintain on the other good correspondence with the neighboring people, especially with the Indians.

Thirdly, It would be advisable to carry into effect and to execute the proposition of the Director previously alluded to—that the colonists should settle on some of the best adapted places with a certain number of householders, in the manner of towns, with roads and lanes, and the English style of fort, for thereby will live more secure, according to the intention of the company in the granting of the printed freedoms and the amplification thereof.

Fourthly, It shall be necessary, first of all, to hasten the repairs of the fort, and we are of opinion that this shall be done in a proper manner, and at the least expense, with good clay, and firm sods. And the soldiers should be urged thereto, and obliged to keep it for the future in continual repair. The Director should be strictly commanded to take good care of this.

Fifthly, We consider, under favor, that for the security of the aforesaid fort, and as elsewhere required, the persons specified in the annexed list should be sufficient, on such allowances, as there, moreover, draw the assistance of the English and the servants of their servants should be bound, under certain penalties, to provide themselves with good fire-arms and other weapons for self-defence; and to secure themselves in time of need, independent of the garison, against a general attack, without the Director, colonists, or whatsoever it might be, being permitted to hire any soldiers, by they few or many, at the company's expense.

Sixthly, A council should be established there, consisting of three persons; namely, the Director as president; the Second and the Fiscaal as councillors adjunct. Through which council all public and private affairs arising relate, with much less than the said delegates to be, and the company should be treated and administered. With the understanding, nevertheless, that the Commander should take the place of the Fiscaal in criminal matters, with the addition moreover of two capable persons from the commonality. Further, as by the sixth article of the Freedoms, it is required, in place of being a source of profit, to delegate one or two persons to inform at least, once a year, the Director and council of the state and condition of their colony, so we are of opinion that the said delegates should moreover assemble every six months, at the summons of the Director and council, for mutual good understanding and the common advancement of the welfare of the inhabitants; besides to assist in advising the same upon all affairs relating to the welfare of their colonies, the preservation of peace with the Indians and neighboring people, the maintenance of the Freedom and privileges, and the repress of all abuses, besides the maintenance of the statutes and the laws; bearing in mind, always, that throughout the whole of that land the Amsterdam measure, ell, and weight shall be used.

Seventhly, It must be especially attended to, that the population and cultivation of the country should be strengthened. It would be serviceable thereto to facilitate, as much as possible, the emigration of the colonists and freemen who intend to proceed thither to settle there, and to cause them to establish themselves, first of all, on the island of Manhattan; allowing them as much land as they were able to cultivate, whether in planting of tobacco, for which that island being very fertile is considered well adapted; or of grain or other crops, from which they may expect to derive the largest profit.

And for the advancement of the reclaiming of the country, it would be wise to allow, at the request of the Patroons, colonists, and other farmers, the introduction from Brazil there of, as many negroes as they would be willing to pay for at a fair price; which negroes would do their masters more service, and at less cost, than farm-servants, which must be hired here with a great deal of money and much promises to be sent thither.

Eighthly, To increase the population still more, we would advise, that it would be best to reserve the Indian trade exclusively to the Patroons, colonists; and free farmers residing there, without permitting any licensed traders to trade in any manner with the said Indians; but to be satisfied to exchange their cargoes with the free inhabitants for peltries, tobacco, wheat, and other produce of the country. But it should be absolutely forbidden, that either the freemen should sell to the Indians, or the licensed traders to the freemen, any arms or munitions of war, on pain of a heavy punishment to be inflicted therefor, lest the Indians, being strengthened thereby, may hereafter be encouraged to do us more injury than they can now, in their impotency, inflict. But it shall be obligatory upon the freemen to take a number of fire-arms and side-arms for self-defence, as already mentioned in the 5th point. An inspection thereof shall be bad by the Director every six months.

And in order to encourage the good people of New Netherland to the more, the Noble Assembly of the Nineteen should, under favor, consider if it would be proper to divide the conquered province, to allow the Patroons and colonists, there
Dec. cargoes, other will New

Apparently, the granting of ground-briefs was sometimes made a special order of business at meetings of the director-general and council; or possibly the grants made at different meetings were held for issuance or record awaiting the convenience of the secretary, which would account for the fact that often several were issued or recorded under the same date. —See Introduction to Dutch Government, pp. 355 et seq.

"Of a ship from New Netherland ["Princess"] we have sad tidings, namely, that the same with 86 souls, 200,000 lb. of stockishouert [red wood, or St. Martha wood], and 14,000 beaver skins, about four weeks ago perished near Wales, England. Only 21 persons were saved and came ashore on pieces of the ship. Director Kieft, the minister, the fiscal and other officers are among the dead. The ship belonged to the Company and sailed in the latter part of August from New Netherland. From the persons saved, who arrived here, we can not learn that anything special happened in New Netherland."

See 1643, and Dec. 28, 1670, where the "Arms of an Earl," here referred to as having been granted to the province, are described. See also Frontispiece I, Vol. IV. As pointed out by Dr. Wieden, in a letter to the author dated Aug. 17, 1921, Holland in the Middle Ages was a "Graafschap," or the dominion of a count, whose arms it bore, and continued to bear after it had become a province in the Dutch Union. It seems clear that the states-general, in order to bestow upon the colonists going to New Netherland privileges equal to those enjoyed by citizens of the home provinces, made New Netherland a province, and bestowed upon it the arms of a count, similar in character to those enjoyed by the seven provinces forming the "Union."

The following is a report of a court meeting held at Fort June Orange (The court was established by Stuyvaert Apr. 10, 1643):

"Present: "Ommes dempo Sander Leendertsen"
"Last Sunday a letter was received by this court from the Honorable General, of the 17th of this month, wherein he advises the court of the bad news received from the north and that on that account, for the better defense of the Manathans, they were not only busy repairing the old works, but also obliged to begin some new ones. Complaining of the scarcity of money in the treasury, he requests that the most prosperous of the burghers here lead a building hand and that this court would be pleased to negotiate a loan of money, on condition that it be returned within a year, either in duties, or otherwise, for which his honor and the honorable councilors offer their persons and property as security."

"After careful consideration of the matter, this court has decided to summon the most prosperous and loyal citizens and to communicate the matter to them, with the recommendation that they assist the Honorable General in this great emergency; who, having been summoned one by one and appeared in court, have signed for the following amounts, which they have agreed to furnish promptly for the purpose and on the conditions hereinbefore written, and which it is decided to send at once by the sloop of Jacob Symoztts Clomp, in company of two other sloops, which are lying ready to sail for the Manathans. They have contributed and signed as follows: [A long list of names follows, with amounts opposite, totaling 192 beavers and 590 in seaworn, together valued at fl. 2225. Then follows this statement]

"But in recounting the number it was found that there was one beaver too much, which was sent also, as follows: 144 whole beavers 18 drielinges [here apparently counted as 3 skins] 5 half beaver 18 drielinges [here apparently counted as 3 skins]

"On the 26th of June the above amount was sent off by Jacob Symoztts Clomp, and by the accompanying sloop, Claes Thysa, master, the wheat, in the presence of the honorable magistrates, Jan Verbeek and Jan Janssen Schermerhorn.

Mar. The words "int voorjaar," used by Megapolis in his letter of this date, and translated in Eccles. Rec., I: 335, as "in the spring" should be rendered "in the early part of the year," for the letter was written before the spring.

22 The "Burghers Court Martial" or "Burgher Court Martial," a term more frequently found in the records relating to New Orange (see Dec. 22-Jan. 1, and Oct. 15/25, 1674), appears to have comprised the captains or chief officers of the night watch, which, like our police of today, was semi-military in both its organization and character.—Rec. N. Am., VII: 122, 132, 134. The "Burgher Council of War" (ibid., VII: 137, 138) appears to have been another name for the same body; this, however, is not to be confounded with the "Honorable Council of War" (ibid., VII: 397, N. Y. Col. Docs., II: 574), which was a body that acted for the states-general, in 1657, in re-establishing the Dutch regime in the province.

26 The directors at Amsterdam write to Stuyvesant regarding the Jews in reply to his letter of Sept. 22, 1654, notifying him that by order of Feb. 15 (q.c.) they had given permission to the Jews to settle in New Nederland, provided they consent to take care of their own poor.—N. Y. Col. Docs., X: 315; Oppehmeen, op. cit., 8-11.

May 1656—See Rec. N. Am., XLII, 688, where this and other information regarding him are given.

June 25 The first marked case of anti-Semitism, and illustrating the unfriendly feeling of the city magnates towards the Jews, as intimated in the first letter sent by Stuyvesant to his superiors in Amsterdam on the arrival of the first contingent of the race in 1654, appears in the proceeding against David deFerera, a Jew, by the Schout Nicasius deSille, on a charge of contempt of justice. For an apparently trivial offence by one who did not understand the Dutch language and was ignorant of the laws affecting the subject, the schout demanded as punishment against the Jew a public scourging and the cutting off of the scalp, or banishment from the province, a fine, and confiscation of the debt due the defendant, besides provisional imprisonment.

DeFerera, in 1655, had sold goods to Adrien Keyser of the value of 5 beavers, and as collateral for the payment had received a chest of clothes. On Keyser's failure to pay, and after suit, the collateral was authorized to be sold in February, 1656. Another creditor of Keyser then offered to pay DeFerera the beavers, and these were ordered by the court to be left with the schout for delivery against the collateral. DeFerera, though not requested to do so by the schout or his bailiff, thereupon, in the absence of the schout, brought the chest of clothes to the bailiff's residence. The latter being at DeJonge's house, DeFerera went thither without the goods, informed the bailiff of the deposit, and demanded the beavers. The bailiff promised them in a day or two. This did not satisfy DeFerera, who then went back to the bailiff's house and took back his collateral, although the bailiff, who had been informed in Nettowonie so to do, protested against this action and warned him not to take the chest away. The bailiff later admitted he had not seen the chest. He charged that DeFerera had used nasty words to him in Hebrew. The court then, on the bailiff's complaint, ordered the chest to be returned. The court on the bailiff's bail failed to go on the charge of contempt of justice, and had him provisionally imprisoned. Various proceedings were had before the local magnates, resulting, after much legal argument, in the imposition of a fine of 300 Carolus guilders and costs, with imprisonment without bail until paid, the beavers being restored to DeFerera. DeFerera failed to pay the fine, which he said would ruin him, DeFerera, through his friend Joseph d'Acosta, a shareholder of the Dutch West India Company, who acted as his interpreter, agreed to an arbitration suggested by Director-General Stuyvesant, who had been appealed to and who had obtained an admission from the bailiff that he had not requested the delivery of the collateral. Stuyvesant just previous to this had received a letter from his superiors dated June 14, regarding his kinder treatment of the Jews. The arbitration resulted in a reduction of the fine to a bearable amount, 120 guilders and costs of 50 guilders, which were paid. DeFerera was released after being imprisoned about a month without bail liberty. The proceedings in this case take up many pages of the Dutch records. For a full account, with documents, see Oppehmeen, op. cit., I: 335-37 and 77-86.

G. Beernink, in De Geschiedenschrijver en Rechtsgeleerde Dr. Arend van Sichenhorst en zijn vader Brant van Sichenhorst, Stichter van Albany, Hoofdstad van de Staten New-York (Gelre, Werken, No. 12), 1916, prints on pp. 272-79 Van Sichenhorst's account of receipts and disbursements of the colony of Rensselaerwyck for 1648, 1649, 1650, in which, under the year 1648, occur items of Evert Duyckings and Roelands Savery for glass. On p. 167 of the text, Beernink reads: "Evert Dukinks tocht leverde in dat zelfde jaar een nieuw glas, had er zeren versteld en had van Labatie zes stuk "fin glas" betrokken. Hij eindigde zijne rekening met de aanheffing wagen van merken in glazen (ruitten) te branden" (translated): Evert Dukink, namely, in the same year (1648), furnished a new glass; he repaired seven and procured from Labatie six pieces of "fine glass." He closed his account with the offer to burn coats of arms or other marks (designs) in glass (leaded glass windows).

Beernink must have found this account among the vouchers accompanying the account of the colony submitted to the Court of Gelderland in connection with the litigation between Van Sichemhorst and the heirs of the patron.

1657—Although no reference has been found to a church building or other local earlier than 1671, when Pluvier's house was acquired by the Lutheran congregation, it is altogether likely that Lutheran services were held even during the Dutch regime. They must have been regularly held at least by Easter, June 6, 1648 (p. 2), when Nicolls granted them liberty to send for a minister, probably in the house of some member of the congregation.

1658—At the end of this month, Stuyvesant, at Wildewyk (Esopus or Kingston), directed the establishment of the village.—Dutch Records of Kingston, Part I, trans. by Oppehmeen for N. Y. State Hist. Assoc. (1912), 1-2.

1659—E. W. Mears, Iconographia Batava, Amsterdam, 1897-1905, II: 417, lists a miniature portrait of Jacob Steendam, the poet, by J. M. Quinkhard, in the Panopticon Batavum, in the Rijksmuseum at Amsterdam. It is not clear whether this is the same portrait as that of which Murphy gives a lithographic copy by E. Spanier, The Nederlandsch Museum, in New Amst. and Its People, has a reproduction of the Murphy portrait "from an original print in the Lenox Library."

1660—The attempted correction in the Chronology—in the sixth paragraph under 1660, p. 206 of the statement in Vol. II, p. 217, regarding the number of bridges shown in the Castello Plan, should be ignored, as evidently a temporary aberration on the part of the author.

Mar. A belated attempt is being made to trace the present whereabouts of this important New York document.

Aug. The "Reply of the West India Company to the Answer of the 27th Hecene Peter Stuyvessen . . ." covers, with its appendices, 17 Sept. printed pages in the N. Y. Col. Docs. (II: 490-510), the original being in the Royal Archives at The Hague. It is addressed to "To the Honors de Decker, former counselor in New Netherland, for the Affairs of the West India Company," and bears date of 1666. The aim of the "Reply" is to show "the bad foundation and paltry excuses" contended in Stuyvessen's answers to charges against him for "the scandalous surrender" of New Netherland, and to "the lightness and unfitness" due to "the disposition and desire" to dispose of Stuyvessen as they think fit, or drop their prosecution against him. It states, among other things (p. 499), that Stuyvessen preferred to "incur excessive expenses of late years for the embellishment of the city, by the construction and erection of very costly stone buildings (steen werken) rather than bring the fort into a state of defence . . . ."

Between Sept. 30, 1664, and Jan. 9, 1671, Johannes de Deckers was in Holland, and made efforts to collect what was due him from the West India Company, as is shown by the following entries in "Resolution Vande Caemser Amsterdem No. 25 vanden 8th: Marti 1668 tot den 10th: September: 1671," in Records of the old West India Co. No. 15, Algemeen Rijksarchief at The Hague.

1668 Joan de Deckere, former councilor in New Netherland, May serves notice that he intends to recover what is due him out of the property which the company has in New Netherland. The company demands a copy of the notice, and replies that it will know how to protect its rights. (fol. 22)

1669 Jan de Deckere, former counselor in New Netherland, Apr. presents a remonstrance setting forth his innocence in the matter of the surrender of New Netherland to the English, and asking for the payment of his monthly wages. The remonstrance is referred to Messrs. Pergens, Baumanste, and Clewek, who with the assistance of the advocate are to examine the matter and to report thereon. (fol. 98v)

1670 The committee to whom was referred the matter of Apr. Jan de Deckers, formerly counselor of New Netherland, May reports that said de Deckers was not only employed in the surrender of New Netherland, but himself concluded and signed the agreement, and that his writings contain no satisfactory evidence of his innocence. Payment of his monthly wages is refused for the present, and the committee is requested to look further into his accounts. (fol. 174)

In the next volume of "Resolutions of the chamber of Amsterdam," Sept. 10, 1671-June 15, 1674, in Records of old W. I. Co. No. 16, appear the following entries:

1671 Joan de Deckere, formerly counselor in New Netherland, July requests that his claims against the company be submitted to impartial arbitrators. Referred to the committee on law suits. (fol. 74)

1672 Joan de Deckere makes the same request as above. Mar. Request shall be considered at its appropriate time. (fol. 16)

1673 The committee appointed to settle the matter of Joan Aug. de Deckere reports that in lieu of payment of his claims they have offered to employ him provisionally as a notary in the service of the company until an opportunity pre-

1676 tion a bag of 200 ducatons, which the committee, in view of the present scarcity of money, could not take upon themselves to grant, but promised to report the matter to the assembly. Resolved that in full discharge of his claims the chamber shall pay him fl. 1500, in five instalments of fl. 300 each, without binding itself to employ him to any capacity, and on condition that he will not sue, or be reduced, if he be employed meanwhile. De Deckere agrees to make known his reply next Thursday. (fol. 176)

1676 Gov. Winthrop, of Connecticut, writing to Gov. Nicolls, says that he hopes a copy of the Connecticut laws will be there before the day of meeting" (at Hempstead—see March 1). When the "perfecting of the body of laws" for the province of New Netherland had been accomplished, he desires "to have the favour of a view of them, and to know the birthplace of that person of this Colony,"—Winthrop Papers, V: 49, in Mass. Hist. Soc.

1666 About this time, Lucas Durieux, a discharged soldier, kept a tavern, known as the "Sign of the Fort Orange," at the present No. 16 Stone St.—Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 980. He first received a license as tavern-keeper on Feb. 16, 1674 (Rec. N. Am., I: 161), but two years later had received leave to settle at the South (Delaware) River (Col. Hist. MSS., Dutch, 166).

Cornelius Steenwick and Offele Stevens receive a patent by way of confirmation for "A certaine Parcel of land lying upon this Island of Manhattan near the fresh water heretofore known by the name of the Penechakers or the Bowery No. 3, stretching by the land belonging to Cornelys Claessen Swits and so along by the Carway to Hans Carsteden Plantation and then straight into the woods till you come to the Parting of Leenzend Aredens Land where three ways meet at ye Carr Path within the flence. Containing in all by estimation about 91 Acres and 125 Rods, for which said parcel of land Gerrard Jansen van Oldenburgh had formerly a Patent or ground-brief from the late Dutch Governor Petrus Stuyvesant, bearing date the 29th day of November, 1652. Now, the said Thomas Hall, having, on the 30th day of October, 1662, transported and conveyed over his right, title and interest to the parcel of land and boundary before mentioned as well as to the 2 lots adjoining the said houses and tenements therewithon the meadows thereto belonging, unto Mr. Cornelys Steenwick, one of the Aldermen, etc., who have likewise taken in Mr. Offele Stevens van Cordlandt another of . . . to bee copartner with him in the premises," etc.—Gfrber Patents, IV: 17 (Albany). The original grant and subsequent confirmations, etc., are in the author's collection.

In a letter to Gov. Winthrop, of Connecticut, Gov. Nicolls expresses disappointment that a "more cheerfull conjunction of Mutualall defence" on the part of "all his Majestys Loyall Subjects" is not in evidence. "Dutch & French preparations against his Majestys Plantations" suggest greater caution for 1667, he does not doubt "by God's assistance to defend this place or be buried in the ruins of it if the Collonin Enemy makes his first descent upon Vs but I foresee that the fire will not stop here but may singe the Coasts of our Neighbours . . . whatever happens I shall not want Testimonies that Liberis animi publice privatoque . . .—Winthrop Papers, XVI: 2, in Mass. 1670 During this month, the first settlement in the colony of South Carolina was made, on the Ashley River, a few miles inland from the present city of Charleston.—Sailey, Nat. of Early Carolina, 119-20, 160.

Oct. The Hudson Bay Company, organized chiefly for importing furs and skins obtained by barter with the North American Indians, receives its charter from Charles II. The king incorporates his cousin, Prince Rupert, and a number of other nobles, as "The Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson’s Bay," makes them absolute proprietors and lords of the region, gives them a monopoly of the fur trade, and empowers them to make laws and ordinances regarding their territory.—Winsor, op. cit., VIII: 4-6, and authorities there cited; Traill, Social Eng., IV: 74.

1671 Gov. Lovelace informs Gov. Winthrop, of Connecticut, of the "sad loss of the Duchess of York who after a violent feasor last week sent her and made a fine fretted assault her at last with unresistable force and soareth her out of this world."—Winthrop Papers, XIV, in Mass. Hist. Soc.

1672 The "High Mighty Lords of the States General of Zeeland" pass secret resolution for sending out a Dutch squadron to America, upon which follows the preparation of two secret "instructions" in nineteen and eight articles, respectively, issued by the council of the states general of Zeeland, on Nov. 21, (q.v.). In a cipher code provided for the squadron, running from 99 to 249, Virginia is 162, and New Netherland 163. These and other manuscripts relating to the expedition under Evertsen and Bennekes are in the Evertsen Papers, in N. Y. Pub. Library.

On this day certain secret instructions, consisting of nineteen articles, were signed by a committee of the council of Zeeland, for sending out a squadron designed for operations mainly against the island of St. Helena. New Netherland was not mentioned in this instrument, but on the same day a second set, consisting of eight secret articles of instructions, was drawn up by the committee, in which New Netherland was mentioned in article six, which provided that, after the operations at St. Helena and the capture of Bermuda, a detour should be made by the squadron along the coast of Virginia, New Netherland, and as far as Newfoundland, in order to either destroy or capture everything there. These instructions were given to Captains Evertsen and Bennekes.—Evertsen Papers, in N. Y. Pub. Library. For subsequent events, see July 30/Aug. 9, and Aug. 14/14, 1673.

1673 The records of conveyance in New York, as contained in the earliest book of New York deeds, begin with this date, and are continued to Oct. 19, 1675. The volume in which these deeds are recorded is not found in the register's office of this county, having been temporarily deposited in the N. Y. Hist. Soc.—See Collections (1913), 3-62.

Jollet sailed down the river as far as the Arkansas where he reached in the middle of July. After ascending the river, he entered the Illinois, gave Mont Jollet its name, and then returned to Quebec. He arrived there in the middle of August, 1674, and reported to Frontenac. The map showing Jollet's discoveries was probably drawn there from his notes and sketches by J. B. L. Franchaud, the well-known royal hydrographer; it was called Nouvelle carte des de diverses nations dont la Nouvelle France en l'année 1673 et 1674, and was doubtless the earliest map of the Mississippi

A list of ships captured and burned by the Dutch squadron in the James River of Virginia shows seven captured, with 5,750 head of cattle ( Oxhauen), and five burned, with 3,050 head of cattle. In addition to these, a sloop from New York, containing provisions for the Massachusetts, was captured and burned as well by the Dutch squadron, with 150 gunboats and 100 armed vessels. The Dutch had also occupied the Island by the time of this incident. The Netherlanders, in fact, were still in control of the island at this time, and they had already burned several vessels belonging to the New Englanders, including the 'Swanenburg,' which was destroyed by Edward Winsor, as early as 1665. These events were seen as a clear violation of the Treaty of Breda, which had hoped to settle all previous disputes between the two countries.

A communication from the governor and council of Massachusetts to the governor and council of Connecticut announces the decision of the Massachusetts 'General Court' to equip two vessels as men-of-war 'to secure the passage through the Sound & to repel the present Insolence of the Dutch.'—Winthrop Papers, XVII: 25. On March 30, another letter gave the information that the vessels were 'fitted & furnished with Ammunition and provision,' and 'now ren for the Service on the Sound.'—Ibid., in Mass. Hist. Soc. Another official communication from Massachusetts to Connecticut (see Mar. 14) announces that the two vessels, equipped for service on the Sound, were retained for some days for 'want of wind & extremity of the rayne Seasons.' Now the intelligence of 'the undoubted probability of peace between England & Holland' (see Mar. 31) has led the council 'to put a stop to the going forth of the Vessels, until they hear further from your states, or otherwise from England.'—Winthrop Papers, XVII: 35, in Mass. A letter is sent by the states general of the United Netherlands to Councillor Justus de Huybert, pensioner of the states general in the province of Zeeland, at Middelburg, which states that the pensionaries of Holland and West Friesland, at an assembly of the states general, had communicated a missive from Secretary de Wylde, written from Amsterdam on the preceding day, concerning the recapture of New Netherland, whereupon the matter was deliberated and secret resolutions were passed, enclosed to him, from which it appears that the general board of admiralty at Amsterdam had received confirmation of the recapture of New Netherland and that all the islands were gone, through the capture of the ship which had been despatched to Holland by Captains Binckes and Everett, to carry the tidings, which letters, in accordance with previous instructions, had been thrown overboard by the skipper, on account of which there was some suspicion fifteen minutes after, that the skipper exhibited so little curiosity as to be unable to convey any information to them. On the contrary, the circumstances, they resolved, to have some doubts from their number sent to confer with representatives of the Amsterdam body, to discuss and settle the necessary to obtain in N. Gov. Colvile and the council, in a letter to the governor and council of Massachusetts, relative to fowling certificates belonging to New Englanders, complain about the spies that are sent to New Amsterdam. They ask the English to send in future honest persons and no spies in intercolonial matters.—Winthrop Papers, original manuscripts in Mass. Hist. Soc., XV: 155. A letter written by Commander Everett on board his flagship, the 'Swanenburg,' lying before Cadiz, gives an account of the capture of New York from the English. This letter was at one time No. XII of a small lot of Evertson Papers, now in the N. Y. Pub. The court of mayor and aldermen issues a warrant to the sheriff to attach the 'lands, houses and estate' of the late governor, Francis Lovelace. The return of Thomas Giffes, sheriff, was made on Nov. 14 and 16. The original document is almost illegible, but it shows that Giffes had attached the great house near the state house, the garden house in Broadway, and two parcels of land adjoining the land of Derrick Seekers.—N. Y. Col. MSS., XXIV: 8 (Albany). Since the colonists under the Dutch, the garden house is not under the jurisdiction of the newly appointed governor, the court of mayor and aldermen will not be upheld by Connecticut in their resistance to the authority of the Duke of York. He wishes to believe that the assistance those towns received from Connecticut against the Dutch Dec. 29, 1674, was "for His Maties Service, and not any ways to obstruct his prerogative Royall,

From this time we find mention of the presence in the city of Amsuwer Hendricks, silversmith. Besides carrying on his trade, he is prominent in civil life. Jan. 1675—Capt. John Manning, in an address to Andros in defence of his surrender to the Dutch (see July 30/Aug. 9, 1675), relates that he had an intimate audience with the king on Jan. 11, 1674; that, on being blamed by the king "for sending 3 persons aboard ye Enemies Ships," he replied that "it was in hopes to have Stopped the d Shippe one Tide, and in that time expected ye Govern'd more assistance in ye d Fort." In reply to several questions asked by the king, Manning answered that the fort had four bastions, each bastion defended by ten guns, and to "ye Best of his memory" the length of "ye Curtains" was "70 paces or upward." He gave the number of the garrison as "70 or 80," whereas the king turned to the Duke of York and said: "Brother the ground could not be maintained with so few Men."—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), III: 53-54. See Jan. 29, Addenda.

29 Capt. Manning petitions Andros and "the rest of his Maties officers now assembled with him in Court Martial" for "Mercy and Clemency." He pleads the "weakness of ye Strength," the apprehension regarding enemies within the city, the powerful enemy without, the fact of his "being wholly left without advice or Councill and hauing but eighteen howers before the Enemy came to attack us," also the "great discouragement and dismay" Capt. Carr gave to our Men when he came from aboard the ships he saying how great their strength was & that we was not able to withstand them, and his not Returning when he went to make Condictions All which sustaine surprisall occasioned strange amaze-

There were three Oyster Islands.—See Oct. 1, 1691, and Col. Ap. Laws N. Y., I: 1-267. One was Bellows' Island.—See Aug. 30, 1670. Another was Ellis Island.—See Dec. 6, 1669, and Stevens' British Headquarters Map of 1782 (Pl. 50, Vol. I). The third of the three Oyster Islands (all of which are shown along the "Oyster Bank" on Pl. 274-b, Vol. I) is named Oyster Island on maps of a quarter century ago, but is now a submerged rock, and is shown on the Coast & Geodetic Survey chart, No. 541, as "Rh. awash."—Broodhead, op. cit., II: 276.

From this time on, Jacob Boelen, silversmith, worked in New York. For a sketch of his life and work see Met. Museum of Art Cat. of an Exhibition of Silver used in N. Y., N. J., and the South (1911), xxii-xiii, 16, 18. A bowl made by him is shown in ibid., opp. p. 18.

Some time after this date (see Chronology), and prior to June 1686, Peter Jansen Mesier obtained a lot west of Broadway, where he erected a wind-mill. In 1686, according to a deed in the N. Y. Hist. Soc., the lot of one Lloyd is described as bounded on the South by a lane leading to Mesier's wind-mill. Mesier sold his mill to Jannoetje, wife of Gysbert van Imbergh, in 1710. The mill appears on the Manuscript Map of 1735 (Pl. 30, Vol. I), and the "Old Wind-mill Lane" is especially well shown on Lyne's Survey (Pl. 27, Vol. I). The mill stood west of the modern Church St., between Liberty and Cortlandt Sts. In real estate records of 1749-50, property on Broadway was described as situate on the corner of "a lane formerly leading to the Windmill of Peter Jansen Mesier."—O'Callahan, Notes on Windmills (MS.), in N. Y. Hist. Soc.

"A Mapp of Rariton River" was probably prepared in conjuction with the building of the town of Perth Amboy, N. J., and was perhaps intended (but not used) as an illustration for an English book bearing the date of the preceding year entitled: Proposals By The Proprietors Of East-Jersey in America, For the Building of a Town On Ambo-Point, And for the Disposition of Lands in that Province And Also For Encouragement of Artificers and Labourers that shall Transport themselves thither out of England, Scotland, and Ireland. London, Printed for Benjamin Clark in George-st and in Lombard-street, Bokkeller, MDCLXXXIII. See Catalogue No. 336 (Jan. 1921) of Bernard Quarrington, London, for reproduction of title-page of a copy of this book. There is one other known copy, that in the John Carter Brown Library. See also, in same Catalogue, reproduction of A Brief Account Of the Province Of East-Jersey in America. Published [sic] by the present Proprietors, etc., issued by Clark of London, in 1682; and Whitehead, East-Jersey under the Proprietary Governments (1873), where the "Mapp" is reproduced.

— Jacobus van der Spiegel, silversmith, worked in New York from this year until 1705. He was prominent in civil and military life. For a short sketch of his life, and a description of some of his work, see Mans. Museum of Art Cat. of Exhibition of Silver used in N. Y., N. J., and the South (Vol. 1.), 224, 46-57.

Feb. 14

Catharine and Daniel Smith, also known as the Rensselaer, it was from their recollections of the early Dutch settlements on the Hudson and Delaware Rivers. Hist. Hist. of N. Y. III: 311.

Mar.

The original text of the item of this date is: “If Mayor & City Clerk shall be pleased to appoint a gentleman by the name of Qual’d by Assembly & will give Security to pay Scott & lest for 3 years.”—Coun. Min. (MS.), V: 107 (Albany).

Aug.

This date is found on a manuscript survey (now in the author’s collection) of “a certain neck of land—lying upon the main, and adjoining upon Harlem river,” known as Paparinnam. The survey is signed by “Phillip Welles.”—See Riker, Hist. of Harlem (1904 ed.), 3995 and Pl. 21, Vol. I.

1686

In this year, Etienne (Stephen) de Lancey, a native of Caen in Normandy, arrived in New York; he was the founder of a family which later became prominent in the city and province.—Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y. II: 312.

Apr.

William Dyre, and Mary, his wife, convey to Thomas Lloyd a lot outside the north gate of New York City, on the west side of the road or highway, beginning at the corner of the way or passage “leading to the mill of Peter Jansen Mierser.” Thence south along said road to the churchyard or burial-place as the fence of said Dyre now stands, 468 ft; thence west on a direct line as the fence of said churchyard or burial-place stands to the Hudson River, 66 ft, and so along the water side, 468 ft; bounded on the right side by the land of P. J. Messier, and said way or passage that leads to his mill, to said road or highway where it first began, 668 ft, all English measure.—Libr. Docs., XIII: 302-10.

In 1719, Peter Jansen Mierser deeded this mill, which he had erected west of Broadway prior to April 23, 1686 (p. c.), to Janet, wife of Gysbert van Emergh. —LaGorce, Map Ref. Key, III: 961. The mill appears on the Manuscript Map of 1735 (PL. 30, Vol. I); the road to the mill, or “Old Wind-mill Lane,” is shown and named on Lyon’s survey (PL. 27, Vol. I). The mill stood west of the modern Church St., between Liberty and Cortlandt Sts. In real estate records of 1749-50, property on Broadway was described as situated on the corner of “a lane formerly leading to the Windmill of Peter Jansen Mierser.”—O’Callahan, Notes on Windmills (MS.), in N. Y. Hist. Soc.

The councillors, all named by the King [in Dongan’s instructions] and now technically the king’s councillors, were Brockholis, who retained his rank as commander-in-chief to succeed the governor in case of his death, Philipse and Van Cortlandt, Santan and Spragge, John Young of Long Island and Jarvis Baxter; but Dongan thought best not to swear in Santan the collector as he was subject to fits of hypochondria and unable to attend to business.—Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y. II: 311.

June

This new commission to Dongan names him, not again as “Lieutenant and Governor” for an absentee proprietor (the Duke of York), but as “Captain General and Governor in Chief” of a royal province. This title was continued throughout colonial times.—Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y. II: 311.

At a council held at Fort James, Gov. Dongan and deputies from New York, East Jersey, and West Jersey, agree upon the course to be pursued in running the boundary lines of the three provinces.—N. J. Archives, 1st. ser., I: 517-18. “The points on the Hudson and Hackensack rivers were subsequently determined; but nothing further was done for several years, and nearly a century elapsed before the line was definitely settled.”—Winsor, Hist. N. Y., III: 442. For the subsequent history of the controversy, see Col. Coun. Min., 56, 260, 270, 272, 273, 275, 276, 279; Cal. Hist. N. Y., Eng. 355, 443, 643; Assem. Jour., L: 467, 475; Rep. of the Regents of the Univ. (on state boundaries) transmitted to the legislature May 28, 1873; and see further, in Chronology, Feb. 18, 1748.

Gov. Dongan informs Major Winthrop, of Connecticut, that “his Majesty in his last instructions to me has ordered that all people that pretend to any land within this Government should make Settlement and payacknowledgement and no title to stand good but such as do so. Therefore I think it necessary you take some care as soon as you can about ye’l Concerns on Long Island.”—Winthrop Papers, XIII: 155, in Mass. Hist. Soc.

At a meeting of the governor’s council, “It is thought necessary that the breastwork in ye’l fort be by degrees repaired & that ye’l chimneyes decayed may be pulled down & renewed.”—N. Y. Cal. MSS., XXV: 543 (Albany).

Dongan writes to the king: “Since Judge Palmer went away Oct. 24 or about Sept. 8.— N. Y. Cal. Docs., III: 475-77.” I received a letter from the Earl of Tyrconnel, wherein he lets me know that it will be requisite for your Majesty’s service that I go home.” He calls the king’s attention to reports he has already sent to the lords of the treasury, explaining: “I am much in debt with the people here, and your Majesty to me, and no ways left for paying it if Connexitcut be not joined to this Government, . . . Yet I had not owed so much to the people here, if Mr. Santen the late Collector had not Embezeled three thousand pounds of the Revenue” (see Feb. 22 and 23). He asks that £3,500 be delivered to Benjamin Bathurst, “to be remitted hither, which I believe will satisfy all ye’l Debts I have his forced to contract here.”—Ibid., III: 492. Richard Talbot, Earl of Tyrconnel, was Dongan’s uncle.—Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y. II: 373.

In June, the king had directed Andros to bring Connecticut and Rhode Island within the territory and dominion of New England, but Andros had not done so when Dongan sent his letter of Oct. 24 to the king—ibid., III: 344. “Governor Andros was now completing the consolidation of the king’s great New England province. Visiting Hartford, he took over the government of Connecticut on November 1, and its charter, says the famous story, was hidden away in a hollow oak tree, to be brought forth again on a more fortunate day.”—Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y. II: 325. See, further, Nov. 27.

Dongan, writing from Albany to the “Lord President” of the privy council (the Earl of Sunderland), says, among other things, regarding the revenue necessary to protect the frontiers against the French: “It is this Government must be ye’l Bullwark to Boston, which is not at the fourth part ye’l charge New York is, and has ten times the Revenue. Connecticut is added to the Massachusetts Government) by ye’l fraud of ye’l Governor & ye’l Clerk unknown to ye’l rest of ye’l general Court, and for one that wishes it as it is, there is a hundred in that Colony that Desires it was annexed to ye’l Governor of N. Yerke.”—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 511; Van Rensselaer, Hist. City of N. Y. III: 269, March 28.

Winsor’s statement (N. Y., Hist. N. Y., III: 400) Aug. that, Andros having issued a proclamation here on Aug. 24 (p. c.), New York thereby was “formally recognized as the metropolis and the seat of government in the Dominion of New England,” is misleading. On leaving New York (see Oct. 4), Andros ordered the records of New York province transferred to Boston.—See below;
The English flag bore at this time only the cross of St. George, the diagonal St. Andrew’s cross of Scotland being added when the legislative union of the two kingdoms was effected in 1707 and the colonial ensign was a square flag with a St. George’s cross, red on a white ground, in the centre of the cross a royal crown alone. This other order, however, was only a paper regulament but also presaged much practical inconvenience, provided that the public papers of all the colonies now united should be removed to Boston and that all deeds and wills should there be registered.

On August 15 Sir Edmund took over the government of East Jersey, authorizing the governor, Andrew Hamilton, to act as his deputy, and on the 18th the government of West Jersey. Thus the name New England was extended from the St. Croix River at the northeast to Delaware Bay at the southwest. In no part of this wide Dominion had the people any secured political rights or liberties except the right, always understood in regard to the colonies, to be governed by laws not repugnant to those of England, and the liberty, specially bestowed by their Catholic king upon all excepting Catholics, to worship God in Jesus Christ as their consciences might counsel. The New Englanders were, indeed, permitted to elect their local officials in town-meeting, but merely by the virtue of gubernatorial and other official acts. Whether they elected or not the cities and towns of New York should retain their charters.

"The pride of New York was deeply outraged by these changes, its political aspirations blighted, its material prosperity thought to be seriously threatened. Sadly Colonel Dongan, the city magistrates, and the people must have regretted their loud and frequent lamentations over the weakness of the province, their reiterated outcries that it would perish were its borders not enlarged; for they can hardly have understood the ideas and aims of James Stuart well enough to feel that the result would have been the same had they never spoken; and, indeed, there is evidence that their pleadings actually hastened although they did not determine the course of the king.

"Some years later the city magistrates, addressing the governor of the time, spoke of the unhappy annexation to New England whereby our traffic not only dropped but all that was dear and valuable among us wholly destroyed. And the conservative party in New York laid all the troubles of the so-called 'Leisler Rebellion,' which began in 1689 and lasted for two years, to the charge of this 'miserable union,' this 'cursure' of saying that it had enabled the people of the eastern colonies to poison with sedition and anti-monarchical doctrines their neighbors of New York who until then had been quietly loyal. Such words showed little appreciation of what had been the real temper of New York in 1689, but their very exaggeration gives a measure of the temper and dismay that had prevailed in 1688. Exaggerated were also the laments uttered at this time—laments that New York had been 'swallowed up' by the unhappy annexation, that its 'absorption' into New England had brought it into an 'unmerited state of degradation.' It was necessary to select a capital for the great Dominion, but otherwise no part of it was excluded over any other part. Wherever the governor-general might choose to meet with a quorum of the councillors chosen from all parts, there legislation for all parts could go on. Nor were old names or old boundary lines of geographical and other kinds wiped out. Each colony, as appointed and written by Dongan and Andros, was to bear its own charges out of its own revenues. Each retained its own judiciary, a fortunate fact for men like Graham and Palmer who found office and profit both in New York and in Massachusetts. On the other hand, while New York was to have its own military establishment, the king's orders, it appeared—"it appears, somewhat ambiguously, that their pay, to be 'as in England,' was to come from the revenues of 'New England.' In short, each colony, so far as can be read in initial arrangements necessarily incomplete, remained as before a unit in respect at least to some of the English laws, in a buffer between New York and New England was now identified with New England, a name and a region that its people had detested since their early Dutch days. It was under a government in which the voices of the aliens on the council, the voices of rivals who had often been covetous aggressors and sometimes avowed enemies, greatly outnumbered its own. The city on Manhattan was no longer in the old way a capital city; and it can scarcely have had foresight enough to be comforted by the thought that, should the union endure, geographical facts would probably bring about the removal of the capital of the Dominion itself to Manhattan."—Van Rensselaer, Hist. of the City of N. Y., II: 247-49.

Catalina Trico, "at her house on Long Island in ye 7th" [Walkabout], makes a deposition before William Morris, "Justice of ye peace," regarding only affairs of N. Y. City and Delaware Rivers—Doc. Hist. N. Y. (40 ed.), III: 32, citing "N. Y. Coll. MSS., XXXV." See also May, 1624; and 1626.

During his administration in New England, Gov. Andros put into execution a number of measures that were obnoxious to the colonists. Although proclaiming religious freedom, he restrained the liberty of the press, levied enormous taxes, and compelled landowners to procure new titles to their properties, for which exorbitant charges were made. By his aggressions on the territory of the Penobscot Indians, he brought on the Indian War of 1689. The people of Boston and other gentry could not endure his administration, revolted and, on April 18, 1689, Andros was deposed, and later sent to England. In 1691, Edward Rawson and Samuel Sewall published The Revolution in New England Justified, And the People there Indicted From the Aspersions cast upon them by Mr. John Palmer, In his Pretended Answer to the Declaration, Published by the Inhabitants of Boston, and the Country adjacent, on the day when they secured their late Oppressors, who acted by an Illegal and Arbitrary Commission from the Late King James. Printed for Joseph Bronning at Boston in New England, 1691.—See Evans, Am. Bibliog., item 575.

A handbill, printed in Boston by Samuel Green in 1689, bears the heading: "An Account Of The Proceedings at New-York, 31 May." It consists of "A Declaration of the Inhabitants and Souldiers, belonging unto the several Companies of the Trained-Bands of New-York, the last of May, 1689," followed by "The Testimony of Hendrick Cuylar."
The "Declaration" is as follows: "We Declare, That notwithstanding our several Pressures and Grievances these many years under a wicked Arbitrary Power, exercised by our late Papish Governor Dongan, and ascertained concerning several of his wicked Councillors and Pensionaries, especially now under Lieutenant Governor Nicholson: We were resolved to expect with patience our Redemption from England, expecting to have part of that blessed and glorious Deliverance procured under God, by his Royal Highness, William and Mary; yet when we have long been harassed in our Liberty, Property, and the Laws, we were capelled and terrorised out of our Reason; but at last some being threatened by the said Lieutenant Governor Nicholson, and with a Pistol presented against the Corporal, and said to the Lieutenant Cuylar, that he would set the City on fire, for doing our Loyal Duty; We have thought fit, for our Conservation, and fear to be liable to answer for the Life of every Protestant that might have perished, and every House burnt or destroyed, if we had remained longer in Security: And also seeing daily Arrive from several Ports, Officers and Souldiers, who were entertained by the said Lieutenant Governor Nicholson in the Fort, besides his several Souldiers, of which there was a Number of Papists, contrary to the Law of England; by which Newcomers, some of the Burgers being threatened of some Design against them in few days, we thought Delay dangerous, so we have unanimously resolved to live no longer in such a Danger, but to secure the Fort without delay, which we have obtained with Success, without Resistance and Bloodshed, effected: And we Declare to be entirely and openly opposite to Papists and their Religion; and therefore expecting Orders from England, we shall Keep and Guard surely and faithfully the said Fort, in the behalf of the Power that now reigns in England, the several Privileges of the Persons of the Protestant Religion, that shall be Nominat'd, or Sent by the Power above said.

These are our most sincere Intentions, that we are glad to manifest, as well to the Power above said, that God hath pleased to submit us to, as to other persons, to avoid their Reproaches, May 31 that they could otherwise unjustly lay upon the said In-} inhabitants.

THE "New-York, the last of May, 1689.

"The Testimony of Hendrick Cuyler," which follows this, is as follows: "Hendrick Cuyler, Lieutenant to the Company of Cap-} tain Abraham de Peyster, Aged about Fifty Two Years; Deposeth, That on the Thirtieth Day of May last past, he commanding half a Company of the Dutch troops, in charge of the New-York, gave Order to one of his Corporals, to place a Sentinel at a certain Sally-port in the said Fort; But that the said Corporal returning, Declared to him the Deponent, That the Corporal of the Kings soldiery in pay in the said Fort, would not suffer him to place a Sentinel there; And that afterwards, the Lieutenant Governor, Captain Nicholson the then Commander in Chief, returning to the Fort, sent for him the said Deponent to come to him in his Chamber in the said Fort, which he the said Deponent did, and desired his Corporal Hendrick Jacobs to go along with him, because he the said Corporal could speak better English; and that as soon as the said Deponent was come up into the said Chamber, be called for the said Corporal, who followed him to come into the Chamber, which he did, and that as soon as the said Lieutenant Governor saw the said Corporal, he rose up in a passion, and said to the Corporal, You Ran, when do you hear? With that the said Corporal returned Answer, That he does have that it is Interpreted to him the said Deponent: Whereupon he the said Lieutenant Governor, took down a Pistol that hung by the wall, and threatened to shoot him the said Cor-} poral, and drove him out of the Room; And that afterwards the said Deponent remaining still in the said Room alone with the said Lieutenant Governor, the said Lieutenant Governor told him the said Deponent, That there were so many Rogues in the Town, that he was not sure of his Life, nor to walk the Streets; and that the said Lieutenant Governor further said, That before it should longer go after this manner, he would set the Town on Fire: And further be said not.

"Sworn before me this 10th of June, 1689, in New-York. Samuel Mulford, Justice of Peace."

"Boston Printed by Samuel Green, 1689."

Sept. 16 The Earl of Nottingham, secretary of state, writes to the Lord President: "Mr. Slaughter was upon ye list of ye Govern-} nor for New York 'tis was presented to ye King & I have this day acquainted my Lord Shrewsbury (in which ye Dept of the Secreta-} ry) wh'ye LSD repromption of Mr. Slaughter, & He tells me y'te Places of Govr of New York & lieut Govr of Virginia are to be fill'd by Mr Slaughter & Mr Nicholson, but ye disposal between ym y't left ye Common & where I shall endeavour to serve Mr Slaughter as ye LSD has promised me, or to get ye determina-} tion respect'd till ye LSD comes to town .... There are no letters from Ireland or Scotland & therefore no ground for ye reports of ye town yt ye late Kings army has mutiny'd." Kc.—From original letter said at Henhilke, Phila., Dec. 13, 1721.

At this time was printed and sold by Samuel Green, in Boston, the Present State of New-English Affairs, of which two copies only are known, in the Massachusetts archives, and one belonging to the author. This was really a "news-letter," in printed form.—See Green, Ten Facsimile Reproductions (Boston, Oct., 1903); Weeks and Bacon, An Historical Digest of the Provincial Press (1911), 21. Had its publication been continued, it could properly have been styled the first American newspaper, a distinction which some, even as it is, consider its due.

Jan. 25 There is a hiatus in the Minutes of the Common Council, as recorded in the volumes in the custody of the city clerk, from this date to March 24, 1691. In the appendix of Vol. VIII of the printed series, minutes of two meetings, on March 22 and April 26, 1690, are printed, which the editors say were discovered among some detached papers (C. O. C. VII, 143-44). In connection with researches undertaken for this work, the minutes of another meeting have been found. See Aug. 9.

Apr. 24 The following memorandum is made "for my Lt. Presidt!" of the committee of trade and plantations: "The Records belonging to the Province of New York having been removed to Boston upon uniting the Colonies of New England to that Province the Right Hon. the Lords of the Committee for trade & Plantations desire My Lord President to Move His Mai; that Orders may be Given for remitting those Records to New York upon the present alteratios of those Governm'ts."—From public record office, London (cited C. O. 5. 1681. No. 124).

This conference of colonial governors at New York, respecting the safety of the colonies, may be considered the first American congress. They decided to attempt the conquest of Canada, by a force descending Lake Champlain, and another sailing from Boston for Quebec. Cf. July 30, 1684.

The following "Council Chamber" memorandum is made in London: "My Lord President is desired to represent to His Mai; from the Lords of the Committee for Trade and Plantations the condition of the Province of New York as it is at present under no legal or Settled Government being in the hands of one Leider a Walloon, who has set himself at the head of the Rabble. —And that the French, by the latest Informations have made an Incursion into that Province and burnt one of the Forts, So that unless the Arch-Angell, the Convoy that has been appointed or some other he Not ordered to go immediately thither with Colonel Slaughter, the Stores and the two Foot Companies, That Province will in allprobability be lost, and the Province falling into the hands of the like Confusion, or under the Power of the French."—From public record office, London (cited C. O. 5. 1113. pp. 255-256).

Records of a common council meeting of this date have re- cently been discovered among detached papers in the custody of the city clerk. Former regulations concerning cemern and relating to the sale of liquor to Indians or slaves are reiterared to a large extent. The number of cemern is fixed at 24, and a tax-pit belonging to "a Certain Person Called Jno Vroom" is ordered to be re- moved. The activities of the body at this particular meeting are not so very important, but the discovery of this and the other detached papers previously mentioned (see Jan. 29) lead to the conclusion that the common council continued to be active throughout the Leider régime, even though the military power predominated.

Sept. 25 Until the first of the two known copies of The Present State of New-English Affairs (see 1689, Oct. —) came to light, Public Occurrences, the first issue of which appeared on this eat, was regarded as the earliest news publication of the English colonies in the Western Hemisphere. This issue of Public Occurrences was not only the first but the only issue which appeared. It was the first attempt to start a newspaper in the colonies, undoubtedly the printer intended to continue it regularly, but it fell under the ban of the government, and was immediately stopped. — Diary of Samuel Sewall, I: 323-35. The only known copy of this publication is in the Public Record Office, London.—Weeks and Bacon, Hist. Digest of Prov. Press, 24-25.

Regarding Bradford's relations with the Quakers in Philadelphia, we know that he was amicably released from his contract with them on April 29, 1692. The record reads:

"Monthly Meeting a Month, 29, 1692.

"William Bradford proposing to this Meeting that if Friends sewed it fitting he desired to be discharged from the engagement between Friends and him concerning the Press. Friends hav ing considered the matter are very willing the said Bradford should be free so far as regards this Meeting. And the Meeting appoints Samuel Godfrey, John De Lancey, and Alexander Beaardsey to collect what is subscribed and due for the time past within the limits of this Meeting and pay the same to William Bradford and bring an account thereof to the next Monthly Meeting."—From John William Wallace's Address delivered at the Celebration by the N. Y. His. Soc., May 20, 1863, of the 200th birthday of Mr. William Bradford. . . . (Albany, 1863), 61.
Although the Quakers, after committing Bradford and McComb to jail on Aug. 25, 1692, "took away a good quantity of W. Bradford's Letters [type], tending to the disabling of him to work for his Wife and Children; and upon pretense of another Warrant granted without any Conviction, signed by Samuel Jenings & Robert Evere Justices, John White, the Sheriff, took Goods out of the Shop of Will. Bradford half as much more as the said Warrant was for," and although Bradford, during the trial on Dec. 10, 1692, "told the Court, That seeing he had been so long detained Prisoner, and his Utensils with which he should work having been so long detained, he hoped now to have his Utensils returned, & to be discharged from his Imprisonment," and the court refused to grant either request (New England's Spirit of Persecution, New York, 1693), we know that Bradford's press continued work while he was in jail. His book was published in Philadelphia, in 1693.—Hildeburgh, Issues of the Penn. Press, 1685—1784.

Samuel Jenings, one of the justices who signed the warrant for the arrest of Bradford and McComb, makes the following statement in regard to their imprisonment:

"I shall give my Reader one Instance by which he may judge of the hard usage that John M'Comb and William Bradford met with during their Confinement, which they represent as very Close and Cruel (though, saith the Libeller p. 1 of that Book of the Tryal, &c.) to give everyone their Due, while the Goller was so kind as to let him, viz. J. M. go home an Hour or two sometimes in an Evening after it was dark, &c. This Deceit is too great to pass unreproved, had he or his Companions only the favour of a few Hours liberty in an Evening after it was dark. I have heard John White say, and believe it to be true, that he offered them upon their first coming in, if they would promise to come to him upon notice given them, they might go about their Business till then, which they would not accept at that time, (so doubt for this reason, that they might have it to say that they were in Prison) but soon after their Stomachs fell, and they accepted his offer, and I believe were never by him restrained more, and to my certain Knowledge they had their Liberty most of the time they bespeak to themselves to be under such hard usage."—From preface of Samuel Jenings's The State of the Case Briefly but Imperially given between the People called Quakers. . . . And George Keith. . . .
(London, 1694).

by Keith entitled Some Brief Remarks upon a late Book, entitled, George Keith once more brought to the Test, &c. having the Name of Caleb Pusey's at the end of the Preface, &c. at the end of the Book, which Bradford printed in 1704, controversy Pusey's work of 1705. Only two copies of this book of Keith are known, one in the John Carter Brown Library and one in the Library of Congress; the only known copy of Pusey's book is in the Friends Library of Philadelphia.

Regarding the confinement and release of Bradford and McComb, Keith says: "As one instance of my faithlessness (as C. P. is pleased to charge it) pag. 1. of his Preface, he brings a Certificate from John McComb, in the following words, viz."

Whereas, G. K., in p. 1. says, of him, "The Spirit of Railing, etc. New York, 1703" saith, Upon application made by William Bradford and John McComb, to Governor Leisler, for enlargement from their Imprisonment, he examined into the cause of their Commitment and finding it was upon a Religious difference, discharged them, acc. to the Persons above-mentioned, that G. K.'s relation aforesaid is false; for we the said William Bradford and John McComb, were both set at Liberty, from the said imprisonment, before ever Governor Fletcher, came into his Government of Pennsylvania And I do Certify, that I never made Application to him, the said Governor, for any other Person under him, for my Liberty. Witness my hand, "

"John McComb."

"When the Book of C. P. (with this printed Certificate) came to my hands, I was then in East-Jersey and bound for New-York, and I could not believe the said Certificate to W. Bradford (the other Person concerned) who admired not a little at the falseness of it, and said, he believed that some designing Person bad drawn J. McComb to sign that Certificate unaware, as (he says) he has known the Qrs. some times have drawn up Certificates and offered them to persons to sign, and who sometimes by that means have certified false things, as J. M. has in this case; and the said W. B. offered to give his Certificate to the contrary of what J. M has certified, a Copy of which Certificate follows at the end of this Book. Also I write to Mr. Talbot, who was about that time at Philadelphia, to go to J. McComb and enquire of him the case of the matter, & take his answer before Witnesses, person(s of Credit, which accordingly he did, and is as followeth,"

"Mr. Evans, Mr. J. Carpenter, Mr. N. Pease, and my self, went to John McComb, who as to the particular of his being set at Liberty, said, It was before Coll. Fletcher came into the Province. But the Question being furthered, Who cleared John White, the Sheriff, bid him go home, & come again when he call'd for him; and upon the death of John White [cf. Bradford's statement, infra] he look'd upon him self discharged, tho' never acquiterr by the course of Law, but only enlarged upon Parol."

"Bradford's affidavit, which is printed at the end of the book, is very exact, and proves the right of his confinement during the period when he was under arrest. It reads:"n

"Whereas in a late Book of Caleb Pusey's it is certified that William Bradford & John McComb were both discharged from their Imprisonment before Coll. Fletcher came to Philadelphia with the King and Queens Commission and took the Government out of the Quakers hands.

"These are to Certifie all whom it may concern, That John McComb and my self being imprisoned by the Quakers, we made application several times to the Quaker Magistrates for our enlargement but could not obtain it. Wherefore upon Governor Fletcher's coming to that Province, George Keith made application to him for our enlargement, and I my self made application by my Petition to said Governor Fletcher, (to which J. Mc Comb was privy) whereupon the Governor appointed a Committee of the Council, to examine into the cause of our Imprisonment, who made Report, That it was occasioned by a Religious Difference, and was not concerning the Government. Then I was sent for before the Governor and Council, and the Governor asked me several Questions concerning our Imprisonment. To which having ansiwered, I was ordered to withdraw. In a little time I was called in again to Governor Fletcher, told me, That he knew our imprisonment was occasioned by a Religious Difference, and therefore had ordered that I and my fellow Prisoner should be discharged. For which I return'd him Thanks. I also requested the favour that he would please to order my Printing Tools to be restored to me, which had been taken away from me. Upon the Governor sent for John White's (i.e. supra) the Sheriff, and ordered him to Return my said Tools, which were lodg'd in Samuel Jenings's House. From this time we were discharged from our Imprisonment, and not before. To the Truth of this I can depose upon Oath if required. Witness my hand this 27th of March, 1704."

"William Bradford."

As the above facts are supplied by the principal parties in interest and by other competent contemporary witnesses, it is only possible to reconcile the contradictions by assuming that one side or the other is guilty of prevarication. In this connection it seems hardly likely that Bradford, while occupying a conspicuous public office, would have allowed, The Spirit of Railing, etc. New York, 1703, to be actually imprisoned up to the time of his formal release or immediately after April 28, if he had come to New York and taken up his work as government printer on April 10. It seems as though it should be possible to clear up this mystery by a thorough examination of contemporary records and authorities.

The question of priority of publication among the twenty-five known imprints from Bradford's press which Mr. Eames lists as belonging to this first year of printing in New York City is difficult to determine, and has been much mooted. There are two to be published, the Bulletin of the New York Public Library, the results of searching studies, made by Mr. Eames, regarding the internal evidence contained in the known Bradford publication of 1693, with the aid of all available external evidence on the subject, to determine, as nearly as possible, the order of printing, etc. The reader is referred to this article as containing the latest and most authoritative statement of the known facts regarding the introduction of printing in New York.

The inducements which brought Bradford to New York, as indicated by the resolution adopted by the provincial council on March 25 (p. 56), were that, "for printing of Our Acts of Assembly & publick papers," he should be allowed, as government printer, a salary of £50 per annum, "& have the benefit of his printing besides what serve the public." According to this resolution, the public documents were to be his first and chief concern.

Of the extant Bradford imprints, the following acts, etc. must have been ready to print when he came to New York:

An Act for Restraining and Punishing Privateers and Pirates, passed Sept. 10, 1692 (printed in two issues, 3 pp. each, no colophon);

An Act for Granting to their Majesties the Rate of One Penny per Pound upon all the Real and Personal Estates within this Province, passed Nov. 12, 1692 (4 pp., no colophon);

An Act for raising six Thousand Pound for the payment of three Hundred Volunteers, passed April 10, 1693 (two issues, 6 pp. each, with complete colophon—see Pl. 21);

Fletcher's proclamation of August 20, 1693, against Sabbath-breking (broadside; only known copy in Lib. of Congress, the gift of Mr. Stuyvesant Fish);

Narrative Of an Attempt made by the French of Canada upon the Mohiques Country . . . A Journal kept by Coll. Nicholas Beyard and Lieut. Coll. Charles Lodwick (the only known copy of which was discovered by Miss Hasse in the Public Record Office, London) (14 pp.); and the Address of the Fretholders of Philadelphia (3 pp.).

It appears likely that one of the six pieces mentioned above has the distinction of being the first product of printing-press in this city; although as more than thirty acts had been passed before Bradford's arrival, it is of course possible that one of these, now lost, may have been printed earlier. Of the Narrative Of an Attempt made by the French we know that the only recorded copy reached London late in September, for it is endorsed "Reed 26 Sept 1693" from Coll. Fletcher, and, as other items which bear the same endorsement left America the last of July, it may be fairly assumed that this document was printed during that month.

Inasmuch as A Journal kept by coll. Stephen Courtland and Coll. Nich. Beyard (Pl. 21), the only known copy of which was discovered by Mr. Eames in 1900, in the catalogue of Bibliothèque Nationale, records events which transpired in Albany in June and the early part of July, 1693, which dates also appear on the title-page, it can not have been ready for printing until long after Bradford's arrival.
The complete list of Bradford's known imprints for the year 1693, as prepared by Mr. Eames, and arranged alphabetically, is as follows:

Addenda: An Account of Several Passages and Letters between his Excellency Benjamin Fletcher, ... And The present Administrators, of the Laws in the Colony of Connecticut.
(6 pp.)

(6 pp.) This is sometimes called "the first protest against slavery printed in America."

Fletcher, Proclamation, 29 April 1693, on the Sabbath. (Broadside.) Mr. Eames places this item among the 1693 imprints principally on the assumption that Bradford moved to New York on April 10, although it is of course possible, indeed probable, that it was printed there even if he did not arrive before May or June.

Fletcher, Proclamation, 27 July 1693, on the assembly. (Broadside, in Pub. Record Office, endorsed "Rec'd 16 Sept. 1693 from Col. Fletcher.)

Fletcher, Proclamation, 8 Nov. 1693, to the people of Connecticut, urging them to "yield and render an inestimable Obedience unto their Majesties most gracius Commission." (Broadside.)

Fletcher, Proclamation, 13 Nov. 1693, relative to deserters from the army and navy, and travellers without passports. (Broadside.)

Fletcher, Annall Officeren, 8 June 1693, announcing that license has been given to collect money to redeem the slaves in Sale. (Broadside.)

Fletcher, To all Officeren, 8 June 1693, on captives. (Broadside.)

Fletcher, To all Officeren, 8 June 1693. (Differs from preceding.)

A Journal kept by coll. Stephen Courland and coll. Nich. Beyard, ... appointed by the council to attend His Excellency Benjamin Fletcher, captain general and governor in chief of the province of New-York, ... to Albany, in treating with the Indians of the Two Nations and Roman Catholics of that province, in the months of June and July, 1693. ... (15 pp.)

Mr. Lancaster's Queries to the Quakers. (Fragment, 3 pp.)

A Narrative Of An Attempt made by the French of Canada upon the Mohagey Country, ... (14 pp.)

New England's Spirit of Persecution Transmitted to Pennsylvania. (38 pp.) See 1692.

New-York, An Act for restraining ... Pirates. (In two issues, 3 pp. each.)

New-York, An Act for granting to their Majesties the Rate of One Penny per Pound upon all the Real and Personal Estates within this Province. (4 pp.)

New-York, An Act for raising six Thousand Pound for the payment of three Hundred Volunteers, and their Officers. ... (In two issues, 6 pp. each.)

New-York, A Catalogue of Free Established by the Governor and Council of this Province. The first issue was printed after Sept. 29, 1693; the second after the first, or shortly after Sept. 29, 1693, was sent to the assembly for the governor and council, for their action, on that day (see Moore's "Intro'd. of Printing into N.'Y.")

New York City, Humble Address of the Mayor, Recorder, Aldermen and Commonalty. (Broadside.)

Pennsylvania, An Act for granting One Penny per Pound. (4 pp.)

Philadelphia, The Address of some of the Peaceable and well Affectu Free-holders and Inhabitants. (1 pp.)

Primer and Catechism for Children. (Fragment, 8 pp.)

In this year, Benjamin Harris, of Boston, printed a catalogue of the library of the Rev. Samuel Lee, which was offered for sale. Evans refers to this (No. 645) as "perhaps the earliest work of its kind printed in the Colonies." For the earliest known book-sale catalogue printed in New York, see 1755.

The Ministry Act was the direct outcome of secret instructions given to Fletcher at Kensington, March 7, 1692. The part of these instructions relating to religion directed, among other things, that the "Churches of Common Prayer be read; that the Sacrament be administered "according to the Rites of the Church of England;" that the "Churches already built there [the crown possessions in America] be well and orderly kept, and more built as the Colony shall by God's blessing be improved and that besides a competent Maintenance to be assigned to the Minister of each Orthodox Church a convenient house be built at the Common Charge for each Minister and a competent proportion of land assigned him for a Glebe and exercise of his Industry also to the Rey. Mr. president by warrant to be authorized by you to any ecclesiastical Benefice in that our Province, without a certificate from the Right Reverend the Bishop of London, of his being conformable to the doctrine and discipline of the Church of England. ..." While these provisions clearly meant making the Church of England the established church in this province, the instructions nevertheless permitted "a liberty of Consociation to all persons (except Papists)."—N. Y. Col. Docs., III: 811-23

Fletcher made the establishment of the ministry his first duty by recommending it in his opening address to the provincial legislature (see Sept. 26, 1692); but so reluctant were the dissenters, who composed the larger part of the assembly, to support the proposed measure that Fletcher was compelled again and again to reiterate his recommendation which soon grew into a demand for their entire compliance.—Eccles. Rets., II: 1045, 1048, 1054, 1071, 1075.

The serious situation developed under the Ministry Act that the members of all denominations in the city—Dutch Reformed, Lutherans, Jews, Papists, Presbyterians, Methodists, etc.—in the colonial period, contributed to the salary of the Episcopal ministry. For names of contributors, see the volumes of Assessment Rolls of New York, in 1710 in the comptroller's office.

The English government established the Anglican church, but its language was so indefinite that its meaning and application were disputed down to the Revolution.—Eccles. Rets., VI: 4231-34; VII: 13-14. See Apr. 5, 1774, infra. Dr. George H. Moore writes of it: "There can be no doubt that it was the intention of the Assembly to provide for the maintenance of the Dissenting Clergy. Such had been the manifest tendency of the previous legislation on the subject. All the Assembly but one were Dissenters and the Church of England was hardly known in the Province. ... The Act was very loosely worded, which as circumstances stood then it was hardly to be wondered at. The Dissenters could claim the benefit of it as well as Churchmen, and unless wrested from its true bearing it admitted a construction in their favor. Indeed they had good reason to claim that it was intended for them, and that they only had a right to it. In fact, it was arbitrarily and illegally wrested from its true bearing, and made to answer the purpose of the English Church party, which was a very small minority of the people who were affected by the operation of the law."—Hist. Mag., 2d ser., I: 321-33.

The house of representatives addresses the governor, asking for leave to print its votes "this Session." The next day, on proroguing the assembly, the governor, in his address to the joint session of the council and assembly, made the following reply: "You now desire licence to print the Votes. ..." Speaker Harris at the opening of the sessions, if I may call it one, told him they might be printed de die in diem; but it never was asked before."—Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 76. For the title-page of Bradford's first printing of the Assemb. Jour., see July 4. According to Hildeburn, in Mem. Hist. of N'.Y., I: 581, this is "The earliest publication of the proceedings of an American legislature." This first issue, or collection of daily issues, includes transactions from June 20 to July 4, inclusive, each day's transactions of Fates being, apparently, printed separately and bound with title-pages for, while all are pagged consecutively, each bears Bradford's imprint. See also Miss Hase's check-list of publications of the New York assembly, etc., in N. Y. Pub. Library Bulletin (1907), p. 5.

The earliest extant volume of New York City tax rolls begins with this date. It is at present in the custody of the N. Y. Hist. Society, and is labelled Tax Lists 1693 to 1699. The handwriting is that of William Sharpes, the city clerk. Throughout the volume the property holders are listed by "wards," and against the name of each person is placed the valuation and the assessment. Appended to the list in each ward are the names of the assessors who did the work. The volume opens with an assessment of "one farthing per pound" levied on "the Estates Real And personal of all the Freeholders Infectants and Resident's of the Province for six Moonths," etc; this assessment was pursuant to an act of the legislature passed on July 3 (p.c.). It was desired to raise £50, and the lists total £335:12:0.

Rev. Charles E. Corwin, son of the late Dr. E. T. Corwin who edited the Eccles. Recs. of the State of N. Y., makes the following observations, in answer to the inquiry respecting this charter: The Reformed Church in America as a Denomination never had a colonial charter. It was incorporated by the State of New York in 1819. Several individual Dutch Reformed churches of colonial times had individual royal charters. Of these the first was that of the College of New York Church of England Ministers belonging to 5th Flott, & City of New York, & for 5th Chaplains of his Majties Ships during their Residence in 5th Port.

Secondly To ye End ye any Plans concerned may have a free Ingress, & Regress, it is desired ye Books may be kept in some publick Room in 5th Flott, or in ye Vestry of ye Church at New York, so as shall be most Convenient for ye Clergy to come at ye Use of em.

Thirdly That three Registers of these Books be made, one whereof to Remain with ye 5th Ld Bp of London, a Second with his Excellency ye Governor, & a Third to remain in ye Library.

For yr better Preservation of em it is desired yr Gentlemen of ye Vestry woud yearly Inspect yr Books & p[uts]ent, as to yr Govt., so to ye 5th Ld Bp of London an accr wherby they are Safe, or anywise Impeach'd or Lost.—Keep, Hist. of the N. T. Society Library, 16.

Bellomont writes from Boston to Capt. Kidd: "Mr. Emmet came to me last Tuesday night telling me he came from you but was shy of telling where he parted with you. Nor did I press him to it. He told me he came by Oyster Bay in Nassau Island and sent for him to New York. He proposed to me that I would grant you a pardon. I answered that I had never granted one yet, and that I had set myself a rule never to grant a pardon to anybody without the King's express leave or command. He told me you declared and protested your innocence and that if your men could be persuaded to follow your example, you would make no manner of scruple of coming into this port, or any other within His Majesty's Dominions. That you owned you were two ships taken, but that your men did it violently and against your will, and had used you barbarously, in imprisoning you and treating you ill the most part of your voyage, and often attempting to murder you. Mr. Emmet delivered to me the two French passes taken on board the other two ships your men rifled, which passes I have in my custody, and I am apt to believe they will be a good article to justify you, if the late peace were not by the treaty between England and France to operate in that part of the world at the time the hostility was committed, as I am almost confident it was not to do. Mr. Emmet told me that you showed a great sense of honour and justice in professing with many assurances your settled and serious design all along to do honour to your Commission and never to do the least thing contrary to your allegiance to the King. And this I have to say in your defence, that several persons in New York, who I can bring to evidence it, did tell me that by several advices from Madagascar and that part of the world, they were informed of your men's revolting from you in one place, and I assure you, Mr. Campbell, that Madagascar has committed you much against your will to take and rifle two ships.

"I have advised with His Majesty's Council, and showed them this letter, and they are of opinion that if you can be so clear as you (or Mr. Emmet for you) have said, that you may safely come hither, and be equipped and fitted out to go and fetch the other ship, and I make no manner of doubt but to obtain the King's pardon for you, and for those few men you have left who I understand have been faithful to you, and refused as well as you to dishonour the Commission you have from England.

"I assure you on my Word and Honour I will perform nicely what I have promised, though this I declare beforehand that whatever goods and treasure you may bring hither, I will not meddle with the least bit of them: but they shall be left with such persons as the Council shall advise until I receive orders from England how they shall be disposed of."—Dalton, The Real Capt. Kidd (1911), 95.

Capt. Kidd, "From Block Island on the Sloop Anthony," sends the following in reply to Bellomont's letter of June 19 (supra): "I am honoured with your Lordship's letter of the 19th instant by Mr. Campbell, which came to my hands this day. . . . I cannot but blame myself for not writing to your Lordship before this time, knowing it was my duty: but the clamours and false stories that have been reported of me, made me fearful of visiting or coming into any harbour, till I could hear from your Lordship.

"I note the contents of your Lordship's letter, as to what Mr. Emmet and Mr. Campbell informed your Lordship of my proceedings I do affirm to be true, and a great deal more might be said of the abuses of my men, and the hardships I have undergone to preserve the ship and what goods my men had left. Ninety-five men went away from me in one day and went on board the Mecu Frigate, Captain Robert Culliford, Commander, who went away to the Red Sea; and committed several acts of piracy, as I am informed; and am afraid (the men formerly belonging to my Galley) that the report is gone home against me to the East India Company, that I have a good action. A sheet of paper was taken in which what I had left of the trade I took to preserve the owners interest, and to come home to clear my own innocence. I do further declare and protest that I never did in the least act contrary to the King's Commission, nor to the reputation of my honourable owners, and doubt not but that I shall be able to make my innocence appear; or else I had no need to come to these parts of the world, if it were not for that and my owners interest. There are Five or Six Passengers that came from Madagascar to assist me in bringing the ship home, and about ten of my own men, that came with me would not venture to go into Boston, till Mr. Campbell had engaged Body for Body for them that they should not be molested while I stayed at Boston, or till I return with the ship. I doubt not but your Lordship will write to England in my favour and for these few men who are left.

"I wish your Lordship would persuade Mr. Campbell to go home with me; and with your Lordship's letter, who will be able to give account of our affairs and diligently follow the same that there may be a speedy answer from England. I desired Mr. Campbell to buy 1000 weight of Rigging for fitting of the ship to bring her to Boston, that I may not be delayed when I come there. to answer to receiving of your Lordship's letter, I am making the best of my way to Boston."—Dalton, The Real Capt. Kidd (1911), 98-101.

While Dalton's book was in preparation, the records were critically re-examined by the late Frederick Lewis Gay and Mr. John Surratt, the late Mr. John J. Moors, and by Mr. Campbell. Since Mr. Gay's death, Mr. Edmonds has embodied the results of his investigations and Mr. Gay's in a paper entitled "Lord Bellomont and the Pirates," read before the Old South Association on July 13, 1911. Mr. Gilder's very thorough review of the documents has resulted in a book, not yet published, but epitomized in a lecture entitled "Captain Kidd, the Man and the Myth," delivered before the Century Club, New York, in Dec., 1921. The investigations of both Mr. Edmonds and Mr. Gilder unearthed those charges to clarify Kidd from the charge of piracy. Mr. Gilder makes very clear the political situation in England which led to the tragedy of Capt. Kidd's conviction and execution as a pirate and murderer.

Capt. Kidd draws up an account of his voyage, in the "Adventure Galley," for the use of the East India Company and presented to the council at Boston. In this he declares "That the said Adventure Galley was launched in Castle's Yard at Deptford, about the Fourth of December 1695; and about the latter end of February the said Galley came to in the bay of in the Nore: and about the 1st Day of March following, his men were pressed for him for the Fleet; which caused him to stay there for Nineteen Days; and then sailed for the Donnes . . . and sailed thence for Plymouth; and on the Twenty-third Day of . . . April he sailed on his intended Voyage: and, some time in the month of May, met with a small French Vessel, in which he took and made prize of, and carried the same into New York, about the Fourth Day of July, when she was condemned as lawful Prize . . .

"That about the Sixth Day of September 1696, the said Captain Kidd sailed for the Maderas . . . and thence to Bonavista . . . and said thence to St. Jago . . . and, thence sailed for the Cape of Good Hope; June 1697. . . .

"Capt. Kidd, "Kidd's Chronicle," continuing, "That the Board of Trade wrote to the Governor of Madagascar, that the Twelfth Day of December 1696, met with Four English Men of War . . . and sailed a week in their Company; and then parted, and sailed to Telege, a Port in the Island of Madagascar . . . And, about the latter end of February, sailed for the Island of Johanna, . . . where he found Four East India Merchants outward bound . . . And from thence, about the Twenty-second of March, sailed for Meluha, an Island Ten Leagues distant from Johanna, where he arrived the next Morning, and there learned the said Galley; and about Fifty men died there in a Week's Time.

"That on the 25th Day of April 1697, sailed for the Cape of Good God; and so parted wishing each other a good Voyage; And making still along the Coast, the Commodore of the said Man of War kept dogging the said Galley all the Night, waiting an Opportunity to board her; and in the Morning, without speaking a Word, Fixed Six great Guns at the Galley, some whereof went through her, and wounded Four of his Men; and thereupon he fired upon him again; and the Fight continued all Day; and the narrator had Eleven Men wounded: . . . the said Fight was sharp, and the said Portuguese left the said Galley with such Satisfaction, that the Narrator believes no Portuguese will ever attack the King's Colours again, in that Part of the World especially. And afterwards continued upon the same Coast, cruising upon the coast of Cameroon, for Pirates that frequent that Coast, . . .

"And that about the 18th or 19th Day of . . . November, met with a Moors Ship of about 200 Tons, coming from Suratt, bound to the Coast of Malabar; which said Ship the Narrator hailed, and commanded on board; and with him came Eight or Nine Moors, and . . . Three Dutchmen, who declared it was a Moors Ship; and demanding their pass from Suratt, which they showed; and the same was a French Pass, which he believed was shown by a Mistake, in which he swore Sacrament she was a Prize, and stood on board the Galley; and would not return on board the Moor Ship; and went in the Galley to the Port of St. Marie.

"And that, about the First Day of February following, upon the same Coast, under French Colours with a Design to decoy, met and boarded a Ship belonging to P. Gilder, at the Passage of 4 or 500 Tons, to Guns; and he commanded the Master on board; and a Frenchman. . . Gunner of the said Ship, came on board as Master; and when he came on board, the Narrator caused the English Colours to be hoisted; and the said Master was surprised, and said, You are all English; and asking, which was the Captain? Whom then he saw, said, Here is a good Prize, and delivered him the French Flag.

"And that, with the said Two Prizes, sailed for the Port of St. Marie's in Madagascar; and, sailing thither, the said Galley was so leaky, that they feared she would have sunk every Hour, and it required the efforts of every Two Gunner to keep her free; and was forced to would her round with Cables to keep her together; and with much ado carried her into the said Port of St. Marie's, where she arrived about the First of April, 1698: And about the 6th day of May, the lesser Prize was haled into the creeping Island or Key, the ship having been taken in the night and ran aground on the shore men; threatened the Narrator, and the men that would not join with them to burn and sink the other, that they might not go home and tell the news.

"And that, when he arrived in the said Port, there was a Pirate Ship called the Moça Frigate, at an Anchor, Robert Culliford, Commander thereof; who with his Men, left the same at his coming in, and ran into the Woods, and the Narrator proposed to his Men to take the same, having sufficient Power and Authority so to do; but the Mutinous Crew told him, If he offered the same, they would rather fire Two Guns on him, than one into the other; and thereupon Ninety-seven deserted, and went into the Moça Frigate, and sent into the Woods for the said Pirates, and brought the said Culliford, and his Men, on board again; and all the time she staid in the said Port, which was the Space of Four or Five Days, the said Deserters, sometimes in great Numbers, came on board, and proposed to the said Narrator, to take the Adventure Prize, and sent into the Woods for said Pirates, and having about Forty small Arms, besides Pistols, ready charged, kept them out; Their Wildness was so great, after they had plundered and ransacked sufficiently, went Four Miles off to one Edward Welch's House, where his the Narrator's Chest was lodged, and broke it open; and took out Ten Ounces of Gold, 40 Pound of Plate, 370 Pieces of Eight, the Narrator's Journal, and a great many Papers that belonged to him, and the People of New York that fitted them out.

"That about the 15th June, the Moça Frigate went away, being manned with about 130 Men, and Forty Guns, bound out to take all Nations: Then it was that the Narrator was left with only Thirteen men; so that the Moors [and he had to pump and keep the Adventure Galley above Water, being carried away, the sunk in the Harbour, and the Narrator, with the said Thirteen men, went on board the Adventure Prize, where he was forced to stay Five Months for a Fair Wind; In the meantime, some Passengers presented, that were bound for these Parts; which he took on board, to help to bring the said Adventure Prize home.

"That, about the beginning of April, 1699, the Narrator arrived at Anguilla in the West Indies, and sent his Beant on Shore, where his Men had the News that he and his People were proclaimed Pirates, which put them into such Consternation, That they sought all Opportunity to run the Ship on Shore upon some Reef or Shoal, fearing the Narrator should carry them into some English Port. From Anguilla they came to St. Thomas; where his Brother-in-law Samuel Bradley was put on shore, being sick; and Five more went away, and deserted him: Where he heard the same News, That the Narrator, and his Company, were proclaimed Pirates, which increased the People more and more.

"From St. Thomas, an Island between Hispaniola and Porto Rico; where they met with a Sloop called the St. Anthony, bound for Antigua from Curacoa, . . . The men on board then swore, they would bring the Ship no further. The Narrator then sent the said Sloop St. Anthony for Curacoa, for Canvas to make his own Tent pieces; and the Prize, not being able to proceed, and she returned in Ten Days; and after the Canvas came, he could not persuade the Men to carry her for New England; but Six of them went and carried their Chests and Things on board of Two Dutch Ships; bound for Curacoa; and would not so much as bed themselves, or do anything, the Remainder of the men not being able to bring the Adventure Prize to Boston, the Narrator secured her in a good Harbor in some Part of Hispaniola and left in the Possession of Mr. Henry Benson of Antequa, Merchant, the Maket, Three of the old Men, and Fifteen or Sixteen of the men that belonged to the said Sloop St. Anthony, and a Brigantine belonging to one Mr. Burt of Curacoa.

“That the Narrator bought the said Sloop St. Anthony of Mr. Boulton, or the Owner's Account, and offered, he had given Directiwell paid, I will rout pirates and piracy entirely out of all this July north part of America . . . I am forced to allow the sheriff 40s. per week for keeping Kidd safe. Otherwise I should be in some danger; and without the security, he has paid to me, he would be apt to tempt men who have not principles of honour. I have, therefore, to try the power of iron against gold, put him into iron that weighs 16 lbs. . . . There never was a greater liar or thief in the world than this Kidd. Notwithstanding he assured the Council and every time we examined him to the great ship, and his cargo waited his return to bring her hither, you will see by two informations of masters of ships from Curacao that the cargo has been sold there. . . . To-morrow I send the sloop Kidd came in with letters to the L. G. of Antegoa, the Governors of St. Thomas Island and Curacao to set down and receive what effects they carry that was late in the possession of Kidd and on board the Quadiah Merchant . . . The sending of this sloop will cost but about £500, if she be out 3 months. . . . Since my commitment of Kidd I hear that upon his approach to this port, his heart misgave him, and he proceeded to his men the putting to sea again and going to Caledonia, the new Scotch settlement, but they refused. I desire I may have orders to do with Kidd and all his Bradish's crew, for as the law stands in this country, if a pirate were convict, yet he cannot suffer death . . . You will observe by some of the information that Kidd did not rob the two M. ships, but also a Portuguese ship, which he denied absolutely to the Council and me. I send papers relating to him."—Cal. State Papers, Am. & W. I. (1699), 366-70. Bellmont was ordered to send Kidd and the other pirates to England (see Feb. 10, 1700). Nov. 29

The Chronology includes a legislative act of May 16, 1699 (g.t.), authorizing the city government to raise money by taxation for erecting "a new city hall" and for other purposes. It also includes a resolution of the common council of Nov. 2 (g.c.) fixing the amount to be so raised. Pursuant to this act, "Assessments of the Estates Real & Personal of 26 Inhabitants Freeholders & Governors" were levied for each quarter of the year 1700, the assessments for the first quarter being made Nov. 29, 1699. These assessments, in the handwriting of the city clerk, William Sharpes, occupy the first part of the earliest volume save one (see A. Dec. 1695) of the city tax rolls. This is avellum-bound book, now in the custody of the bureau of municipal investigations and statistics of the department of finance. The names of property owners are listed by wards, and, against each name, the assessed valuation of the person's holdings and the amount of his tax. The amounts to be raised during each of the four quarters varied; so did the rate. For the first quarter £400 was the amount to be raised, and the rate was "Seaven farthins And four White Wampum [this appears to be the latest recorded use of wampum as a money value in the pound]." Frederick Phillips appears as the largest tax-payer; his assessment for the first quarter was £615; on a valuation of £2,000. This remains the assessment roll of the city's quota "for building a Forte for the security of the five Nations of Indians" (see Dec. 28, 1700); other rolls for raising £450 "for the Maintenance of the Minister and poor" from the second Tuesday in January, 1701; still other rolls, prepared on Jan. 1, 1703 (g.t.), to raise the city's quota for maintaining soldiers at Albany.—Assessments 1699 to 1700 (M.S.), in room 703, Municipal Bldg. Elizabeth Lloyd sells to Miles Forster land lying "without the fortifications . . . and Adjoining Easery on the Land of John Vae Gee [Jan Vigne or Vinger] Northerly by a piece of Land belonging to William Morris in the New Street leading from the Stocado gate to the Lane called Green or Maiden Lane."—From the original bill of sale, in box No. 1, N. Y. MSS., N. Y. Hist. Soc. The "New Street" was Kip (now Nassau St.).—See Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 1006. It is shown, as here described, on the Miller Plan (see page 191). The bill of sale was on the east side of Nassau St., between Cedar and Liberty St., later occupied by the Middle Reformed Dutch Church (Landmark Map Ref. Key, III: 935), which was conveyed afterwards to the U. S. Government for use as a post-office. The ground is at present occupied by the Forest Life Insurance Co. building. The deed from Lloyd to Forster bears the same date as the bill of sale, and is recorded in Liber Deeds, XXIII: 165.

It has proved impossible to complete, in time for inclusion in this volume, the promised sketch showing the development of the East River water front from the earliest times to 1750. It is hoped, however, that this can be included in the Landmark Map Ref. Key, Addenda, Vol. V.

In the second line of the item in the text referring to this subject, under 1700 (see p. 421), the date "1749—9" should be read 1649-5.

In a letter to Secretary Vernon, Bellmont makes the following interesting statement to his correspondent, in regard to the Capt. Kidd. "As to Kidd's pretence of urging to his owners the necessity of allowing the seamen pay, I can safely take my oath there was no such thing, but so far the contrary, as that as often as I saw him he told me he knew the pyrate wants so well, that he could sail directly to 'em but his articles with him which I send you . . . will shew his mind in that matter; for when we don't hear a man treat of a bargain, his hand and seal is the best evidence of his assent and consent to a bargain. As to my letter I write to Kidd by Burgese, and wth Capt Loweth intercepted, I own I write to him to come to N. Yorke, and if it be rightly considered, I did therein what became me. Upon my first coming hither I had reason to suspect he was turn'd rogue or pyrate, for his articles wth me, he came hither to N. Yorke and here stayed ab & 3 months, and Mr Livingston whom I found here before me told me he had some reasons to suspect he would turn pyrate. Two of his reasons were, a bargain whisper'd about, that Fletcher had covened wth Kidd to receive £5000 if he made a good voyage; the other was the dissolute life Kidd had liv'd during the 3 months he staid here. But when I write that letter to Kidd by Burgese, I had no account he was certainly turn'd pyrate, and then I could not be blam'd to have a just indignation against him, and to try all means to get him into my hands, and 'tis plain menasing him had not been the way to invite him hither, but rather wheeling, and that way I took, and after that manner I got him at last into Boston when I sec'd him; and a copy of that letter I then wrif to him, I sent you the first news of my seizing him. If I was faulty in the letter I write by Burgese, I was no less so in that I write by Mr Cambell wth brought in Kidd to Boston . . . "—N. T. Cal. Docs., IV: 815-16.

The city's assessment rolls are prepared for the purpose of raising £1,000 voted (Nov. 2) by the provincial legislature "for the better securing the five Nations of Indians in their fidelity to his Majesty and . . . for building a Forte for the security of the five Nations of Indians." The assessment is "one penny halfpenny halfpence farthing per pound." The names of property owners are listed by wards, and against the name of each person appears the valuation of his property and the amount of his assessment.—Assessments 1699 to 1703 (M.S.), in room 703, Municipal Bldg. See Nov. 29, 1699, Addenda.

The trial of Capt. William Kidd begins, at the Old Bailey. May According to the custom of the time, he is forced to conduct his own defence, and is allowed no help in cross-examining witnesses. His counsel is permitted to address the court only on questions of law. Although he was arrested for piracy, a charge of murdering his gunner, William Moore, is brought against him, without warn- ing, and he is allowed no time to prepare his defence. Two of the men who deserted him at Madagascar (see July 7, 1699, Addenda) testify against him, and three sailors who were arrested with him give evidence in his favour. Kidd is prevented by Lord Chief Baro Ward from discrediting one of the mutineers as a witness, and from calling evidence to his own good character. The Lord Chief Baro sums up against him, and in about an hour, the jury pronounces him guilty.—Dalton, The Real Capt. Kidd, 141-66; 334-55.

On the following day, his two counsel failed to appear, and the indictment was dismissed for a lack of witnesses, and other papers which would have proved his innocence, and which the house of commons bad ordered to be delivered to him, were not produced. The two mutineers again testified against him, but the sailors who remained faithful to him were not permitted to be witnesses for him because they were included in the indictment. Kidd, no Kidd, of course, no experienced lawyers who were determined to convict him, nor for the Lord Chief Baro, who, in his summing up, insinuated that the French passes did not exist. After the jury had brought in a verdict of guilty, and the judge had sentenced him to be hanged, Kidd declared: "My lord, it is a very hard sentence. For my part, I am
The innocentest person of them all, only I have been sworn against.

On Atwood's arriving in England, charges of corruption were brought against him for his conduct in the Bayard case and otherwise. In 1712, Maggs Bros., London, advertised for sale (see their catalogue No. 401) a collection of seventeen original documents bearing upon Atwood's case. These included Atwood's petition to the house, asking for restitution to his offices of chief-justice of the supreme court, member of the council, and judge of the court of admiralty of New York Province (see Aug. 4, 1701); a similar petition from several members of the Leisler party in New York, including Jacob Leisler (2d) and Abraham Governor; the English solicitor-general's opinion on Atwood's petition; and two petitions to the queen against Atwood's reinstatement, signed by British merchants trading to New York, and by freeholders and merchants of New York City. Atwood never returned.

Apr. Hannah, the wife of John Hutchins, declares, in a petition to the government, that her husband is to be tried on a charge of "of which he is altogether innocuous," and that she has seen the "pannel of the jury which is to try him, and finds that all are of "Dutch Extraction," persons unacquainted with the English language, and also "Strangers" to her husband's "life and Conversation." She asks that the jury may consist of "Englishmen or at least [of] persons of English Extraction," men who may "properly be said to be of his neighbourhhood."—Col. MSS., XLVI: 96b (Albany).

Broadway, which is to this day a very sharp ascent. It is shown as

Gov. Lovelace commences March 11, 1709, the day of his departure from England with Col. Nicholson. It goes into minute details of their doings, including interviews with various assemblies of the American provinces. After negotiations in New England, they came into New York on May 18. On the 19th, Col. Vetch recorded: "the Lieut. Governor Co LLingdibbe summoned a Council at Flint Ann; where we presented to them Her Majesties original instructions relating to the Expedition copies of which we had transmitted them before; after they had been read over in council and we had acquainted them with several things to be done not express in the same, &c. From this point he continues his account of the transactions. The original document was in the possession of Maggs Bros., London, in October, 1720, and appears in their catalogue of that date.

By the terms of the first New York paper currency act, the bills of credit were to be for a total face value of £5,000. The form of the bills, as described in the act, is shown in the reproduction given

400 were to be for £3: 00: 00 each 600 " 5: 00: 00
800 " 10: 00: 00

It should be observed that the act of May 24, 1709, for raising £8,000 by taxation, to aid the Canada expedition, named Capt.
Robt. Walters, Capt. Lawrence Reade, Capt. John de Peyster, and Capt. Robt. Luttin commissioners to manage the expedition.

poor Lord is now confined to his house..." The rest of the letter concerns Memphis, and his appointment as chief-justice.

Gov. Lovelace, in his first address to the assembly, says: "The large Supplies of Soldiers and Stores of War for your Support and Defence, together with those necessary Presents for your Indian Neighbors, which her Majesty hath now sent you... are evident Proofs of her particular Care of you..."

"I cannot in the least doubt (Gentlemen) that you'll raise the same Revenue, for the same Term of Years, for the Support of the Government, as was raised by Act of Assembly in the eleventh Year of the Reign of the late King William, of glorious Memory..."

"I must in particular, desire you to provide for the necessary Repairs of the Fortifications of the Province. The Barracks are so small and so much out of repair, that I have been necessitated to billet the Recruits, that came over with me, upon this City, which I am sensible, hath been a Burthen to the Inhabitants; but I hope you will soon ease them of that Burthen."

"The Sifting out a good Sloop, to attend her Majesty's Men of War in their Cruizings on this Coast, I take to be so necessary, for preserving your Navigation, that I expect you will find out a proper Method to defray that Charge. I am willing my Salary should be Taxed, that I may pay my Quota to so useful a Service."

Ingoldesby writes from Perth Amboy to Lord Sunderland, secretary of state, accusing him of the death of Lord Lovelace, and informing him that he has taken upon himself the charge of the administration of the government of New York and New Jersey. He asks for a continuance in the position. He also reports the suspension of Lewis Morris.—From catalogue No. 401 of Maggs Bros., London.

Col. Vetch writes from New York to the Earl of Sunderland, secretary of state: "I have presumed to lay before you a short view of the miserable circumstances of the provinces of New York and Jerseys as we found there upon our arrival after the death of my Lord Lovelace, in neither of which there was so much as one shilling of publyk money. The misapplication of the publyk money by the Governors that preceded my Lord Lovelace having discouraged quite the Assembly for setting any more revenue [revenue]. The province of New York about sixteen thousand pounds indebted, for payment of which the Assembly have all along forborne raising of money for fear of its not being applied to the proper use.

"This deplorable condition of the aforesaid province with regard to the publyk stock, as well as their publyk divisions and parties which are very violent, makes me presume most humbly to offer my advice to your Lordship. as a very probable way of remedying all these evils Col. 1712, May 1. In an address to the general assembly, Gov. Hunter says: "I can never persuade My Selfe that you have any real pleasure in hearing the Capa Breton, and scholastic, with ye Government, and others who have just demands upon it. Whilst the remedy is so easy much in your power, and yet it seems strange that during the space of Two Years that I have had the Honour to be at the head of it in a very Active time and Consequence of great Expence, I have had not the means to carry it forward, for what Bills have been offer'd for that purpose have either been so deficient or Clog'd with Such Clauses and Circumstances as made it Impossible for the Councill to pass them forth without an apparent breach of her Majesties Instructions. ... And when they were as their duty amended them you have as often Resolved not to admit of such Amend'ts upon every ill grounded pretence that the Council had noe right to amend Money Bills I have Sufficient warrant to affirm that pretence to be ill grounded from this paragraph in the Lords Commissioners of Trades Letter to me of 15th of November Last In these words 'As to the Assemblys pretence that the Council Cannot Amend a Money Bill, It is Groundless and will not be allowed of here. The Council having an Equal Right with them in Granting of money there being nothing in her Majestys Commission to you under the Great Seal of the Kingdom to the Contrary, By Vertue of which Commission they only Sit as an Assembly and therefore you will do well To Acquaint them herewith that they see Longer Insist upon what is Soe Ilegounded.'——Jour. Leg. Coun., I: 332.

Nathaniel Britton, James Garrison, John Dove, and John Bellie petition the council for "a license to keep a ferry on Staten Island." On Nov. 23, a committee of the council reported in favour of granting the petition for a term of 30 years; confirmed, Nov. 27.—Col. Hist. MSS., Eng., 411. See April 2.

This and a number of subsequent items in the Addenda from this source, which has not hitherto been cited in this work, are contributed by Mr. Saml. Oppenheim of the late Expedition.

The last mention in the M. C. C. of the "Great Bridge" is in another item of this date: an order that Alderman Jansen "employ Labourers to Levell the Dunghills near the Great Bridge opposite the Custom house for the better filling up the Ground on the West Side of the Said Bridge."——M. C. C., III: 50.

1717, May 27. A warrant is issued for a patent to Hendrick Hendrickson of New Utrecht, in King's County, and Isaac Hansen of Richmond County, for a ferry from the landing place of the former on Long Island to that of the latter on Staten Island.—Col. Land Papers, 122.

1718, Oct. 9. at about this time Peter Cooper painted a view of Philadelphia. This is the first painting of the city. A reproduction, made from the original in the Library Company of Philadelphia, is found in Avery's Hist. of the U. S., III: 248-49. Gov. Hunter issues a proclamation of pardon to "every such Pyrate and Pyraste, who, pursuant to His Majesty's late Proclamation, have or hath Surrendered him or themselves" on or before Sept. 5, 1719.—From an original G. The later developments of the subject, to complete the partition line, show articles of agreement, dated April 29, 1725, between commissioners representing the two provinces (Col. Hist. Jacob Ten Eyck, "aged about fifteen years, son of Coenraet Ten Eyck," becomes a registered apprentice to Charles le Bous, the goldsmith. In this last case, the apprentice's agreement shows considerable variation from the usual form, inasmuch as the father undertakes to provide "apparel Lodging and washing in Summer time," and to pay the boy's expenses "to go to the winter Evening School."—Liber 29 of Conveyances (M.S.), in N. In this year, the earliest engraved plan of Boston was published. It was drawn by Capt. John Bonner and "Engraved and Printed by Fra. Dewing." The only copy of the earliest issue of this important plan, which corresponds to the Bradford Map of New York, is in the author's collection. See Winter, Mem. Hist. of Boston, II. It is probable in this year was drawn, by William Burgis, A View of the Great Town of Boston, taken from a Standing on Neddle-Island. This view is often referred to by the name of its publisher, William Price. See Pl. 15, Vol. I. The only known copy of this print, in the first state, is in the author's collection.

In this, the year of Lord Cornbury's death, was painted, it is said, his portrait in love-necked evening dress (see Man. Com. Curr., 1869, p. 762), which, it was asserted in 1867, hung in the portrait-gallery at Kensington, Eng.—Hist. Mag., 2d ser. (1867), II: 169. In a brief summary of original references regarding this peculiar foible of Cornbury, Brodhead states that, in 1868, the painting was in the possession of J. S. Peachington, M. P.—Ibid. (1868), III: 71-72. See Feb. 9, 1728.

In the case of the white servants, this means, of course, the sale of their time and services, under indenture of apprenticeship, to pay for their passage to America.—See, for example, April 20, 1732.

The negroes, on the other hand, were doubtless to be sold into slavery.

Gov. Cosby writes to the lords of trade: "I have very long desir'd laying before your Lordships the behaviour of a certain Member of his Majesty's Council, here, while I had the least hopes of his return to his duty, upon this prospect I have been [sic] born with many inconveniences his dangerous conduct still growing upon my patience till his Majestys Service and the safety of this Province demanded that I should explain this man to your Honble Board."

"Mr James Alexander is the person whose I have too much occasion to mention, at my first arrival I found that the late President Van Dam had employ'd him in the payment of the forces, and for that reason I shou'd him all the Civility in my power, but no sooner did Van Dam and the late chief Justice Morris (the later especially) begin to treat my Administration with rudeness and ill manners, then I found Alexander to be at the head of a scheme to give all imaginable uneasiness to the Govern[ments] by introducing into and making the worst impressions on the minds of the people, A Press supported by him and his party began to sway with the most virulent libels, Scurrilous and abusive pamphlets publish'd against the Ministry, and other persons of Great honour and quality in England were reviv'd and reprinted here, with such alterations as served to increase and enrage the people; as have been appointed by the Governor, the Council, the Assembly and all Magistrates in general, no man in his Majesty's Service tho' many had been ten and twenty years, in the same employments was sparrow'd. . . ."

"My Lord at this distance from England I am not able to trace the facts, but I am assured that this Alexander (some years since a teacher of navigation on board one of his Majesty's Ships) was turn'd away and dismissed from the Service for disaffection to the protestant Succession, and refusing the oath of Office, m., . . . . and now while I am writing, after the Council had ordered certain Seditious Elebs, tendering to open rebellion, to be hurst by the hands of the common Hangman, that the printer of them be committed to the Common Goal, and prosecuted by the Attorney Genel and a proclamation issued by their unanimous advice, . . . . with a reward of fifty pounds for the discovery of the Author of them, this man James Alexander has aper'd as the printers Council and Attorney for several successive days before the Chief Justice James De-Lancy Esq., . . . . for these reasons I intreat your Lordships to intercede with his Majesty that a Member of Council, whose behaviour has declar'd him to be in an interest the civilised nations in Europe to distinguish the different orders of Men in the Learned Professions by their Dress—and the judges in our Mother Country having from the most Early days been accustomed to appear at Westminster in Term time, in Robes and Bands and the Council in Bar Gowns and Bands; and that Example being already initiated in several of the British colonies—this Court conceiving that the practice at home stands upon good reasons and that the Introduction of the like usage in this province would advance the dignity, Authority, Solemnity and decorum of the Court and have many useful Consequences—and the Judges of this Court now Signifying their Intention to appear upon the hereby ordained that no person practicing as Council at the bar

Patrick Henry makes his famous speech in the Virginia house of burgesses against the stamp taxes. A French traveller (see Aug. 27), who chanced to visit the assembly on this date, writes in his journal: "Shortly after I came in one of the members stood up and said he had read that in former times tarquin and Julius had their Brutus, Charles had his Cromwell, and he Did Not Doubt but some good American would step up, in the same manner (as he) in a more moderate manner, and was going to Continue, when the speaker of the house rose and Said, he, the last that had stood up had spoke traison, and was sorry to see that not one of the members of the house was loyal Enough to stop him, before he had got a word in edgewise. The Speaker then looking up again (his name is hensery) and said that if he had alronted the speaker, or the house, he was ready to ask pardon, and he would shew his loyalty to his majesty King G. the third, at the Expense of the last Drops of his blood, but what he had said must be attributed to the Interest of his Country's Dying liberty, and the Sense of the passion might have lead him to have said something more than he intended, but, again, if he had said any thing wrong, he beged the speaker and the houses pardon. some members stood up and backed him, on which that saire was droped."—From "A French Traveller in the Colonies, 1765," in Am. There appears in Weyman's Gazette an advertisement of an unusual nature. It issues from "Johnson-Hall," under date of July 4, Sir William Johnson giving public notice "That in Consequense of the War last, with the British Forces in Susequehanna," he has in his custody 25 white captives, surrender'd to him by the Indians, whom he will be glad to deliver to "their Relations on Application." Most of the 25, whom he goes on to describe in the advertisement, have been in Indian captivity eight or ten years, and more so young as to not have a name, or if they have one, are of the names unknown. The list includes "A Girl of about 8 Years old, supposed to be taken near Minisink;" "Three Boys taken some years ago of about 8, 10, and 12," and two young women, "supposed to belong to New-Jersey," with "Two Children they had by Indians."—N.Y. A description of the city at this time appears in the journal of a French traveller, as yet unidentified: "Sandy hook, and the Southernmost point of long Island, form the Entrance of New York Bay. Dec. 15. Colden writes to Sir William Johnson: "I received your kind letter of the 9th and 15th of last month at a time I was so much engaged in public business that it was not in my power to answer it & since I retired I was under a necessity of writing to the Minority on the late transactions before I gave up the Government. You must believe I am very glad to be out of the way of the Malice of wicked men I found Sir Henry was resolved to make himself easy. How far he will succeed time must shew. He came away without any Impeachment. The Charms order in his Privy Council of the 23rd of July has renewed all the rage of the Party against me as appeals from a Verdict & Judgement are confirmed Theo' the Stamp Act was made use off to excite the Mob yet the directing it against me arose from the resentment of the men who think their power is abridged by establishment of the Pranks. I have as well as you, thought what effects these seditious transactions are like to produce in Great Britain. The Dependency or Independence of the Colonies seems now to be brought to the Crisis & it remains with the Parliament to give it the proper Issue whether the Parliament of Great Britain, the Lords or Privy Council or the Colonies to the Parliament." 30. Gov. Moore writes in a letter to a friend: "It would give me great satisfaction to have the power of restoring the Province to its former tranquility, which I am persuaded might easily be done, if there were no secret Abettors of these disorders, for those who really appear as the principal Actors, are not of consequence enough to be regarded, or able to carry any thing into execution, if they were not assured of being well supported."—From original letter in Enamet Collection, No. 2610.

In a letter to Secretary Conway, Gen. Gage says: "It is to be wished, that the Decency Submission & Moderation recommended to the People of the Colonies, with a view to the maintenance & propriety of which, every man of sense would acknowledge when recommended to him, had produced better effects. But the maxim laid down amongst them from the beginning was, that the clamor could not be too great, that the Spirit of the People could not be raised to too high a pitch; that by such means only they should obtain redress: these notions were so general, that the few moderate people amongst them were forced to silence, or gave offence by their advice. The wiser & better sort of people have certainly disapproved of the outrages that have been committed, tho' they have approved of clamor & noise. The whole have been united to oppose the execution of the Stamp Act, & to find means of COUNTER on business independent of it; I have kept within my sphere, not to interfere further than by advice, unless application was made to me by the Civil Power for assistance. . . . tho' I cannot entertain that confidence in the people of this place [New York] which His Majesty's Council had done in me, whatever my private opinion might have been, to acquiesce in their determination. Theo' I asked some, if they could pretend to foresee how the poison would operate which had been infused into the People: It's effects were seen in the tumults which happened in the beginning of November & a timely aid if it had been demanded would at least have prevented the threats of committing Acts of Rebellion which they were on the point of putting in execution, by an open assault upon the Fort. In such circumstances I thought myself justified in ordering by my own authority such Troops as could be sent & asked that they might have been sent.—Their aid has not been demanded & I am sorry to say, that I am well assured and satisfied, were there 5000 Troops in the City, that there is no part of the Civil Authority, the Government excepted who would have asked their assistance, to quell any of the RIots that have happened. With respect to the Magistrates of this City, did their inclination lead them to do their duty, they are entirely under the influence of the People. The Mayor tho' appointed by the Gov't & Council, is chosen Member of the general Assembly for the City, the rest of the Corporation chose yearly by the People & of course, if they wished advertisements of all descriptions were at hand for 24 hours: the Magistrates & better sort of people have constantly attended when the rioters assembled, & as far as Entreaties & persuasions would avail, have prevented them doing mischief. But tho' by these opportunities of seeing & knowing the Ringleaders, they might have apprehended them, tho' unawares meetings Assemblies have been advertised & held in open day-light on the commons within the City & at night in Tavorns, where desperate & seditious Resolutions have been past tho' the News- Writers continue spreading Sedition & Rebellion, no one person has been apprehended from the beginning of the disturbances. There is actually within the City above 150 men including Searets Corporals, Gunners &c of the Royal Regiment of Artillery, besides a company of the Royal American Regiment, & near 300 men more might march into the city if required, in ten days time. This may be judged a sufficient Force if properly employed, & joined by the Magistrates & better sort of people to put an end to the riots: But I apprehend they are afraid of making a division amongst themselves, in the point they all unite in: viz opposition to the Stamp Act, should they attempt to use force to restore tranquility; some afraid of the people & perhaps others may fear impeachments & repriecnces of having entertained them to Insurrections. Riots have not yet subsided . . . ."—Am. & Eng. Arch. (1766), 39-45, transcribed for Bancroft, and now preserved in the N. Y. Pub. Library.

Gen. Gage writes from New York to Secretary Conway "The Feb. 14th Office to the General here for delivering out Stamped Bonds with some Mediterranean Passes, & obliged to make a public acknowledgement of his fault & promise not to do the like again, at noon day, the Merchant who received the Bonds, was forced to perform the same ceremony and notwithstanding it was with difficulty their persons & properties were protected, by the better sort of people. A set of people who have associated themselves in many of the Provinces, under the appellation of the Liberty, continue their meetings, and correspond with each other, & publish their resolves in the Papers without reserve, amongst others they agree to oppose the Stamp Act, even to take the Field, at the risk of their Lives & Fortunes. There seems throughout the Provinces to be a dissolution of all laws, & all respect for the authority of the Crown. All coercive powers in Government are annulled, the people so accustomed to excess & riot without control, that it is to be feared it would not be an easy task to bring them back to their duty, should the wisdom of Parliament even think proper to remove the present cause of alarm, by a repeal of the Stamp Act. There has not however been any requisition made for my assistance but it becomes my duty when I see the King’s affairs in such a situation, to do everything which depends on me for the support of his service, & I must take my own resolution which is to draw all the force I can, & do as soon as it can be done, into these Provinces. I have opened myself on this head to Sir Henry Moore, who sees affairs in the same light, and he told me tho’ he could not procure the advice of his Council to demand in Form the aid of the King’s Commander in Chief, he privately asked my assistance. —Am. & Eng. Arch. (1766), vol. supra, 6th Aug. 26

"There has been some disturbance in this place between the People & the Soldiers. The latter were accused of cutting down a pole set up in an open Place near the Barracks; It appears upon enquiry that it was no general act of the soldiery, but there is reason to suspect some of them, as well as some of the People of the Town, were concerned in it. A mob assembled to erect the Pole again, and a Drummer passing, words ensued, they fell upon him & afterwards upon a corporal who came to his assistance & pursued both to the Barrack Gate, from whence twenty or more Soldiers followed above the mob a considerable distance. Some officers being near got up in time to force the Soldiers back to their Barracks tho’ in passing the mob some were hurt & the whole grossly abused. The Mob afterwards in presence of the Magistrates surrounded the Barracks and vented so much abuse & provoking language that some of the better sort of people who had assembled there did not think it possible that the Officers could command themselves, or restrain the fury of their men & pressed the Magistrates to support their own dignity & disperse the mob. The soldiers were however kept quiet & no mischief ensued, nor is there any person much hurt except the Corporal. The populace presented highly the check they had received, and it was thought that the Soldiers might be ordered out of the City; but finding that no person of consequence or reputation would sign it, they fixed up a paper inviting the people to drive them out by Force, but these were immediately pulled down. The meaning of these proceedings both of the populace and the soldiers was to assert power and authority they have so long usurped, to which they think the Soldiers may give some obstruction: the better sort tired of the anarchy & confusion which has so long prevailed want to have order restored & the Laws put in Force, which they judge the presence of the soldiers is necessary to bring about. The Magistrates see the necessity of checking the mutinous spirit in the People, but they depend so much upon them for their Elections into the Magistracy or General Assembly that they act with timidity & even suffer themselves to be insulted. It became necessary to take more than usual care of the behaviour of the Soldiers on this occasion, & such a readiness has been shown to deliver up every soldier guilty of committing disorders, to the Civil Power, or to punish them by Military Law, that the People seem disarmed of all complaints against them." —Am. & Eng. Archives (1766), op. cit, 477-82.

A petition signed by 227 merchants of New York is addressed Nov. 28 to the house of commons, stating: "That the Commerce of the North American Colonies is so severely clogged and restricted by the Statutes of the 45th and 65th of His present Majesty, as to afford a melancholy presage of its destruction, the fatal effects of which are felt felt which must finally be transferred to Great Britain, and centre with her merchants and manufacturers. An evil so extensive, could not fail of alarming your petitioners, whose Situation exposes them to the first impression of this calamity. They therefore think it their duty to implore this Honorable House, to resume the Consideration of the Plantation Trade. Fully Confiding in the impartiality, justice, and wisdom of his present Majesty, as well as the Parliament, and that the Welfare of every part of His Majesty’s dominions, for effectual redress. Your petitioners do therefore most humbly represent,

That it is the Singular disadvantage of the Northern British Colonies, that while they stand in need of vast quantities of the manufactures of Great Britain, the Country is productive of very little which affords a direct remittance thither in payment. From necessity therefore, the inhabitants have been driven to seek a market for their produce where it could be sold, and by a course of traffic to acquire either money or such merchandise as would answer the purpose. The case and circumstances of the Indians in the trade when free from the late restraints ought to be understood, the Petitioners beg leave to observe, that our produce then sent to our own and the foreign Islands, was chiefly bartered for Sugar, rum, molasses, cotton and indigo.—The Sugar, cotton and indigo served as remittance to Great Britain; but the rum and molasses constituted essential branches of our Commerce.

"Considering the prodigious consumption of West India produce in Great Britain, Ireland, and the continental Colonies, the rapid increase of these Colonies, their inhabitants already exceeding 277,000 Millions, the vast extent of subjects and trading places besides the innumerable tribes of Indians in the extensive Countries annexed to the British Crown, the utter incapacity of our own Islands to supply so great a demand, will your petitioners presume to be out of all question.—On the other hand the lumber produced from clearing this immense territory, and the provision extracted from a fertile soil, which most of the inhabitants are employed in cultivating, must raise a supply for exportation, with which the consumption of our own Islands can bear no sort of proportion. It seems therefore consistent with Sound policy to induce the Colonies in a free & unrestrained exportation of all the lumber & produce they raise and can spare and an ample importation of rum, and Molasses, to supply the various branches of their trade, to which they appear So necessary.

"Your Petitioners having thus represented the nature of their Commerce, now humbly beg leave to point out the Several grievances which it labors under from the Regulations prescribed by the two before mentioned Acts of Parliament.

The heavy embarrassments which attend the Article of Sugar is a Capital Subject of Complaint.

"Besides the absolute necessity of a great importation to sustain our Trade, it is a well known truth, that it often happens at the price of vast sums, that the present articles are sold at a much lower price, and where the Articles are produced, and the demand is considerable, at a sufficient Return Cargo independent of Sugar, cannot be procured, which alone must render Trade precarious and discouraging. But the high duty of 5s. sterling a hundred, is proved by experience to be excessive, and has induced the fair Trader to decline this branch of his business, which in its proper part is a necessary support to Navigation, and the growth of a thriving people less Scrupulous . . . The Petitioners therefore most humbly intreat that a moderate duty be laid on foreign Sugars, which they are assured would not only greatly conduce to the prosperity of these Colonies, and their utility to the Mother Country, but increase the Royal Revenue far beyond what can be expected under the present restraints.

"Compelling Merchants to land Store foreign Sugars in Great Britain before they Can be exported to other parts of Europe is another most Expensive and dilatory restriction, without being of any material advantage to the Revenue of Great Britain. . . .

"Foreign Rum, French excise, is the most heinous Article which your Petitioners most humbly propose for consideration; the importation thereof on a moderate duty would add Considerably to the Revenue, prevent Smuggling, promote our navigation, increase the rent of our own produce with British Manufactures, and enable us to bring back the full value of our cargoes.

"The exportation of Foreign Logwood to foreign Markets has already been distinguished as one of the principal means by which these Colonies have been enabled to sustain the weight of their debts for British Manufactures; . . . The low price of logwood, though the British=logwood, must totally destroy this valuable branch of our Commerce and throw it into the hands of foreigners, unfettered with these heavy embarrassments. . . .

The legislative council receives from the general assembly an act which it is asked to approve. The title is "An Act authorizing and empowering Abraham Lott to have recourse to and take out of the Secretary's Office of this Colony such ancient records as are written in the Dutch language." This bill is read the first time and ordered a second reading. Jour. Leg. Coun. 1668. We have no record that such permission was granted. Gov. John Wentworth, of New Hampshire, on returning home from a visit to William Paine in New York, received a letter of appreciation, acknowledging Bayard's hospitality in part as follows: "... Pray make my Compliments acceptable to Good Mr. Bayard and the two Young Ladies. ... I wish to God that I was not forced by this Dust Parade shew and Ceremony to Your Plantation at Greenwich remarking the pleasant views over to Hobbeck discovering new prospects examined by the various M's Bayard's Parterre (for you neither have share or property in plants further than Wheat and Lucern) or turning over the Music while Miss Bayard[s] Harpsichord and Voice calls all our pleas'd Attention from delightful Scenes to Better Harmony. But as this cannot be permitted let me propose the best Substitute on my side, That your Coach should bring you all to New Hamp[shire]."—From Wentworth Letters (MS. transcripts), in N. H. Hist. Soc., Concord. See also John Wentworth, by Lawrence S. Mayo.

"G. Duyckinck" (who kept a shop comparing the modern department-store) publishes an advertisement in ornamental borders (like the "display advertising" of to-day), beginning: "A fresh Importation at the Universal Store, or The Medley of Goods Sold by G. Duyckinck, at the Sign of the Looking Glass & Drugget Pot, at the Corner of the Old Slip Market, New-York ..." (followed by a long list of goods he selects to feature in this way).—N. Y. Hugh Gaine published the results of the vote for assemblies held between these dates, in a booklet hearing the title: A Copy of the Poll List, of the Election for Representatives for the City and County of New-York which election began On Monday the 3rd Day of January, and continued to the last Monday in February, 1769, for the choice of members of the House of Representatives for the coming Session of the General Assembly of the Province of New-York. The list by name practically the entire voting population of New York. The "Society of Cordwainers, in the City of New-York," resolves "not to eat any Lamb in their Families, till the first of August next." On the next day, the Sons of Liberty held a meeting at the Province Arms, and unanimously agreed to the same resolution.—N. Y. Jour., April 13, 1769. The object of this resolution was to further home manufactures by increasing the supply of wool.—Wilson, Mem. Hist. of N. Y., II: 400.

The facts that no earlier Constitution of the Sons of Liberty is known, that no organization is known having the title "United Sons of Liberty," that the house of M. De la Montague is mentioned as the meeting-place of the society, that the word "United," wherever used in the broadside, has been deleted in pencil, and that several additions are made in pencil, taken collectively, are pretty strong evidence that the broadside here reproduced (PL 39) was a proof copy of the proposed constitution, with amendments made at the meeting on Monday evening, July 10.

Hugh Gaine's marriage license bears this date. Issued by the "Prerogative Office" in New York, it is signed by Philip Livingston, Jr. for Gov. Moore, authorizing any Protestant minister of the Gospel to marry "Hugh Gaine ... Stationer & Cornelia Wallace ... widow."—From the original in the MSS. Div., N. Y. Pub. Library.

Regarding the number 47, David Grim relates the following incident: "During McDougall's confinement Forty Five Gentlemen Sons of Liberty (Wills Liberty and Forty five was the go then), they went in a procession, headed by Genl. Malcomb, to the Jail, and there congratulated him (McDougall) with a hearty shake by the hand for his good health, and his sufferings for the cause of Liberty. After having been regaled, with some of the good things of this World they returned in peace to their homes and their own business."

In the short time after Forty Five (Female) Sons of Liberty of this City, also paraded in a procession, two by two, and were led by Mr. Malcomb, [Genl. Malcombs] Lady this was the daughter...
The letter written on this date by Sears and McDouall apparently contains the first suggestion, made by a public body, for a continental congress, the significant words used being: "we have stimulated the merchants to appoint a meeting to morrow evening at 7 O'Clock to agree upon a general non-importation, and non-exportation Agreement of Goods, to and from Great Britain and Ireland, till the American grievances are redressed, under such Regulations as may be agreed upon by Committees from the principal towns on the continent, to meet in a general Congress to be held here for that purpose." The letter was signed only by McDouall and Sears, because there was "no time to send this to the other Members of the Committee." —From the original letter in the Bancroft collection in the N. Y. Pub. Library (see PI. 41 A., Vol. IV). The committee referred to was evidently the committee of correspondence chosen on Dec. 17, 1773 (q. v.), of which both Sears, and McDouall were members (see Dec. 18, 1773). The notice of June 6 (q. v.) can hardly be considered an official disclaimer.

The four views of the battle of Lexington, crudely drawn and engraved by Amos Doolittle in this year, and among the earliest and rarest of American historical prints, bear the following titles:

1. "The Battle of Lexington."
1775 2. "A view of the town of Concord, with the Ministerial Apr. troops destroying the stores."

19 3. "The Battle of North Bridge, in Concord."

20 4. "The South part of Lexington, where the first detachments were made by the Redcoats under Capt. Percy." —Stauffer, A. Engravers on Copper & Steel, I: 66-67. The N. Y. Pub. Library owns a complete set of these views.

The credentials given to the New York delegates to the continental congress empowered them "to meet the Delegates from the other Colonies and to confer and determine upon such measures as shall be judged most effectual for the preservation and re-establishment of American rights and privileges and for the restoration of harmony between Great Britain and the Colonies." —Fours. Prov. Cong., I: 4.

John Hancock, on his way to Philadelphia (where he was chosen president of congress on May 24), having arrived at New York on Saturday, May 6, thus writes from "New York, Sabbath Evening, May 7, 1775," to Miss Dorothy Quincy, addressing her "At the House of Thaddeus Burr, Esq. In Fairfield:"

"My Dear Dolly,

I arrived well, tho' Fatigu'd, at King's Bridge, at Fifty minutes after Two o'clock yesterday, where I found the Delegates of Massachusetts and Connectic with a number of Gentlemen from New York, and a Guard of the Troop. I Dined and then Set out in Procession for New York, the Carriage of your humble servant, of course being in the Procession. When we Arrived within three miles of the City we were met by the Grenadier Company and Regiment of the City Militia under Arms, Gentlemen in Carriages and on Horseback and many thousand of Persons on Foot; the Roads fill'd with people, and the greatest Cloud of Dust I ever saw. In this Situation we Ent'd the City, and passing thro' the Principal Streets of New York amidst the Acclamations of Thous- ands, we were Set Down at Mr. Francis's. After Entering the House, three Huzzars were Given, and the People by Degrees Dispersed. When I got within a mile of the City, my Carriage was Stopt, and Persons Approaching, with proper Huzzars insisted upon Taking out my Horses and Dragging me into and through the City, a Circumstance I would not have had taken Place upon any Consideration, not being fond of such Parade. I Beg'd and Intreated that they would suspend the Design, and ask'd it as a favour, and the Matter subsided, but when I got to the Entrance of the City and the Numbers of Spectators inceased'd to perhaps seven Thousand or more, they Declared they would have the Horses out, and would Drag me themselves, thro' the City. I repeated my Request, that they would so far oblige me as not to Insist. (In it.) They would not hear of it. I was obliged to Apply to the Leading Gentlemen in the procession to interfere with them not to carry their Designs into Execution, as it was very Disagreeable to me. They were at last prevailed upon, and I proceeded. . . . After having rode so fast and so many Miles you may well think I was much Fatigu'd, but no sooner had I got into the Rooms and the Huzzars were Weild by a great number of Gen- temen of the first Character in the City, which took up the Even- ing. . . . At 11 o'clock went to Capt. Sears's (the King here) and Lodged. . . . To morrow Morning, propose to Cross the Ferry. We are to have a large Guard in several Boats, and a number of the City Gentlemen will attend us over. I cant think they will dare to attack us. The Grenadier Company of the City is to Continue under Arms during our Stay here, and we have a Guard of them Night and Day at our Doors. This is a sad Mortification to the Tories. Things look well here. "—New Eng. Hist. & Gen. Mag., Nov. 36.

2. The military committee appointed by the provincial congress meets to determine the rank and command in the several regiments. As ordered by the provincial congress, the New York Regiment is named "the first or senior Regiment of the Troops raised in this Colony." Major McDougall is approved as its colonel, Rudolphus Ritzema as lieutenant-colonel, and Herman Wedzitz as major. The other regiments are to take rank in the following order: Col. Goose van Saarick's, second; Col. James Clinton's, third; Col. James Holmes's, fourth.—Col. Hist. MSS. (Rev. Papers), 1: 117.

22. The first provision of the Militia Bill, passed by the pro- vincial congress on this day, is as follows: "Resolved, That every county, city, manor, town, precinct and district within this Colony, (where the same is not already done,) be divided into districts or beats, by their respective committees, in such manner that out of each may be formed one military company, ordinarily to consist of about eighty-three able bodied and effective men, officers in- cluded, between sixteen and sixty years of age, (the battalion commanding by Col. William Smith, the companies of artillers, light-horse and dragoons, in the city and county of New York, and the troops of horse, companies of grenadiers, and associated companies already formed in the several cities and counties within this Colony, ex- cepted.)"

The manner of electing officers is defined. Col. Lasher's com- pany, now under the direction of field officers, shall in the future be commanded by captains, to be chosen in the manner defined.

It is further resolved "That for the purpose of completely carrying into execution the recommendation of the Continental Congress [of Aug. 3], after the whole militia is formed as above, every fourth man of each company be selected for minute men, of such persons as are willing to enter into this necessary service: . . ."

The several companies so formed, the bill provides, shall be "joined into regiments, each regiment to consist of not less than five nor more than ten companies, (the battalion commanded by Col. Lasher excepted;) also "That a major-general be appointed and commissioned by this Congress, to command the militia of the Colony of New York;" and "That the militia of this Colony be formed into brigades," the militia of the city and county of New York, and of the counties of Kings and Richmond, to constitute one of these brigades, and the militia of the other counties to be combined in a manner designated in the bill. There are thus de- fined a total of six brigades.

The bill further provides "That every man between the ages of sixteen and fifty, do, with all convenient speed, furnish himself with a good musket or firelock and bayonet, sword or tomahawk, a steel ramrod, worm, priming wire and brush, fitted thereto, a cartouch box, to contain twenty-three rounds of cartridges, twelve flints and a knapsack, agreeable to the directions of the Continental Congress, under the charge of their respective commanders, to the want of a musket or firelock, and of one shilling for the want of a bayonet, sword or tomahawk, cartridge box, cartridge or bullet; the whole to be judged of and determined by the captain, or next commanding officer." . . . That each company, (not minute men) do meet the first Monday in every month, and spend at least four hours in each of the said days to perfect themselves in military discipline . . . Regulations affecting the "companies of horse," their officers, equipment, etc., are given; fines and penalties are imposed for violators of orders; and the officials, etc., exempt from military service are listed.

. . . the minute men, when called out in defence of their country, shall be subject to the articles of war, established by the Continental Congress, and be entitled to the same allowance, as to pay and provisions, with the Continental forces; to be under the direction of the Commander-in-Chief of those forces." Then follow the regulations affecting the conduct of troops "in case of any alarm, invasion or insurrection." Every subaltern and soldier "is immediately to repair, properly armed and accoutred, to his colours or parade, (which parade shall be under- stood to be the habitation of his captain, unless otherwise ordered;) and the captain or commanding officer of the company nearest to the place where such invasion or insurrection shall be, shall immediately march his company to oppose the enemy, at the same time send off an express to the commanding officer of the regiment or brigade to which he belongs, who is to march with the whole or part of the militia under his command as he shall judge necessary, and use all possible diligence to prevent the enemy from landing or penetrating into any part of the country, and to quell every insurrection . . ." These provisions, further extended, close with a general one that the militia and minute men, when thus called out, "shall be subject to the same rules and orders as directed and ordered by the Continental Congress of the associ- ated Colonies, held at Philadelphia on the 10th day of May last for the better government of the Continental troops." —Jours. Prov. Cong., II: 114-16.

William Smith sends to Gen. Haldimand his opinions con- cerning "this unnatural Controversy, which if it lasts a few years may bring the British Empire to the Brink of Destruction." He says in part: Oct. 6
"That all these Petitions be expressed in Terms of Decency avoiding as much as possible everything that tends to irritate or offend in asserting the essential Rights and Privileges of his Majesty's American Subjects."

"That as often as Great Britain shall renew her Requisitions for the Contributions of the Colonies towards the general Defence it shall be lawful for them to hold Congresses for deliberating upon the Request and appo rtioning the Quotas to be raised by their several Legislatures.

"That they declare their Willingness to co-operate in forming a Body of Representatives from each Colony for this Purpose and that they are dispos'd most cheerfully to liberate their Trade and cultivate a perfect Reconciliation on the Removal of the grand Cause of Complaint for which they have taken up arms and the passing of a general Act of Obligation and Indemnity expressing their Readiness to place an intire Confidence in Parliament for Relief in all those other Instances which the Continental Congress may enable the Assemblies to point out as Grievances requiring a Redress for better promoting the Felicity of America and the Re Establishment of a compleat and permanent Harmony between all the Branches of the Empire"

Nathan Hale is commissioned as a captain by the continental congress. There is a photograph of his commission in the Emmet Collection, No. 6930, the original being owned, in 1914, by William A. Read of New York.—Johnston, Nathan Hale (1774), 192.

Smith writes: "Upon Advice that General Lee had left Boston and was raising Troops in Connecticut to possess and fortify New York" Lord Drummond requested me to urge the Congress here to prevent his Approach as it would embarrass the Captains & might end in the burning of the City and render the expected Negotiations abortive. I told him that I did not intermeddle in their Affairs nor seek their Confidence and that I disapproved more particularly of their Resolve that neither themselves nor the Assembly should declare upon any Terms of Peace nor even in a Way of Instruction to their Delegates at Philadelphia—He then desired me to send to the Town Hall for Col. McDougal who came upon a note— I introduced them to each other and Lord Drummond assured me that there were sound Prospects of an Accommodation—that he knew the Captains would as much as possible avoid Extremities. That they commissioners the Flight of the Inhabitants at this severe Season and that he wished the Committee of Safety would disip LEVELS by a Request to General Lee to desist from any Works to annoy the Ships and distress the Town. He spoke in general as to the Progress of Peace, and conceded much of what he had in several Interviews revealed to me. McDougal assumed a very consequential Tone at first... which Lord Drummond heard unmoved & did not exaggerate, upon which the other fell into a Calm and frankly said that Lee was at New Haven waiting for the levy of two Regiments & that the Committee of Safety had by Letter to him declared it to be dangerous to this Town to bring Troops into it—Lord Drummond declared that the Captains knew Peace would take Place soon and that Adm would not thank any servants of the Crown for irritating Men's Minds—That General Howe was also apprized of the amicable Designs of Government and that if Mischiefs caused he was persuaded the Fault would be our's."—Wm. Smith and four other council members dine with Gov. Tryon and discuss the current affairs in the colonies. Smith writes of this occasion: "After Dinner we had much Conversation & the Colonies were charged by Kempe & Skinner the two Attorney Generals with a fixed Resolution to set up an Independence. I grew warm in the Debates upon this Subject. I charged the Parliamentary Vote of the 20 Feb. with a studied Concealment of a Design to give up the Claim of taxing the Colonies as a great Fault on the Side of Administration dangerous to the general Interest of both Countries. Tryon who had not interfered before catch Fire at this and said he was sorry to hear an Officer of the Government say so. I turn'd my fire to the Constitution and insisted upon my Remarks. I appealed to himself whether the Minister had not informed him that the taxing Power was given up. To which he answered, Yes. I demanded the Evidence of it in any written explicit Declaration & he confessed that he would have declared the Surrender with more Liberality. Parker and Yandeput were present and the latter who sat by my Side declared that he if he believed the Colonies intend only upon an Exemption from Parliamentary Taxation he thought them on the right Side in the present Controversy and seemed pleased with the Resistance I made to the Intemperate Partialities of the two Attorney Generals, occasionally supported (tho' with good sense & more Decency) by Mr Paymaster Barrow.

The Train I took was a Defense of the continent from the Charge of aiming ab Initio at severing the Empire, admitting that the Congress had countenanced the Imputation in 1774 & faulting administration in listening to Misperceptions & concealing the ultimate Terms to which they would yield for preserving the Union & thro' the whole Debates I indulged now and then a little asperity at the Refuges to abide the Governor's Confidence in their suggestions. The Rest of the Council said Nothing but in the Boat after we had left the ship at night signified their approbation of the Part I had acted and bore patiently some censures for their silence."—Wm. Smith's Diary (M.S.), V.

Stephen Moylan, Washington's aide-de-camp, informs the Mar. 12 "Commanding Officer of the American Forces—New York" that the British are preparing to move from Boston, but if they do not leave, the general is "determined to force them to a Battle or make that Town, so hot, that they will have but little rest therein." Moylan adds: "His Excellency has good reason to imagine that New York will be the place of their destination, he therefore desires that You will exert Yourself to the utmost in preparing for their Reception, he has ordered the armed Schooners to be in readiness to attend their Motions & give the same the utmost of the Art of it, which in the event of a Resistance would have a decided number of the Course they steer by which Intelligence his Motions will be governed if they steer West, You may expect a large reinforcement from this Army, & in all probability the main body will soon follow. You will please to communicate this to the provincial Congress or Council & bring it before the General. You must not forget to cooperate with You in using every endeavour to prevent their forming a lodgment, before his Excellency can come or send to Your own Growth would ensure every Thing in future which we could reasonably desire.—That I believed the Continental Congress would not countenance the Extravagance of the Multitude nor wish so to reduce the British Authority as to leave the Minor Provinces exposed to the Control of New England & the other for-

The letter in the Chronology under this date purporting to have been written by William Smith, and describing to the British the approaches to New York and the best place to land, was republished by Smith in the Conn. Gaz. of Oct. 4. He there claimed that it was written by refugees in England, to bring about his downfall. June

William Smith writes in his memoirs "I now set down my 9 Thoughts as a Rule for my own Conduct at this melancholy Hour of approaching Distress." These "Thoughts" are extended over 121 pages, and served as the basis for a pamphlet published anonymously in Charleston, S. C., Sept. 30, 1780 (q.v.), and later (see Jan. 30, 1781) reprinted in New York. In connection with researches undertaken for the ICONOGRAPHY, it has been discovered that William Smith actually wrote the anonymous pamphlet (see Sept. 30, 1780). On one occasion when Smith was asked who the author was, he gave the evasive answer that "it was imputed in Charles Town to one Williams a lawyer."—Wm. Smith's Diary (M.S.), VII. An analysis of the contents of the Candid Retrospect appears in Vol. V, under date of Jan. 30, 1781.

28 A British fleet attacks the American fort on Sullivan's Island, and the regulars are decisively defeated by 435 provincials commanded by Col. Moultrie. Regarding the importance of this battle, Bancroft says: "It kept seven regiments away from New York for two months; . . . it dispelled throughout the South the dread of British superiority; it drove the loyalists into obscurity. To the other colonies it was a message of brotherhood and union from June South Carolina as a self-directing republic."—Bancroft, Hist. of U. S., IV: 313-411. This fort on Sullivan's Island, in Charleston harbour, built of palmetto-logs, was named Fort Moultrie, and, according to Lossing, was near the site of the later Fort Moultrie, which came into prominence in American annals in Dec., 1860.—Pictorial, Field-Book of the Civil War, I: 117.

The New York delegates in the continental congress write to July the provincial congress of New York: "The important Question of Independence was agitated yesterday in a Committee of the whole Congress and this Day will be finally determined in the House. We know the Line of our Conduct on this Occasion; we have your Instructions [see April 20, 1775, Addenda; and June 11, 1776, Chronology], and will faithfully pursue them. New Doubts and Difficulties however will arise should Independence be declared; and that it will not, we have not the least reason to expect. . . . What Part are we to act after this Event takes Place; every Act we join in may then be considered as in some Measure according to the Vote of Independence, and binding our Colony on that Score. . . . Our Situation is singular and delicate. No other Colony being similarly circumstanced with whom we can consult. We wish therefore for your earliest Advice and Instructions whether we are to consider our Colony bound by the Vote of the Majority in Favour of Independence and vote at large on such Questions as may arise in Consequence thereof or only concur in such Measures as may be absolutely necessary for the Common safety and defense of America exclusive of the Idea of Independence."—Burnett, Letters of Members of Cont. Cong. (1921), I: 524-25. The action taken by the New York provincial congress on July 9 (q.v.) was a sufficient answer to this letter.
